What can be said is that excess protein, whether from animal or vegetable sources, slows the flow of the subtle energy in the system and decreases our capacities as superconductors. It acts as a sludge to our body energy in general and specifically to the Kundalini energy. In fact, when the Kundalini energy becomes too intense for some individuals, the author often recommends eating lots of vegetarian protein, and rarely even meat, to slow it down. This mild dietary change has worked well for people, and is one way to regulate the flow of the Kundalini energy. The author first noticed this general sludge effect after he changed his diet to vegetarian in 1972. As the author's basement membranes cleared out of the toxic protein storage load, he began to sense when he was eating too many nuts and seeds to compensate for the supposedly low protein of a vegetarian diet. When overcompensating, he would feel toxic, acidic, sluggish, and it was harder to focus in meditation. Through self-experimentation, the author found the correct amount of protein intake to feel clear and energized. Over the years, as his basement membranes have cleared, he has slowly decreased his protein intake based on this feedback system. The point is that there are no rules. Through self-observation, as our spiritual practices and bodies change, it is possible to determine what our individual protein needs are. A low-protein intake is not the goal or even an idealization. To eat what helps us maximize the flow of energy in the body, the activity of Kundalini, and the experience of our God Communion is the purpose of an appropriate, moderate, low-protein diet.

Egyptian Ethnic Names and their Possible Mineral Correspondences

In my examinations of certain names associated with certain people of the ancient Nile Valley, I have noticed a pattern that may or may not prove to be instructive upon further investigation in our quest to better understand ancient Nile Valley history. Some of the names for major groups of people in the Nile Valley have names in the kiKami language that are a match phonetically and, more often than not, use the exact same glyphs. Not only that, there is usually a color correspondence as well. Please observe the three examples below:

NAME MEANING GRAMMATICAL FUNCTION GARDINER SIGN VALUES

RED

TmHw Libyans [noun] U33 - G17 - V28 - M17 - T14 - A1 - B1 - Z2

The TmHw are usually associated in Egyptian myth with the Dsrt and the deity of Set. This aspect of the myth may actually be talking about astronomical phenomena. As Obenga notes (2004: 351),

For the Manja people, the star system called SETO [Orion] (Set?) appears on the horizon in November, around 8pm. It is thus a dry season constellation.

Set is also associated with the dry drst of Libya and his color is Red. Im not sure if Set was ever associated with Orion or Orions belt (as is usually Asar), but more investigation is needed.

BLACK

kmt the Black Country, Egypt [noun - loc.] I6 - G17 - X1 - O49

The mineral mined is a black manganese ore. In the Egyptian myth, the Kmtjw are associated with Heru as his children. This myth may have a basis in reality. Anthony T. Browder (quoting John G. Jackson in Introduction to African Civilizations) observes that:

The Edfu text is an important source document on the early history of the Nile Valley. This famous inscription, found in the Temple of Horus at Edfu, gives an account of the origin of Egyptian civilization. According to this record, civilization was brought from the south by a band of invaders under the leadership of King Horus. (Browder 1992:44)

Diodorus Siculus supports the above story as well in Book III. As Charles S. Finch (2001:34) observes:

Thus to the dynastic Egyptians, smithing, that is to say iron-working, was a technique that was known in pre-dynastic times and was of such importance that it was associated with Horus himself. Since every pharaoh was considered the human manifestation of Horus, it seems evident that the archaic pharaohs must themselves have been smiths or connected to smithing.

Among the Bambara people of West Africa, there exist a priest class by the name of KOMO and they are BLACKSMITHS (see Amadou Hampate Bas essay The Living Tradition 1976:168). Here we have a consonantal match of KM in Bambara and Egyptian. Not only do we have a consonantal match, but we have a conceptual match as well, for KMT is represented by a charred piece of coal and charcoal is the item most associated with traditional Blacksmiths. Also, KOMO is not only the name of the priesthood, but the God of the priesthood. This is very interesting for us because Budge in his Hieroglyphic Vocabulary to the Book of the Dead pg 410 has an entry for KMT (meaning Egypt) with the God determinative. The god determinative is used not only to represent divinity, but the priests as well.

RED/YELLOW

sty ochre (red, yellow ?) [noun - min.] J32 - X1 - X1 - N33 - Z2

sty ochre (red, yellow ?) [noun - min.] J32 - X1 - Z4 - N33 - Z2

sty Nubia [noun - loc.] J32 - X1 - Z8

Although the word sty does not mean gold, often around the world the color yellow is associated with gold. Whats interesting about this possible correlation is that the god Set is also known as a bowman (Finch 2001:180). Ta-Seti is usually translated as land of the bow in relation to the Nubian archers.

The observant reader may also notice that the sty ochre is also RED: the same color associated with the god Set and the red Dsrt (Libya). Lybia and the Sudan are in close proximity to each other; and who knows where the exact borders were in ancient times. Anyone who has visited the Sudan will undoubtedly notice the red color of the sand and architectural structures. Set is supposed to be a deity from Libya imported into the Nile Valley. This may be important later on in this discussion.

CONCLUSION

What this seems to suggest is that color association in the ancient Nile Valley may be associated with occupations and/or the color of mineral material in the area in which the people reside. Whats interesting about the importation of Set into the Nile Valley pantheon of deities is that .

I have mentioned in previous conversations that in African societies, myths are a way to preserve actual history. From my personal dealings with African sacred societies and independent research into the lineages of kings in certain African groups, it is clear that certain stories are about migrations of people (as an ethnic group) into certain areas and not of a certain person. I know for a fact that Odudua (whose liturgical meaning is he of the black character (meaning invisibility think Amen of Egypt)) represents a people that migrated to Ile Ifa in ancient times. The Dogon people are not just a people who live in the Badiagara cliffs of West Africa. They are a priesthood that stretches a number of ethnic groups including the Garamatche and the Bambara.

Speaking of the Dogon, in relation to color association and occupations, they divide their towns in the same manner as in ancient Egypt (upper and lower) and each district is given a color to represent it. The upper region is given the color white and is associated with the agricultural trade. The lower region is given the association of Red and is associated with success in cattle herding.

This is very instructive as ancient Egypt was divided in the same way (upper/white lower/red) and may prove to be a deliberate practice which divided the empire by occupation. This would give us a better understanding of the union of the two lands as the working together of two major industries at the time. What's also interesting is that Asar was a king of Upper Egypt and all kings wear the WHITE crown of upper Egypt. It is well known that Asar is the deity of AGRICULTURE. Also, if consistent with Dogon culture, Ta-Seti or Nubia is known for its cattle with deformed horns. Old proto-Saharan rock art shows the proto-Saharans as cattle herders also with the deformed horns as in Nubia. It is understood that Libya was occupied by Black Africans in ancient times and they have migrated out as a result of the Sahara drying and because of Arab/Berber invasions. Many of the cattle herding groups are associated with the color red. The most famous being the Masai of Kenya.

What I provide as a hypothesis is that the names associated with the three major civilizations in North Africa probably was in association with the minerals found in the area first and later applied to the people as a whole (as we have done with the Nubians for they are known for the Gold in their area). I also provide as a hypothesis the notion that the stories in which Heru gave birth to the Kemites and Set gave birth to the Tmhw is a true story that speaks of migrations of people into a given area. I am working on a paper that will attempt to demonstrate the Zulu in early times as being the Horus kings who invaded and started Egyptian civilization.

There may be several naming conventions at play here and hopefully with more research we can get some clarity on the issues raised. What do you think?

Immediately after I sent off the previous response below, I received the following email regarding the foolishness of Hawass. He is the master of drama and misinformation.

MA

"Prof. Manu,

Hotep! I trust all is well and in order for your next trip to Kemet. I just saw the last half of the History Channel's "The Lost Pyramid." A Hawass show, it focus a destroyed pyramid built by Djedefre, son of Khufu, who murdered his brother and married his sister to gain the throne. He is said to have been buried in the Bent Pyramid. Any insight into this? Answer at your leisure, I know you are busy.

Subject: Re: Ancient fortress city unearthed in Egypt

Greetings... I would need to first read the detailed archaeological report once it is published to evaluate their findings. On the surface, the information is correct that during the Temple Age (New Kingdom) the "Ways of Heru" was a military road as a part of a defense system against Easterners, and to find a fortress in this eastern Delta region makes perfect sense. I trust what the Minister of Culture, Farouk Hosni, has announced thus far in their early excavations, but Zahi Hawass has also found a way to become a part of this excavation announcement. Anything Hawass says about new discoveries is automatically suspect because he is always looking for publicity.

<http://www.drhawass.com/blog/press-release-fortified-garrison-town-discovered-northeastern-delta>

I am leading another tour to Kemet in two weeks, but during my free time I will be focused on another project while I am in the Cairo area, so I will not have time to visit the Delta region or to look further into the recent discovery. I look forward to future announcements or publications regarding the Tell Dafna excavation project.

Advancing the work,

Manu Ampim

Udjahee,

Thanks for your insightful response professor Ampim. I was hoping that you would comment on the article and verify the authenticity of the remains and artifacts. This article peaked my interest because of Narmer and the significance of military.

Question(s):

On your next tour, do you plan to visit this particular site or are is it a restricted area being that it is a recent discovery?

Also, do you plan to do your own research regarding this discovery?

Thanks again for your insight.

Respectfully,

Dexter

There are also numerous artifacts (such as arrowheads, knives, and maceheads) excavated by Quibell, Green, Petrie, Emery, etc. from the predynastic period to the 2nd dynasty that support this evidence of military activity. Likewise, there are various palettes which depict this early military actions, such as the Warrior Palette, Bull Palette, Battlefield Palette, Narmer Palette, and the Gebel el-Arak knife.

The posted article on the new discovery indicates that Ramses II (19th dyn) erected a fortress in the Eastern Delta, and later Psammetichus I (26th dyn) established a garrison of foreign troops to defend this area.

military activity in the northern region under a unified Upper and Lower Kemet is when the 1st dynasty ruler Narmer established his capital city at Men-nefer ("Memphis"), which is the exact location of the joining of the Two Lands. The strategic importance of Men-nefer at the center of the Two Lands is indicated by one of the city's other names, Ankh-Tawy ("that which binds the Two Lands"). The other common name Ineb Hedj ("the White Walls"), suggests that Narmer established Men-nefer as a fortified city. The northern region (particularly the Eastern Delta) region continued to be an important military region in Kemet until the country was finally lost to foreigners.

Language|

A linear process of agglutination of single morphemes may reveal method for determining meaning in African languages.pdf

Greetings Phamily

Here are some recent thoughts I put into article form for the forum to critique. It is an attachment in pdf form so you must have Adobe Acrobat Reader to view it. Here is the abstract below.

Abstract

This paper presents a unique way for establishing a better understanding of the meaning of words in various African languages that adhere to the agglutinative process of combining single morphemes to create a larger word. The general understanding of words that are the result of agglutination is that the meaning of these terms are ascertained by a simple combining of two or more morphemes (i.e. indoors = [within] + [doors]). What I posit in this paper is that in African languages, the rendering of the meaning of words is a bit more complex. By reexamining some lexical items from the Niger-Congo super phylum of languages and their agglutinative properties, we can establish a framework that allows us to better understand the process in which the early architects of African languages used to better communicate ideas. This paper also seeks to establish the agglutinative properties of the ancient iKam (Egyptian) language by comparing our Niger-Congo (Negro-African / per Obenga) lexical items with cognates in kiKam.

The isotopic analysis of a bone from one of the earliest modern humans in Asia, the 40,000 year old skeleton from Tianyuan Cave in the Zhoukoudian region of China (near Beijing), by an international team of researchers from the Max Planck Institute for Evolutionary Anthropology in Leipzig, the Graduate University of Chinese Academy of Sciences and the Institute of Vertebrate Paleontology and Paleoanthropology in Beijing, the University of British Columbia in Vancouver and Washington University in Saint Louis has shown that this individual was a regular fish consumer (PNAS, 07.07.2009).

Freshwater fish are a major part of the diet of many peoples around the world, but it has been unclear when fish became a significant part of the year-round diet for early humans. Chemical analysis of the protein collagen, using ratios of the isotopes of nitrogen and sulphur in particular, can show whether such fish consumption was an occasional treat or part of the staple diet.

The isotopic analysis of the diet of one of the earliest modern humans in Asia, the 40,000 year old skeleton from Tianyuan Cave near Beijing, has shown that at least this individual was a regular fish consumer. Michael Richards of the Max Planck Institute for Evolutionary Anthropology explains "Carbon and nitrogen isotope analysis of the human and associated faunal remains indicate a diet high in animal protein, and the high nitrogen isotope values suggest the consumption of freshwater fish." To confirm this inference the researchers measured the sulphur isotope values of terrestrial and freshwater animals around the Zhoukoudian area and of the Tianyuan human.

Since fish appeared on the menu of modern humans before consistent evidence for effective fishing gear appeared, fishing at this level must have involved considerable effort. This shift to more fish in the diet likely reflects greater pressure from an expanding population at the time of modern human emergence across Eurasia. "This analysis provides the first direct evidence for the consumption of aquatic resources by early modern humans in China and has implications for early modern human subsistence and demography", says Richards.

Dear Neighbour 20th July 2009

From Talking to Tasking, the Greening of Nairobi East; A KCDN Initiative

On 5th September 2009, we will be cleaning the Komarock Canal and we want to invite your participation and support.

We have invited the Minister for Environment and Mineral Resources to come and be our guest on this day. He will be accompanied by Prof Wangare Maathai and we want to all talk environment on this day.

Together with the children and the youth, we will each plant a tree at home and along the Canal. Then it will become our responsibility to water these trees and help make Komarock Green and beautiful.

I want to believe that we all like a clean environment. So, let us join hands, all of us, and make Komarock Canal clean. Then we will all guard her cleanliness. It must be our responsibility to ensure the Canal remains clean and that no one dumps garbage there again.

We will all converge at KCDN offices at Komarock Phase 2 at the shopping centre for the Ministerial address at 8am before we move to our various designations at the Canal.

We need seedlings and equipment and those who can be of support, can get in touch with the undersigned.

You are all invited to share with us in this effort. Come prepared to soil your hands and clothes.

Yours faithfully,

Odhiambo T Oketch

CEO KCDN Nairobi.

At KCDN, we are saddened by the lose of life in the accident that took place yesterday at on the Narok - Mai Mahiu road. 22 people lost their lives.

These are parents who have now left their children orphans. The result is that many more children are joining the already large number of children in need. We are also saddened tl children also lost their lives in this accident. These were people with potential in future.

We condole with all those who have been bereaved.

But then, we want to pause and do a reality check on ourselves, our roles in helping out. \ segmented our analysis of the situation into 7 segments;

1) Traffic Police; In our view, the traffic police have lost it. They are tasked with managi traffic in Kenya , but the sad reality is that most of them do not know the traffic rules. I w stopped by a traffic police officer who was accusing me of an offense I had not committe put him to reason and asked him which rules he was enforcing. He shied away and waved

A cursory look at the mess at Ambassador and Kencom stages will show you that the traf police are rudderless. They seem not to know what they ought to do with the mini bus dri that mess that area.

At KCDN we believe that the Police Commissioner ought to do a reality check on this unit, reshuffle the whole lot and insist that the law must be obeyed. Any officer caught in the act of receiving bribe at the expenses of traffic management must be sacked on the spot, taken to court and charged accordingly.

The department bears the highest guilt since they are the arm of law mandated to instill discipline and ensure compliance on the road users. The Police Commissioner should make these changes with speed for the sake of our children.

21 The Judiciary; When the traffic police make arrests on the various traffic offenses and bring the same to court, some Magistrate mete out sentences that do not deter offenders. In fact, some offenders go out boasting that they do not mind being arrested for traffic offenses because they will bail themselves out without any sweat.

To save the Kenyan child from more anguish, we believe at KCDN that the Chief Justice should give instructions to his staff to mete out sentences that will deter more traffic offenses. He should do this for the sake of our children.

3; Parliament; Our Members of Parliament have been a very big let down. When they are looking for votes, they are very available and they drink with us, eat with us and sleep with our lot. The moment they are voted in, they move out of the community and stay away. They change their phone numbers and become perpetually out of reach.

When we need them most, like at such times, they are not there. We only see them when they regroup to defend their own who have been implicated in scandals and when they vote to entrench impunity. They should look at our laws again and legislate tougher penalties for traffic offenses. They should do this for the future of our children if not for us.

41 The Minister; We can now all agree that there is a big difference between being John Michuki and being Ali Makwere. One is a performer and the other is a dreamer. Whenever there is a serious traffic offense, Makwere talks as if nothing has happened.

When a bus killed several people last time along Mombasa Road, Makwere said that he was also PSV operator and as such, he understood the plight of bus owners. Yesterday, he said that drivers licenses will be re issued with new security marks that will make forging one difficult. When? Next year!

For the sake of our children, President Kibaki should sack this lethargic minister. He does not know what he is doing at the ministry. He is living in cloud nine as more Kenyans are being killed on our roads.

51 Road Construction; I have always wondered why we build very narrow roads. Before a road is designed, I bet we have standard procedures that inform road design and construction. In Tanzania and Uganda, the roads are very wide and straight. When you drive, you can see far and wide. In Kenya , the roads are narrow and windy. The edges of most roads are also hanging to an extent that if there is a problem, either way you are dying. If you veer off, you roll. If you go straight, you crash.

For the sake of our children, can we have standard designs for road construction?

6| Professionals; As we apportion blames, I want to believe that the people who bear the second highest guilt must be the professionals who design and build our roads. They stand charged with mass murder of fellow human beings. Many people have died on our roads simply because the professionals accepted bribes so that they compromise on standards.

For the sake of our children, can the professionals come back to professional ethics and enforce standard as they do their work. Can they stop accepting and giving out bribes.

7| The Donors; Most of our roads have been funded by donor money. Can most donors look at us in the eye and say yes, some nice work has been done with our taxes? The donors stand accused for dereliction of duty and of abetting crime against Kenyans. They pass shoddy jobs and approve payments even as parts of the same roads start peeling off even before the payments are made.

For the sake of our children who are being made orphans by these senseless deaths on our roads, can the donor community put their feet down and ensure that the roads that they fund are made to the same standards they make their roads out there?

The Kenyan child mourns the deaths on our roads; deaths which could have been avoided if everyone of us lived his part honestly.

CEO KCDN Nairobi.

Has anyone produced regular correspondences between Proto-Bantu and Egyptian in the same way that I can show them between Proto-Bantu and Niger-Congo languages at will? If the answer to both is no then using the ki- prefix to refer to Egyptian is misleading at best.

There seems to be a tendency to Bantuiise Egyptian in a number of posts. Let us do so with evidence and not by forcing Bantuisms into Egyptian.

Greetings Phamily

Here are some recent thoughts I put into article form for the forum to critique. It is an attachment in pdf form so you must have Adobe Acrobat Reader to view it. Here is the abstract below.

Abstract

This paper presents a unique way for establishing a better understanding of the meaning of words in various African languages that adhere to the agglutinative process of combining single morphemes to create a larger word. The general understanding of words that are the result of agglutination is that the meaning of these terms are ascertained by a simple combining of two or more morphemes (i.e. indoors = [within] + [doors]). What I posit in this paper is that in African languages, the rendering of the meaning of words is a bit more complex. By reexamining some lexical items from the Niger-Congo super phylum of languages and their agglutinative properties, we can establish a framework that allows us to better understand the process in which the early architects of African languages used to better communicate ideas. This paper also seeks to establish the agglutinative properties of the ancient iKam (Egyptian) language by comparing our Niger-Congo (Negro-African / per Obenga) lexical items with cognates in kiKam.

RAJASTHAN, INDIA, July 19, 2009: The movement to bring Dalits into the priesthood is gaining steam in India. Following the lead of the Tirupati Devasthanams (TDD), The Jagadguru Ramanandacharya Rajasthan Sanskrit University is setting out to train Dalits as priests.

Last year, Tamil Nadus state-run priesthood training institute graduated 207 priests, including 76 OBCs and 34 Dalits. They are now getting inducted into some of the 36,000 temples run by the government, under a 69% job quota for backward castes Dalit priests. This came as part of the DMK governments 2006 order that all qualified Hindus, regardless of caste, would be allowed to become priests.

Rajasthans new priesthood training is a one-year diploma program. Pundit Yugal Sharma, the vice chancellor, says: Admissions are on and classes start next month. The only prerequisite is clearing the senior higher secondary exams. The university will turn out at least 50 qualified priests per year.

Sociologist Shiv Visvanathan sees reason for concern in the transition of priesthood training from gurukul to universities. It looks progressive, but how it affects the sense of sacredness and morality of the priesthood is to be seen.

Greetings everyone

This is part II to the first essay I sent two days ago in defense of the process of agglutination to make words in ancient Egyptian. This essay is in response to brother Gore's comments on the abstract. I hope this will invite more critique and a critical analysis on the themes expressed in the paper.

No safe haven for Ugandan girls?

KAMPALA, Uganda (IPS/GIN) - A year ago, a mother in Kashari County took the law into her own hands and castrated a man she caught raping her seven-year-old daughter.

Malita Kyomugisha returned from her farm and found her neighbor Tito Mugarura sexually assaulting her youngest daughter behind her house in Rugyerera village.

I think he deserved it then and I would do it to him today if I found him, Ms. Kyomugisha said.

When I reached the bush behind my house, I could not believe my eyes when I saw that old man on top of my youngest child. I was lucky that he was still naked. I used the knife I had in my garden basket to cut off his organ, she said.

So the girls are not safe at home, on the way or at schools. At home, the young men and uncles will defile them, on the way the so-called sugar daddies will defile them; you take them to school the teachers defile and impregnate them.

Beatrice Anywar

The story was widely reported in the media, and many children's and women's rights activists, including Uganda's former ethics and integrity minister, Miria Matembe, applauded Ms. Kyomugisha's action. Ms. Matembe had gained notoriety for agitating that men who rape minors be castrated as a deterrent.

Child abuse is rampant in Uganda. In the war-affected north, soldiers and rebels alike have been responsible for numerous rapes. But even where conflict cannot be blamed for destroying the social fabric, girls are vulnerable to assault by their relatives at home and by teachers at school.

While defilement as rape of a minor is known under Ugandan law carries a maximum sentence of death, this punishment has never been meted out to anyone convicted of the offence, although many are serving jail sentences.

Beatrice Anywar, a Member of Parliament representing Kitgum District in Northern Uganda told IPS, The male teachers are supposed to be the custodians of girls but they are the very people defiling and impregnating these young girls.

So the girls are not safe at home, on the way or at schools. At home, the young men and uncles will defile them, on the way the so-called sugar daddies will defile them; you take them to school the teachers defile and impregnate them.

In early April a primary school teacher, John Bosco Sempijja, was convicted and sentenced to a seven-year jail term after he pleaded guilty to having sex with two of his pupils, aged 12 and 13. Another 34-year-old man was sentenced to 10 years in June for defiling a five-year-old and infecting her with venereal diseases.

among organizations critical of these convictions, saying the sentences are not sufficient deterrent.

A survey funded by World Bank in 2008 indicated that about one in every 25 girls ages 12 to 17 had been sexually assaulted by their teachers; put differently, 43,000 girls in primary schools were found to have been raped.

Ten percent of the girls surveyed, in 380 schools in 17 districts in Uganda, admitted to being involved in sexual relationships. Roughly 40 percent of these sexual liaisons were with teachers.

Teachers lure girls into sex by promising gifts and good marks in class. Even without the enticements, girls fear the likely consequences if they refuse to yield to sexual advances by teachers.

Pregnancy has a major impact on the numbers of girls who drop out of school. As abortion is illegal in Uganda, many girls are forced to carry pregnancies arising from rape to term; there are no provisions to accommodate young mothers in school, and many drop out with important consequences on their future.

Education of women and girls is closely related to greater decision-making power over finances and reproductive health issues like condom use or seeking treatment for sexually-transmitted diseases.

Ugandan education minister Geraldine Namirembe Bitamazire told IPS, We don't tolerate teachers who defile pupils. Where they are discovered we have referred the matter to police and some have been convicted. Many have been dismissed from service because a teacher by our code of conduct is not supposed to have sexual relationship with the pupils.

But some of the teachers dismissed from government schools simply change districts or seek employment in private schools because there is no system to trace abusers.

Alice Alaso, Member of Parliament from the Soroti municipality in eastern Uganda, said the problem should have been eliminated because the country has good laws in place.

The problem is implementation at the grassroots. You find local councils who should not be attending to cases of defilement calling (local council) courts and sitting to adjudicate on these matters, Ms. Alaso said.

There is also a problem with our police. Our police have become corrupted, some of them, because they cover up these matters. So when a defiler is arrested, you find bribery and settling out of court; you find bribery and no arrests are being made, she said.

Ms. Alaso decried the attitude of parents for contributing to maintaining high levels of sexual abuse.

No defiler would want to appear before court (threatened with) serving 15 years for aggravated defilement or life imprisonment. But because the implementation has been shoddy and the implementers have been irresponsible, defilement continues to be on the rampage, she lamented.

In January 2009, the charge of grievous bodily harm against Malita Kyomugisha was dropped when the complainant did not appear in court.

Sources of information about Hyksos IN EGYPT

Not looking for information I can find on web pages, but I am looking for the original sources that all books/web pages on Hyksos are based on.

From all I have read it appears that the Hyksos were not people from Canaan, but their turf was centered in ancient Iraq? Any way, I am only interested in the Hyksos in Egypt accounts

1) Josephus ... NONE of the text of this writer exists. He was supposed to have gotten his information from Manetho

2) Manetho ... NONE of the text of this writer exists. He was supposed to have lived in the time of the Romans... centuries after the Hyksos were driven out of Egypt, so if he ever wrote any thing it would had to have been from centuries old hearsay.

Josephus/Manetho supposed writing was in Latin not hieroglyphics and accounts centuries after the facts

3) The Turin King List.

Bernadino Drovetti "Found this papyrus"... when looking further, I read that he purchased it from an unknown supplier.. The parts about the Hyksos were written on the back of a tax letter.

This author was supposed to have created the king's list around the time of Ramses 2, which would mean this author would have written his account about 350 years after the Hyksos had been driven out.

4) Sakir-Har is attested by only a single door jamb from Avaris

I would like to see an image of this door jamb and the whole context.

Sources of Hyksos accounts so far: Josephus, Manetho, The Turin King List, door jamb from Avaris

Does any one know of any other sources about Hyksos that came from ancient Egypt?

6) Avaris = RAMESES ??? A city of Egypt mentioned with Pithom, where the Hebrews were afflicted with heavy burdens (Ex. 1:11; 12:37; Nu. 33:3). This was the famous E-Delta residence of Rameses II.

From the coordinance on my bible map program and multiple web maps, it appears that the city called Avaris and Rameses is the same place?

7) Does any one have a list of Hyksos kings that were supposed to have ruled Egypt?

Thanks

Subject: [Ta_Seti] Reexamining Agglutination in the Egyptian Language [1 Attachment]

Greetings Phamily

Here are some recent thoughts I put into article form for the forum to critique. It is an attachment in pdf form so you must have Adobe Acrobat Reader to view it. Here is the abstract below.

Abstract

This paper presents a unique way for establishing a better understanding of the meaning of words in various African languages that adhere to the agglutinative process of combining single morphemes to create a larger word. The general understanding of words that are the result of agglutination is that the meaning of these terms are ascertained by a simple combining of two or more morphemes (i.e. indoors = [within] + [doors]). What I posit in this paper is that in African languages, the rendering of the meaning of words is a bit more complex. By reexamining some lexical items from the Niger-Congo super phylum of languages and their agglutinative properties, we can establish a framework that allows us to better understand the process in which the early architects of African languages used to better communicate ideas. This paper also seeks to establish the agglutinative properties of the ancient iKami (Egyptian) language by comparing our Niger-Congo (Negro-African / per Obenga) lexical items with cognates in kiKami.

Dear Neighbour 20th July 2009

From Talking to Tasking, the Greening of Nairobi East; A KCDN Initiative

On 5th September 2009, we will be cleaning the Komarock Canal and we want to invite you participation and support.

We have invited the Minister for Environment and Mineral Resources to come and be our guest on this day. He will be accompanied by Prof Wangare Maathai and we want to all talk environment on this day.

Together with the children and the youth, we will each plant a tree at home and along the Canal. Then it will become our responsibility to water these trees and help make Komarock Green beautiful.

I want to believe that we all like a clean environment. So, let us join hands, all of us, and make the Komarock Canal clean. Then we will all guard her cleanliness. It must be our responsibility to ensure the Canal remains clean and that no one dumps garbage there again.

We will all converge at KCDN offices at Komarock Phase 2 at the shopping centre for the Ministerial address at 8am before we move to our various designations at the Canal.

We need seedlings and equipment and those who can be of support, can get in touch with me undersigned.

You are all invited to share with us in this effort. Come prepared to soil your hands and clean.

Yours faithfully,

Odhiambo T Oketch

CEO KCDN Nairobi.

Hutuapo Asar!.

I really enjoyed reading your well thought-out analysis on KMT agglutination. Your analysis of MUNTU has increased our conceptual understanding of the word. There were some original ideas which were new to me.

A little addition on the morpheme MU. In Kiswahili-Bantu MU is equivalent to M and means, you(plural), him, it (animal), it (some place inside). This is also equivalent to MO, inside, in the house. Thus MO relates to the house, in particular to a woman's house and family, lineage or kin-group. MO-TO refers to a person and indirectly includes the hidden concept of the woman and the family group. Not many people know this.

A better way of saying the word for a foreigner 'genibatu' would be u-genibatu, giving the meaning people from a foreign region, people who are strangers.

Also you give MANA for 'there is not'. This word translates in Kiswahili-Bantu as AMUNA, or HAMUNA. The initial HA, means not, becomes A and is usually dropped to give AMUNA, which means 'there is not inside, no'. Could this be the word for AMUN?....AMUNA. I've been toying around with this idea for a while.

This is my second email to you. The first one disappeared into thin air. I don't know where it got to!

I shall reread your analysis and absorb the rest of what you have said. As you said this is an ongoing exploration.

PS. I am preparing some new stuff which I am actively writing up. Hence the silence!

Somo

Following our appeal for partnership in From Talking to Tasking, we are happy to report Otieno Sungu in Southern Sudan has written to us and he has said he will buy 100 seedlings the day. Besides, he will be personally present to help clean the Komarock Canal.

We want to really thank him for this and at the same time make an appeal to more Kenya Friends of KCDN to step forward and become our partners in this. It is our turn to move From Talking to Tasking and together, let us help clean the Nairobi River.

Besides the seedlings, we need logistical support to effectively mobilize as many people to participate.

Let us own the process. Let us make environmental conservation our own initiative as a project. KCDN is just a vehicle through which you can reach out and help.

And the counting begins;

- 1] Mr. Otieno Sungu Kshs 2,000.00= 100 seedlings.

Dear Neighbour 20th July 2009

From Talking to Tasking, the Greening of Nairobi East; A KCDN Initiative

On 5th September 2009, we will be cleaning the Komarock Canal and we want to invite your participation and support.

We have invited the Minister for Environment and Mineral Resources to come and be our guest on this day. He will be accompanied by Prof Wangare Maathai and we want to all talk about the environment on this day.

Together with the children and the youth, we will each plant a tree at home and along the Canal. Then it will become our responsibility to water these trees and help make Komarock Green and beautiful.

I want to believe that we all like a clean environment. So, let us join hands, all of us, and make the Komarock Canal clean. Then we will all guard her cleanliness. It must be our responsibility to ensure the Canal remains clean and that no one dumps garbage there again.

We will all converge at KCDN offices at Komarock Phase 2 at the shopping centre for the Ministerial address at 8am before we move to our various designations at the Canal.

We need seedlings and equipment and those who can be of support, can get in touch with the undersigned.

You are all invited to share with us in this effort. Come prepared to soil your hands and clean up.

Yours faithfully,

Odhiambo T Oketch

CEO KCDN Nairobi.

Kmt, Kamit, Kemet, Chem - all gets us to the same place.

Axum - Timbuktu - Zimbabwe

We are all manufacturers some make good, others make trouble and still others make excuses.

1) Mystery Schools and Secret Societies The Egyptian Mystery Systems were the first Secret Orders of History. Publication of their teachings were/are strictly prohibited. Egypt was the world center of ancient wisdom and knowledge through its student initiates, religion, philosophy and science spread to other lands. By the sixth century A. D. the Egyptian Mysteries had become the Ancient World Religion spreading throughout the Roman Empire including Italy, Greece, Asia Minor and various parts of Europe including Brittany during the Moorish occupation of the Iberian Peninsula: Spain, Portugal and portions of Southern France.[1] The Roman Emperor Justinian[2] in the sixth century abolished the Mystery System and closed the Temples and Schools (Egyptian Universities) ; which stood in the way of Christianity becoming the state religion of the Roman Empire .[3] Egyptian Memphite Theology is the source of modern scientific knowledge and belief. The gods of order and arrangement in the Cosmos are represented by the nine gods in the Godhead called the Egyptian Ennead[4]. The higher metaphysical doctrines of these Mysteries could not be comprehended by Eurasians; the spiritual powers of the African priests were unsurpassed; the rites and magic of the ceremonies filled the people with awe; Egypt was the Holy Land of the Ancient World. This lofty cultural system of the Blacks filled Rome with envy, consequently Rome legalized Christianity which she had persecuted for five centuries, setting it up as the state religion to rival the African Mysteries; Christianitys mother[5]. Because we now have the actual words of Ancient Africa available to us today, we can now better understand the hysterical attack of Roman politicians and some of the early Christian Church fathers who ordered the closing of the Ancient Egyptian Universities or Mystery System, the worlds original system of higher education. Clearly the restoration of these writings destroys forever the myths about Africa that were created by greedy colonizers to justify their wanton destruction of African cultural competitors, the capture of their national wealth and the theft of their intellectual legacy[6]. The work of future scholars and scientists is the continued restoration of the greatness that is Ancient Africa and a profound understanding of the Mysteries.

2) Western Religions, Asian Beliefs & Oriental Philosophy One of the first attacks on the Africans by the Eurasians was he laughed at African philosophy: ethics, religions and spirituality. Then the Eurasian got you to laugh with him. Eurasians proclaimed that the African had nothing worthy of the title philosophy: ethics, religions or spirituality. Eurasian systems of education teach that the foundation of western culture is based upon its Greek then Roman origins; Greco-Roman. The book Stolen Legacy by Professor George G. M. James, as well as many other sources, informs us that there is no Greco-Roman philosophy only stolen African philosophy. When we look up the words culture, philosophy, theology, God and psychology in an encyclopedia we learn some fantastic things. During the last decades of the twentieth century thousands of Africans dropped their western Christian names and adopted Moslem (or Muslim) - Arabic names. In effect exchanging one slave owning god for another. Although your name is very important; the color of your god and the language he speaks is critical to your reality. If one is to go to the trouble of exchanging names, chose an African name not a Moslem-Arabic or Oriental name. Arab-Arabic is not African it is Asian. Adoption of, Judaism, Buddhism, Hinduism, Marxism or Confucianism is as contradictory to Continental African and Diasporan Afrocentricity as Christianity and Islam has been for Africans on the Continent and abroad. All religions rise out of the deification[7] of someones nationality (nationalism) and race[8]. Understand this and you will begin to discern[9] the keys to our own liberating victory. Afrocentricity recognizes and appreciates that all religions have a transforming power. It's no secret, in fact; it is predictable that there should be transforming and energizing forces present in all religions. All religions center in and around certain assumptions & suppositions: something taken for granted or accepted as truth without proof; a supposition: a valid assumption. Every religion has defining characteristics. Many times the assumptions, suppositions & defining characteristics are very obvious and identifiable. However, due to the nationalistic racial aspects of all religions, many of the assumptions, suppositions & defining characteristics are not obvious at all, but subliminal:[10] stimulating behavior patterns below the level of conscious awareness; manipulating reality. Western religions, Asian beliefs or Oriental philosophy have no distinction from Yoruba, Asante, Wolof, Ewe, Nuba or any other traditional African religion or philosophy in some respects, except of course, in the specific history and nationalism which is deified. The questions that must be answered are: How has the chosen religion been deified for its adherents and the world? What are its assumptions and parameters? Whose nationalism and culture does it hold up high as holy? How is a particular religion traditionally historically spread? Is it spread by lies, deceit and the force of might or the power of its truths? Religion contains the basic-basics - behavior patterns, primary values, morals and culture of a particular nationality or race; religion transmits culture. With this said, an easy conclusion is possible. If religions transmit nationality, if a particular religion has its basic-basics founded within a specific historical cultural-racial context, what effect does this have on the individual identity of the adherent? What belief system can cause a person to set fire to himself in religious protest? What belief system can cause a person to commit suicide or murder as a terrorist or colonizer / imperialist? What belief system can cause a people to be so confused, backwards and separated from their own true self that they hate each other, kill each other, sabotage each other and can not identify with each other, can not cooperate and work together for mutual survival. Only an alien religion directed against the real self can accomplish subliminal seduction of this depth and magnitude. Literally, to have faith in a religion that does not place your race, history, culture and natural belief system(s) at the center of its assumptions, suppositions and basic-basics is to be totally confused and victimized by psychological attack. Chickens can not fly like or swim like ducks they do not even eat and enjoy the same food basic-basics. Ducks who imitate chickens do not survive well; mostly they survive poorly if they survive at all. What can a chicken teach a duck? However, it is really sad when they dont know or dont care to know their true reality, because whoever (whatever nationality) it is they are trying to imitate they are unaware, they were led into it at an early age. It is often said; people can only do what they know. As a result once they become older and better able to make a conscious choice they dont, its very difficult, because that particular religion was given to them perfectly unquestioned, as unquestionable: accepted on the basis of assumptions and suppositions its subliminal. Alien and foreign as that might be, consider what an effective control weapon this is when forced on an invaded, captured, colonized and oppressed nation^[11]. The captured nation becomes a disposable satellite in the service of the master. Now you know!

3) Affirmative Action - policies used in the United States, South Africa, Eurasian cultures and other colonizers / imperialist supposedly in order to increase opportunities for minorities by favoring them in hiring and promotion, college admissions, and the awarding of government contracts. Generally, affirmative action has been undertaken by governments, businesses, or educational institutions to remedy the effects of past discrimination against a group.

Until the mid-1960s legal barriers (Jim Crow i.e. legislated segregation) prevented Blacks and other racial minorities in the United States from entering many jobs, businesses and educational institutions. Many universities would not admit women, and employers often would not hire minorities or women. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibited discrimination in public accommodations and employment and laid the groundwork for the subsequent development of affirmative action programs. The term affirmative action was first used by President Lyndon B. Johnson in a 1965 executive order that declared that federal contractors should take affirmative action to ensure that job applicants and employees are treated without regard to their race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. President Richard Nixon was the first to implement federal policies designed to guarantee minority hiring.

The scope and limitations of affirmative action policies have been defined through a series of legislative initiatives and by decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States . To avoid discrimination lawsuits, in the early 1970s public and private employers began to adopt hiring policies designed to recruit more minorities. In later cases the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of affirmative action, but placed some restrictions on its implementation. Although sharply divided on the issue, the court has struck down a number of affirmative action programs as unfair or too broad in their application. Conservative justices appointed to the court in the 1980s and 1990s have attempted to limit the scope of affirmative action. Congress responded to a number of conservative Supreme Court rulings by passing the Civil Rights Act of 1991, which strengthened antidiscrimination laws.

From its beginnings affirmative action has been highly controversial. Critics charge that affirmative action policies violate the principal that all individuals are equal under the law. Advocates of affirmative action respond that effective remedies must exist to aid groups that have suffered from discrimination. In the 1990s affirmative action has been a highly charged legal and political issue. With legislatures, courts, and the public divided over the issue, the status of affirmative action remains uncertain. The actual long term positive results of affirmative action policies since 1965 are also for the most part questionable. However in 2009 Black men and Black Women are not getn it on Why? The evidence is there for those conscious and paying attention. There also exits a "Blue Print and A Cure;" more on this later.

I am no longer consumed by the basic need to prove to myself and the world the African origin of literally everything civilized. Data upon data streams into African Diasporan Consciousness supporting that data previously discovered as well as new data. Although I recognize many of my significant others require this knowing. In fact there is not enough of this knowing. That particular battle is well won in such a manner that our victory is renewable; perpetual; on-going.

This is a lot to digest at one time-I'll try not to send so much at one time as well as allow enough time for it to be assimilated; considering language and geographic disparities; remembering well the fact that I no longer have an AA buffering correspondence due to budget-cuts.

Thanks for the comments. I am in the middle of updated both articles. Nothing major, just forgot to add somethings. For instance, you can also say "thing" in Zulu by saying INTU or INTO. We also find a cognate in Greek with the word ONTOS also meaning a "thing."

In Rwanda they say IMANAUJELA which means "the lords have come." The Bambara have the same word and it refers to their oldest ancestors. Here it correlates with several concepts mentioned in the papers: MA (lord, king, god, etc.) + NA (spirit, soul).

I mentioned that we could interepet Amen-Ra to mean "eternal god" or "everlasting being." In Mbochi we have a term MANAA which means "eternal."

I will repost them as soon as I update the content. There are some other minor adjustments that will be made as well.

Hutuapo Asar!.

I really enjoyed reading your well thought-out analysis on KMT agglutination. Your analysis of MUNTU has increased our conceptual understanding of the word. There were some original ideas which were new to me.

A little addition on the morpheme MU. In Kiswahili-Bantu MU is equivalent to M and means, you(plural), him, it (animal), it (some place inside). This is also equivalent to MO, inside, in the house. Thus MO relates to the house, in particular to a woman's house and family, lineage or kin-group. MO-TO refers to a person and indirectly includes the hidden concept of the woman and the family group. Not many people know this.

A better way of saying the word for a foreigner 'genibatu' would be u-genibatu, giving the meaning people from a foreign region, people who are strangers.

Also you give MANA for 'there is not'. This word translates in Kiswahili-Bantu as AMUNA, or HAMUNA. The initial HA, means not, becomes A and is usually dropped to give AMUNA, which means 'there is not inside, no. Could this be the word for AMUN?....AMUNA. I've been toying around with this idea for a while.

This is my second email to you. The first one disappeared into thin air. I don't know where it got to!

I shall reread your analysis and absorb the rest of what you have said. As you said this is an ongoing exploration.

PS. I am preparing some new stuff which I am actively writing up. Hence the silence!

Peace

Here is a question that has boggled me as of late. GJK Campbell-Dunn has argued in many papers that Basque, Etruscan, Maori and Minoan are all really Niger-Congo languages. Other African scholars contend that The ancient Egyptian (kiKami) is also related to Niger-Congo.

What I have noticed is that linguists who have classified the above mentioned languages in the Indo-European and Afro-Asiatic languages, have all classified them as "isolate" languages - with the exception of Maori I think.

It seems like when they can't explain a language to an alleged family association, they call it an "isolate." A language isolate, in the absolute sense, is a natural language with no demonstrable genealogical (or "genetic") relationship with other languages; that is, one that has not been demonstrated to descend from an ancestor common with any other language.

My question is how does a 3000 plus year old language (kiKami) NOT have branches or NOT descend from a previous language? That is humanly and by the physical laws of nature impossible unless you posit the polygenetic theory of human origins.

When a clearly African language is present in Europe or Asia, they call it an "isolate" instead of showing its relation to the Black African languages. And of course Egypt is NOT in Africa according to certain blind people so this convention works for them as well. Maybe it should be a practice that if a language is considered an isolate, to look to Africa and then move on from there.

Here are the updated files. Please refer to these files for critique. I had to make some corrections from the first.

I also added the ka- diminutive noun class using the word kht, ka-ti (tree branch) as a fifth example. I also needed to correct the noun class in the word kpr, as the k syllable (morpheme) would correspond to noun class-17, not 7, which deals with and outgoing location. To "come" or "to appear" is an emergence out of something and the /k/ would go with the ku- or ki- prefixes which mean "to come."

During the last decades of the twentieth century thousands of Africans dropped their western Christian names and adopted Moslem (or Muslim) -Arabic names. In effect exchanging one slave owning god for another. Although your name is very important; the color of your god and the language he speaks is critical to your reality. If one is to go to the trouble of exchanging names, chose an African name not a Moslem-Arabic or Oriental name. Arab-Arabic is not African it is Asian. Adoption of, Judaism, Buddhism, Hinduism, Marxism or Confucianism is as contradictory to Continental African and Diasporan Afrocentricity as Christianity and Islam has been for Africans on the Continent and abroad. All religions rise out of the deification[7] of someones nationality (nationalism) and race[8]. Understand this and you will begin to discern[9] the keys to our own liberating victory. Afrocentricity recognizes and appreciates that all religions have a transforming power. It's no secret, in fact; it is predictable that there should be transforming and energizing forces present in all religions. All religions center in and around certain assumptions & suppositions: something taken for granted or accepted as truth without proof; a supposition: a valid assumption. Every religion has defining characteristics. Many times the assumptions, suppositions & defining characteristics are very obvious and identifiable. However, due to the (interjected) [emphasis mine] nationalistic racial aspects of all religions, many of the assumptions, suppositions & defining characteristics are not obvious at all, but subliminal:[10] stimulating behavior patterns below the level of conscious awareness; manipulating reality. Western religions, Asian beliefs or Oriental philosophy have no distinction from Yoruba, Asante, Wolof, Ewe, Nuba (Nubia) or any other traditional African religion or philosophy in some respects, except of course, in the specific history and nationalism which is deified. The questions that must be answered are: How has the chosen religion been deified for its adherents (you) and the world? What are its assumptions and parameters? Whose nationalism and culture does it hold up high as Holy? How is a particular religion traditionally historically spread? Is it spread by lies, deceit and the force of might or the power of its truths? Religion contains the basic-basics - behavior patterns, primary values, morals and culture of a particular nationality or race; religion transmits culture. With this said, an easy conclusion is possible. If religions transmit nationality, if a particular religion has its basic-basics founded within a specific historical cultural-racial context, what effect does this have on the individual identity of the adherent? What belief system can cause a person to set fire to himself in religious protest? What belief system can cause a person to commit suicide or murder as a terrorist or colonizer / imperialist? What belief system can cause a people to be so confused, backwards and separated from their own true self that they hate each other, kill each other, sabotage each other and can not identify with each other, can not cooperate and work together for mutual survival. Only an alien religion directed against the real self can accomplish subliminal seduction of this depth and magnitude. Literally, to have faith in a religion that does not place your race, history, culture and natural belief system(s) at the center of its assumptions, suppositions and basic-basics is to be totally confused and victimized by psychological attack. Chickens can not fly like or swim like ducks they do not even eat and enjoy the same food basic-basics. Ducks who imitate chickens do not survive well; mostly they survive poorly if they survive at all. What can a chicken teach a duck? However, it is really sad when they dont know or dont care to know their true reality, because whoever (whatever nationality) it is they are trying to imitate they are unaware, they were led into it at an early age. It is often said; people can only do what they know. As a result once they become older and better able to make a conscious choice they dont, its very difficult, because that particular religion was given to them perfectly unquestioned, as unquestionable: accepted on the basis of assumptions and suppositions its subliminal. Alien and foreign as that might be, consider what an effective control weapon this is when forced on an invaded, captured, colonized and oppressed nation[\[11\]](#). The captured nation becomes a disposable satellite in the service of the master. Now you know!

3) Affirmative Action - policies used in the United States, South Africa, Eurasian cultures and other colonizers / imperialist supposedly in order to increase opportunities for minorities by favoring them in hiring and promotion, college admissions, and the awarding of government contracts. Generally, affirmative action has been undertaken by governments, businesses, or educational institutions to remedy the effects of past discrimination against a group.

Until the mid-1960s legal barriers (Jim Crow i.e. legislated segregation) prevented Blacks and other racial minorities in the United States from entering many jobs, businesses and educational institutions. Many universities would not admit women, and employers often would not hire minorities or women. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibited discrimination in public accommodations and employment and laid the groundwork for the subsequent development of affirmative action programs. The term affirmative action was first used by President Lyndon B. Johnson in a 1965 executive order that declared that federal contractors should take affirmative action to ensure that job applicants and employees are treated without regard to their race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. President Richard Nixon was the first to implement federal policies designed to guarantee minority hiring.

The scope and limitations of affirmative action policies have been defined through a series of legislative initiatives and by decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. To avoid discrimination lawsuits, in the early 1970s public and private employers began to adopt hiring policies designed to recruit more minorities. In later cases the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of affirmative action, but placed some restrictions on its implementation. Although sharply divided on the issue, the court has struck down a number of affirmative action programs as unfair or too broad in their application. Conservative justices appointed to the court in the 1980s and 1990s have attempted to limit the scope of affirmative action. Congress responded to a number of conservative Supreme Court rulings by passing the Civil Rights Act of 1991, which strengthened antidiscrimination laws.

From its beginnings affirmative action has been highly controversial. Critics charge that affirmative action policies violate the principal that all individuals are equal under the law. Advocates of affirmative action respond that effective remedies must exist to aid groups that have suffered from discrimination. In the 1990s affirmative action has been a highly charged legal and political issue. With legislatures, courts, and the public divided over the issue, the status of affirmative action remains uncertain. The actual long term positive results of affirmative action policies since 1965 are also for the most part questionable. However in 2009 Black men and Black Women are not getn it on Why? The evidence is there for those conscious and paying attention. There also exists a "Blue Print and A Cure;" more on this later.

Hi

Researchers do this to maintain the status quo and the dogma that Africans played no role in the rise of ancient civilizations.

Here is a question that has boggled me as of late. GJK Campbell-Dunn has argued in many papers that Basque, Etruscan, Maori and Minoan are all really Niger-Congo languages. Other African scholars contend that The ancient Egyptian (kiKami) is also related to Niger-Congo.

What I have noticed is that linguists who have classified the above mentioned languages in the Indo-European and Afro-Asiatic languages, have all classified them as "isolate" languages - with the exception of Maori I think.

It seems like when they can't explain a language to an alleged family association, they call it an "isolate." A language isolate, in the absolute sense, is a natural language with no demonstrable genealogical (or "genetic") relationship with other languages; that is, one that has not been demonstrated to descend from an ancestor common with any other language.

My question is how does a 3000 plus year old language (kiKami) NOT have branches or NOT descend from a previous language? That is humanly and by the physical laws of nature impossible unless you posit the polygenetic theory of human origins.

When a clearly African language is present in Europe or Asia, they call it an "isolate" instead of showing its relation to the Black African languages. And of course Egypt is NOT in Africa according to certain blind people so this convention works for them as well. Maybe it should be : practice that if a language is considered an isolate, to look to Africa and then move on from there.

1) Mystery Schools and Secret Societies The Egyptian Mystery Systems were the first Secret Orders of History. Publication of their teachings were/are strictly prohibited. Egypt was the world center of ancient wisdom and knowledge through its student initiates, religion, philosophy and science spread to other lands. By the sixth century A. D. the Egyptian Mysteries had become the Ancient World Religion spreading throughout the Roman Empire including Italy, Greece, Asia Minor and various parts of Europe including Brittany during the Moorish occupation of the Iberian Peninsula: Spain, Portugal and portions of Southern France. [1] The Roman Emperor Justinian [2] in the sixth century abolished the Mystery System and closed the Temples and Schools (Egyptian Universities); which stood in the way of Christianity becoming the state religion of the Roman Empire. [3] Egyptian Memphite Theology is the source of modern scientific knowledge and belief. The gods of order and arrangement in the Cosmos are represented by the nine gods in the Godhead called the Egyptian Ennead[4]. The higher metaphysical doctrines of these Mysteries could not be comprehended by Eurasians; the spiritual powers of the African priests were unsurpassed; the rites and magic of the ceremonies filled the people with awe; Egypt was the Holy Land of the Ancient World. This lofty cultural system of the Blacks filled Rome with envy, consequently Rome legalized Christianity which she had persecuted for five centuries, setting it up as the state religion to rival the African Mysteries; Christianitys mother[5]. Because we now have the actual words of Ancient Africa available to us today, we can now better understand the hysterical attack of Roman politicians and some of the early Christian Church fathers who ordered the closing of the Ancient Egyptian Universities or Mystery System, the worlds original system of higher education. Clearly the restoration of these writings destroys forever the myths about Africa that were created by greedy colonizers to justify their wanton destruction of African cultural competitors, the capture of their national wealth and the theft of their intellectual legacy[6]. The work of future scholars and scientists is the continued restoration of the greatness that is Ancient Africa and a profound understanding of the Mysteries.

2) Western Religions, Asian Beliefs & Oriental Philosophy One of the first attacks on the Africans by the Eurasians was he laughed at African philosophy: ethics, religions and spirituality. Then the Eurasian got you to laugh with him. Eurasians proclaimed that the African had nothing worthy of the title philosophy: ethics, religions or spirituality. Eurasian systems of education teach that the foundation of western culture is based upon its Greek then Roman origins; Greco-Roman. The book Stolen Legacy by Professor George G. M. James, as well as many other sources, informs us that there is no Greco-Roman philosophy only stolen African philosophy. When we look up the words culture, philosophy, theology, God and psychology in an encyclopedia we learn some fantastic things. During the last decades of the twentieth century thousands of Africans dropped their western Christian names and adopted Moslem (or Muslim) -Arabic names. In effect exchanging one slave owning god for another. Although your name is very important; the color of your god and the language he speaks is critical to your reality. Peace Phamily

Some time back I, during discussions with Professor Manu Ampim, I mentioned that there existed a continent wide priesthood system in Africa. I planned on writing something about it but never got around to doing it. So While I had some time, and was in a writing mood, I decided to put some thoughts to paper to discuss this African Super Highway of Wisdom and how it relates to our studies of ancient African civilizations.

Enclosed are my notes that are followed with comparative cultural motifs to aid in your studies. Hopefully this will bring about a new shift in paradigm concerning the quest for wisdom in ancient times and how this suppression of this hunger became the motivation to mutual share "notes" with African sages across the continent to this very day.

I look forward to your thoughts and criticisms.

6:00 - 7:00p.m. ET, this Thursday , July 30, 2009

Our guest will be Sister Mesha Monge-Irizarry, mother of Idriss Stelley, who was shot 48 times by 9 police officers. She is the founder of "The Idriss Stelley Action & Resource Center (ISARC)" in San Francisco. She will be informing the community about the good work that her organization has provided and discussing the latest updates for some of the high profile criminal justice cases such as Jena 6, Oscar Grant, Sean Bell, Kathryn Johnston, and more...

The Idriss Stelley Action & Resource Center (ISARC) is another organization in San Francisco on the forefront of assisting the San Francisco 8 and many, many, other groups. Therefore, the NBO is asking all FREEDOM FIGHTERS, ALLIES, Black and Hispanic Media to help keep this group afloat until the economy recovers by helping us spread the word about their efforts. You can read the press release at www.nationalblackagendaonline.com/ISARC.html. The founder even after having a son gunned down with 48 bullets by 9 Officers....still went on to form this group to help others. She put all her grieving and pain into helping others...Let's help her now...Send Donations Today!!! The phone number is (646) 716-7165 . Please take some time to read this speech, and get a broader understanding of this man. Thank you to Minister Farrakhan for enlightening me, for I would have never known about this were it not for him. This is a side of Michael you will NEVER hear about in the media. Read this excerpt written below, then read the rest later. He was a brilliant man!

Excerpt - I have started reflecting on the fact that my father grew up in the South, in a very poor family. He came of age during the Depression and his own father, who struggled to feed his children, showed little affection towards his family and raised my father and his siblings with an iron fist. Who could have imagined what it was like to grow up a poor black man in the South, robbed of dignity, bereft of hope, struggling to become a man in a world that saw my father as subordinate. I was the first black artist to be played on MTV and I remember how big a deal it was even then. And that was in the 80s!

My father moved to Indiana and had a large family of his own, working long hours in the steel mills, work that kills the lungs and humbles the spirit, all to support his family. Is it any wonder that he found it difficult to expose his feelings? Is it any mystery that he hardened his heart, that he raised the emotional ramparts? And most of all, is it any wonder why he pushed his sons so hard to succeed as performers, so that they could be saved from what he knew to be a life of indignity and poverty?

Friends, let me paint a picture for you. Here is a typical day in America - six youths under the age of 20 will commit suicide, 12 children under the age of 20 will die from firearms - remember this is a DAY, not a year - 399 kids will be arrested for drug abuse, 1,352 babies will be born to teen mothers. This is happening in one of the richest, most developed countries in the history of the world.

Heal The Kids - Oxford Speech

Thank you, thank you dear friends, from the bottom of my heart, for such a loving and spirited welcome, and thank you, Mr President, for your kind invitation to me which I am so honoured to accept. I also want to express a special thanks to you Shmuley, who for 11 years served as Rabbi here at Oxford. You and I have been working so hard to form Heal the Kids, as well as writing our book about childlike qualities, and in all of our efforts you have been such a supportive and loving friend. And I would also like to thank Toba Friedman, our director of operations at Heal the Kids, who is returning tonight to the alma mater where she served as a Marshall scholar, as well as Marilyn Piels, another central member of our Heal the Kids team.

I am humbled to be lecturing in a place that has previously been filled by such notable figures as Mother Theresa, Albert Einstein, Ronald Reagan, Robert Kennedy and Malcolm X. I've even heard that Kermit the Frog has made an appearance here, and I've always felt a kinship with Kermit's message that it's not easy being green. I'm sure he didn't find it any easier being up here than I do!

As I looked around Oxford today, I couldn't help but be aware of the majesty and grandeur of this great institution, not to mention the brilliance of the great and gifted minds that have roamed these streets for centuries. The walls of Oxford have not only housed the greatest philosophical and scientific geniuses - they have also ushered forth some of the most cherished creators of children's literature, from J.R.R. Tolkien to CS Lewis. Today I was allowed to hobble into the dining hall in Christ Church to see Lewis Carroll's Alice in Wonderland immortalised in the stained glass windows. And even one of my own fellow Americans, the beloved Dr Seuss graced these halls and then went on to leave his mark on the imaginations of millions of children throughout the world.

I suppose I should start by listing my qualifications to speak before you this evening. Friends, I do not claim to have the academic expertise of other speakers who have addressed this hall, just as they could lay little claim at being adept at the moonwalk - and you know, Einstein in particular was really TERRIBLE at that.

But I do have a claim to having experienced more places and cultures than most people will ever see.

Human knowledge consists not only of libraries of parchment and ink - it is also comprised of the volumes of knowledge that are written on the human heart, chiselled on the human soul, and engraved on the human psyche. And friends, I have encountered so much in this relatively short life of mine that I still cannot believe I am only 42. I often tell Shmuley that in soul years I'm sure that I'm at least 80 - and tonight I even walk like I'm 80! So please harken to my message, because what I have to tell you tonight can bring healing to humanity and healing to our planet.

Through the grace of God, I have been fortunate to have achieved many of my artistic and professional aspirations realised early in my lifetime. But these, friends are accomplishments, and accomplishments alone are not synonymous with who I am. Indeed, the cheery five-year-old who belted out Rockin' Robin and Ben to adoring crowds was not indicative of the boy behind the smile.

Tonight, I come before you less as an icon of pop (whatever that means anyway), and more as an icon of a generation, a generation that no longer knows what it means to be children.

All of us are products of our childhood. But I am the product of a lack of a childhood, an absence of that precious and wondrous age when we frolic playfully without a care in the world, basking in the adoration of parents and relatives, where our biggest concern is studying for that big spelling test come Monday morning.

Those of you who are familiar with the Jackson Five know that I began performing at the tender age of five and that ever since then, I haven't stopped dancing or singing. But while performing and making music undoubtedly remain as some of my greatest joys, when I was young I wanted more than anything else to be a typical little boy. I wanted to build tree houses, have water balloon fights, and play hide and seek with my friends. But fate had it otherwise and all I could do was envy the laughter and playtime that seemed to be going on all around me.

There was no respite from my professional life. But on Sundays I would go Pioneering, the term used for the missionary work that Jehovah's Witnesses do. And it was then that I was able to see the magic of other people's childhood.

Since I was already a celebrity, I would have to don a disguise of fat suit, wig, beard and glasses and we would spend the day in the suburbs of Southern California, going door-to-door or making the rounds of shopping malls, distributing our Watchtower magazine. I loved to set foot in all those regular suburban houses and catch sight of the shag rugs and La-Z-Boy armchairs with kids playing Monopoly and grandmas baby-sitting and all those wonderful, ordinary and starry scenes of everyday life. Many, I know, would argue that these things seem like no big deal. But to me they were mesmerising.

I used to think that I was unique in feeling that I was without a childhood. I believed that indeed there were only a handful with whom I could share those feelings. When I recently met with Shirley Temple Black, the great child star of the 1930s and 40s, we said nothing to each other at first, we simply cried together, for she could share a pain with me that only others like my close friends Elizabeth Taylor and McCauley Culkin know.

I do not tell you this to gain your sympathy but to impress upon you my first important point : It is not just Hollywood child stars that have suffered from a non-existent childhood. Today, it's a universal calamity, a global catastrophe. Childhood has become the great casualty of modern-day living. All around us we are producing scores of kids who have not had the joy, who have not been accorded the right, who have not been allowed the freedom, or knowing what it's like to be a kid.

Today children are constantly encouraged to grow up faster, as if this period known as childhood is a burdensome stage, to be endured and ushered through, as swiftly as possible. And on that subject, I am certainly one of the world's greatest experts.

Ours is a generation that has witnessed the abrogation of the parent-child covenant. Psychologists are publishing libraries of books detailing the destructive effects of denying one's children the unconditional love that is so necessary to the healthy development of their minds and character. And because of all the neglect, too many of our kids have, essentially, to raise themselves. They are growing more distant from their parents, grandparents and other family members, as all around us the indestructible bond that once glued together the generations, unravels.

This violation has bred a new generation, Generation O let us call it, that has now picked up the torch from Generation X. The O stands for a generation that has everything on the outside - wealth, success, fancy clothing and fancy cars, but an aching emptiness on the inside. That cavity in our chests, that barrenness at our core, that void in our centre is the place where the heart once beat and which love once occupied.

And it's not just the kids who are suffering. It's the parents as well. For the more we cultivate little-adults in kids'-bodies, the more removed we ourselves become from our own child-like qualities, and there is so much about being a child that is worth retaining in adult life.

Love, ladies and gentlemen, is the human family's most precious legacy, its richest bequest, its golden inheritance. And it is a treasure that is handed down from one generation to another. Previous ages may not have had the wealth we enjoy. Their houses may have lacked electricity, and they squeezed their many kids into small homes without central heating. But those homes had no darkness, nor were they cold. They were lit bright with the glow of love and they were warmed snugly by the very heat of the human heart. Parents, undistracted by the lust for luxury and status, accorded their children primacy in their lives.

As you all know, our two countries broke from each other over what Thomas Jefferson referred to as "certain inalienable rights". And while we Americans and British might dispute the justice of his claims, what has never been in dispute is that children have certain inalienable rights, and the gradual erosion of those rights has led to scores of children worldwide being denied the joys and security of childhood.

I would therefore like to propose tonight that we install in every home a Children's Universal Bill of Rights, the tenets of which are:

1. The right to be loved without having to earn it
2. The right to be protected, without having to deserve it
3. The right to feel valuable, even if you came into the world with nothing
4. The right to be listened to without having to be interesting
5. The right to be read a bedtime story, without having to compete with the evening news
6. The right to an education without having to dodge bullets at schools

Friends, the foundation of all human knowledge, the beginning of human consciousness, must be that each and every one of us is an object of love. Before you know if you have red hair or brown, before you know if you are black or white, before you know of what religion you are a part, you have to know that you are loved.

About twelve years ago, when I was just about to start my Bad tour, a little boy came with his parents to visit me at home in California. He was dying of cancer and he told me how much he loved my music and me. His parents told me that he wasn't going to live, that any day he could just go, and I said to him: "Look, I am going to be coming to your town in Kansas to open my tour in three months. I want you to come to the show. I am going to give you this jacket that I wore in one of my videos." His eyes lit up and he said: "You are gonna GIVE it to me?" I said "Yeah, but you have to promise that you will wear it to the show." I was trying to make him hold on. I said: "When you come to the show I want to see you in this jacket and in this glove" and I gave him one of my rhinestone gloves - and I never usually give the rhinestone gloves away. And he was just in heaven.

But maybe he was too close to heaven, because when I came to his town, he had already died, and they had buried him in the glove and jacket. He was just 10 years old. God knows, I know, that he tried his best to hold on. But at least when he died, he knew that he was loved, not only by his parents, but even by me, a near stranger, I also loved him. And with all of that love he knew that he didn't come into this world alone, and he certainly didn't leave it alone.

If you enter this world knowing you are loved and you leave this world knowing the same, then everything that happens in between can be dealt with. A professor may degrade you, but you will not feel degraded, a boss may crush you, but you will not be crushed, a corporate gladiator might vanquish you, but you will still triumph. How could any of them truly prevail in pulling you down? For you know that you are an object worthy of love. The rest is just packaging.

But if you don't have that memory of being loved, you are condemned to search the world for something to fill you up. But no matter how much money you make or how famous you become, you will still feel empty. What you are really searching for is unconditional love, unqualified acceptance. And that was the one thing that was denied to you at birth.

Yes, in my country there is an epidemic of violence that parallels no other industrialised nation. These are the ways young people in America express their hurt and their anger. But don't think that there is not the same pain and anguish among their counterparts in the United Kingdom. Studies in this country show that every single hour, three teenagers in the UK inflict harm upon themselves, often by cutting or burning their bodies or taking an overdose. This is how they have chosen to cope with the pain of neglect and emotional agony.

In Britain, as many as 20% of families will only sit down and have dinner together once a year. Once a year! And what about the time-honoured tradition of reading your kid a bedtime story? Research from the 1980s showed that children who are read to, had far greater literacy and significantly outperformed their peers at school. And yet, less than 33% of British children ages two to eight have a regular bedtime story read to them. You may not think much of that until you take into account that 75% of their parents DID have that bedtime story when they were that age.

Clearly, we do not have to ask ourselves where all of this pain, anger and violent behaviour comes from. It is self-evident that children are thundering against the neglect, quaking against the indifference and crying out just to be noticed. The various child protection agencies in the US say that millions of children are victims of maltreatment in the form of neglect, in the average year. Yes, neglect. In rich homes, privileged homes, wired to the hilt with every electronic gadget. Homes where parents come home, but they're not really home, because their heads are still at the office. And their kids? Well, their kids just make do with whatever emotional crumbs they get. And you don't get much from endless TV, computer games and videos.

These hard, cold numbers which for me, wrench the soul and shake the spirit, should indicate to you why I have devoted so much of my time and resources into making our new Heal the Kids initiative a colossal success.

But since this is my first public lecture, and you have so warmly welcomed me into your hearts, I feel that I want to tell you more. We each have our own story, and in that sense statistics can become personal. They say that parenting is like dancing. You take one step, your child takes another. I have discovered that getting parents to re-dedicate themselves to their children is only half the story. The other half is preparing the children to re-accept their parents.

When I was very young I remember that we had this crazy mutt of a dog named "Black Girl," a mix of wolf and retriever. Not only wasn't she much of a guard dog, she was such a scared and nervous thing that it is a wonder she did not pass out every time a truck rumbled by, or a thunderstorm swept through Indiana. My sister Janet and I gave that dog so much love, but we never really won back the sense of trust that had been stolen from her by her previous owner. We knew he used to beat her. We didn't know with what. But whatever it was, it was enough to suck the spirit right out of that dog.

Then there are the far worse cases of children who harbour animosity and resentment toward their parents, so that any overture that their parents might undertake would be thrown forcefully back in their face. Tonight, I don't want any of us to make this mistake. That's why I'm calling upon all the world's children - beginning with all of us here tonight - to forgive our parents, if we felt neglected. Forgive them and teach them how to love again.

You probably weren't surprised to hear that I did not have an idyllic childhood. The strain and tension that exists in my relationship with my own father is well documented. My father is a tough man and he pushed my brothers and me hard, from the earliest age, to be the best performers we could be. He had great difficulty showing affection. He never really told me he loved me. And he never really complimented me either. If I did a great show, he would tell me it was a good show. And if I did an OK show, he told me it was a lousy show.

He seemed intent, above all else, on making us a commercial success. And at that he was more than adept. My father was a managerial genius and my brothers and I owe our professional success, in no small measure, to the forceful way that he pushed us. He trained me as a showman and under his guidance I couldn't miss a step.

But what I really wanted was a Dad. I wanted a father who showed me love. And my father never did that. He never said I love you while looking me straight in the eye, he never played a game with me. He never gave me a piggyback ride, he never threw a pillow at me, or a water balloon.

But I remember once when I was about four years old, there was a little carnival and he picked me up and put me on a pony. It was a tiny gesture, probably something he forgot five minutes later. But because of that moment I have this special place in my heart for him. Because that's how kids are, the little things mean so much to them and for me, that one moment meant everything. I only experienced it that one time, but it made me feel really good, about him and the world.

But now I am a father myself, and one day I was thinking about my own children, Prince and Paris and how I wanted them to think of me when they grow up. To be sure, I would like them to remember how I always wanted them with me wherever I went, how I always tried to put them before everything else. But there are also challenges in their lives. Because my kids are stalked by paparazzi, they can't always go to a park or a movie with me.

So what if they grow older and resent me, and how my choices impacted their youth? Why weren't we given an average childhood like all the other kids, they might ask? And at that moment I pray that my children will give me the benefit of the doubt. That they will say to themselves: "Our daddy did the best he could, given the unique circumstances that he faced. He may not have been perfect, but he was a warm and decent man, who tried to give us all the love in the world."

I hope that they will always focus on the positive things, on the sacrifices I willingly made for them, and not criticise the things they had to give up, or the errors I've made, and will certainly continue to make, in raising them. For we have all been someone's child, and we know that despite the very best of plans and efforts, mistakes will always occur. That's just being human.

And when I think about this, of how I hope that my children will not judge me unkindly, and will forgive my shortcomings, I am forced to think of my own father and despite my earlier denials, I am forced to admit that he must have loved me. He did love me, and I know that.

There were little things that showed it. When I was a kid I had a real sweet tooth - we all did. My favourite food was glazed doughnuts and my father knew that. So every few weeks I would come downstairs in the morning and there on the kitchen counter was a bag of glazed doughnuts - no note, no explanation - just the doughnuts. It was like Santa Claus.

Sometimes I would think about staying up late at night, so I could see him leave them there, but just like with Santa Claus, I didn't want to ruin the magic for fear that he would never do it again. My father had to leave them secretly at night, so as no one might catch him with his guard down. He was scared of human emotion, he didn't understand it or know how to deal with it. But he did know doughnuts.

And when I allow the floodgates to open up, there are other memories that come rushing back, memories of other tiny gestures, however imperfect, that showed that he did what he could. So tonight, rather than focusing on what my father didn't do, I want to focus on all the things he did do and on his own personal challenges. I want to stop judging him.

I have started reflecting on the fact that my father grew up in the South, in a very poor family. He came of age during the Depression and his own father, who struggled to feed his children, showed little affection towards his family and raised my father and his siblings with an iron fist. Who could have imagined what it was like to grow up a poor black man in the South, robbed of dignity, bereft of hope, struggling to become a man in a world that saw my father as subordinate. I was the first black artist to be played on MTV and I remember how big a deal it was even then. And that was in the 80s!

My father moved to Indiana and had a large family of his own, working long hours in the steel mills, work that kills the lungs and humbles the spirit, all to support his family. Is it any wonder that he found it difficult to expose his feelings? Is it any mystery that he hardened his heart, that he raised the emotional ramparts? And most of all, is it any wonder why he pushed his sons so hard to succeed as performers, so that they could be saved from what he knew to be a life of indignity and poverty?

I have begun to see that even my father's harshness was a kind of love, an imperfect love, to be sure, but love nonetheless. He pushed me because he loved me. Because he wanted no man ever to look down at his offspring. And now with time, rather than bitterness, I feel blessing. In the place of anger, I have found absolution. And in the place of revenge I have found reconciliation. And my initial fury has slowly given way to forgiveness.

Almost a decade ago, I founded a charity called Heal the World. The title was something I felt inside me. Little did I know, as Shmuley later pointed out, that those two words form the cornerstone of Old Testament prophecy. Do I really believe that we can heal this world, that is riddled with war and genocide, even today? And do I really think that we can heal our children, the same children who can enter their schools with guns and hatred and shoot down their classmates, like they did at Columbine? Or children who can beat a defenceless toddler to death, like the tragic story of Jamie Bulger? Of course I do, or I wouldn't be here tonight.

But it all begins with forgiveness, because to heal the world, we first have to heal ourselves. And to heal the kids, we first have to heal the child within, each and every one of us. As an adult, and as a parent, I realise that I cannot be a whole human being, nor a parent capable of unconditional love, until I put to rest the ghosts of my own childhood.

And that's what I'm asking all of us to do tonight. Live up to the fifth of the Ten Commandments. Honour your parents by not judging them. Give them the benefit of the doubt.

That is why I want to forgive my father and to stop judging him. I want to forgive my father, because I want a father, and this is the only one that I've got. I want the weight of my past lifted from my shoulders and I want to be free to step into a new relationship with my father, for the rest of my life, unhindered by the goblins of the past.

In a world filled with hate, we must still dare to hope. In a world filled with anger, we must still dare to comfort. In a world filled with despair, we must still dare to dream. And in a world filled with distrust, we must still dare to believe.

To all of you tonight who feel let down by your parents, I ask you to let down your disappointment. To all of you tonight who feel cheated by your fathers or mothers, I ask you not to cheat yourself further. And to all of you who wish to push your parents away, I ask you to extend your hand to them instead. I am asking you, I am asking myself, to give our parents the gift of unconditional love, so that they too may learn how to love from us, their children. So that love will finally be restored to a desolate and lonely world.

Shmuley once mentioned to me an ancient Biblical prophecy which says that a new world and a new time would come, when "the hearts of the parents would be restored through the hearts of their children". My friends, we are that world, we are those children.

Mahatma Gandhi said: "The weak can never forgive. Forgiveness is the attribute of the strong." Tonight, be strong. Beyond being strong, rise to the greatest challenge of all - to restore that broken covenant. We must all overcome whatever crippling effects our childhoods may have had on our lives and in the words of Jesse Jackson, forgive each other, redeem each other and move on.

This call for forgiveness may not result in Oprah moments the world over, with thousands of children making up with their parents, but it will at least be a start, and we'll all be so much happier as a result. And so ladies and gentlemen, I conclude my remarks tonight with faith, joy and excitement.

From this day forward, may a new song be heard.
Let that new song be the sound of children laughing.
Let that new song be the sound of children playing.
Let that new song be the sound of children singing.
And let that new song be the sound of parents listening.
Together, let us create a symphony of hearts, marvelling at the miracle of our children and basking in the beauty of love.
Let us heal the world and blight its pain.
And may we all make beautiful music together.
God bless you, and I love you.

In Nairobi, water has been an issue. Many families are going without water in their taps n on end.

In the country side, water is an issue. Many rivers are going dry. I recently crossed River and I was shocked at how thin the flow has become.

Around Nakuru, Flamingos used to be a sight to behold. That is no more courtesy of the destruction of Mau Forests. And as the government grapples with the Mau issue, what mu as Kenyans do in our localities?

At KCDN, we want to be an example of what the people can do. We can all come together help in environmental conservation. We can all be vigilant about soiling our rivers, grabb utility grounds, children play grounds etc. It is us who must fix this problem.

On 5th September 2009, we will be doing exactly that in Komarock. We are mobilizing tl youth, the parents and the residents to come together and be that voice of reason that will heard loud and clear in matters environmental.

We are very encouraged by the current stance being taken by the government. It is our vic grabbers and invaders of forest lands must not be compensated. People who had invade o forests were evicted and not compensated. Politicians in the affected areas never showed naivety.

If the invaders on Mau can be compensated, then, we must look back and start compensat those other people who had invaded goevernment lands and forests.

On the whole, we have innocent people in this region, people who we swindled out of the money by conniving politicians. It is such politicians who must compensate them, and no government.

Subject: [BNYEE]-- Ishmael Reed Looks at the PostRacial Skip Gates Arrest

How Henry Louis Gates Got Ordained as the Nation's "Leading Black Intellectual" Post-Race Scholar Yells Racism

By ISHMAEL REED

Now that Henry Louis Gates Jr. has gotten a tiny taste of what the underclass undergo each day, do you think that he will go easier on them? Lighten up on the tough love lectures? Even during his encounter with the police, he was given some slack. If a black man in an inner city neighborhood had hesitated to identify himself, or given the police some lip, the police would have called SWAT. When Oscar Grant, an apprentice butcher, talked back to a BART policeman in Oakland, he was shot!

Given the position that Gates has pronounced since the late eighties, if I had been the arresting officer and post-race spokesperson Gates accused me of racism, I would have given him a sample of his own medicine. I would have replied that race is a social construct--the line that he and his friends have been pushing over the last couple of decades.

After this experience, will Gates stop attributing the problems of those inner city dwellers to the behavior of thirty five-year-old grandmothers living in the projects? (Gates says that when he became a tough lover he was following the example of his mentor Nobel Laureate Wole Soyinka as though his and Soyinkas situations were the same. As a result of Soyinkas criticisms of a Nigerian dictator, he was jailed and his life constantly threatened.)

Prior to the late eighties, Gates tough love exhortations were aimed at racism in the halls of academe, but then he signed on to downtown feminist reasoning that racism was a black male problem. Karen Durbin, who hired him to write for The Village Voice, takes credit for inventing him as a public intellectual. He was then assigned by Rebecca Penny Sinkler, former editor of The New York Times Book Review, to do a snuff job on black male writers. In an extraordinary review, he seemed to conclude that black women writers were good, not because of their merit, but because black male writers were bad. This was a response to an article by Mel Watkins, a former book review editor, who on his way out warned of a growing trend that was exciting the publishers cash registers. Books that I would describe as high Harlequin romances, melodramas in which saintly women were besieged by cruel black male oppressors, the kind of image of the brothers promoted by confederate novelists Thomas Nelson Page and Thomas Dixon.

Gates dismissed a number of black writers as misogynists, including me, whom he smeared throughout the United States and Europe, but when Bill Clinton was caught exploiting a young woman, sexually, he told the Times that he would go to the wall for this president. Feminists like Gloria Steinem defended the president as well, even though for years theyd been writing about women as victims of male chauvinists with power, the kind of guys who used to bankroll Ms. magazine.

Not to say that portraits of black men should be uniformly positive--Ive certainly introduced some creeps in my own work--but most of the white screenwriters, directors and producers who film this material--and the professors and critics who promote it-- are silent about the abuses against women belonging to their own ethnic groups. Moreover, Alice Walker, Tina Turner and bell hooks have complained that in the hands of white script writers, directors and producers, the black males become more sinister straw men than they appear in the original texts.

There are big bucks to be made in promoting this culture. Two studios are currently fighting over the rights to a movie called Push about a black father who impregnates his illiterate Harlem daughter. A representative of one, according to the Times, said that the movie would provide both with a gold mine of opportunity.

As an example of the double standard by which blacks and whites are treated in American society, at about the same time that the Gates article on black misogyny was printed, there appeared a piece about Jewish American writers. Very few women were mentioned.

Gates was also under pressure for making himself the head black feminist in the words of feminist Michele Wallace as a result of his profiting from black feminist studies sales because, as she put it in the Voice, he had unresolved issues with his late mother, who was, according to Gates, a black nationalist. The black feminists wanted in. As a result, Gates invited them to join his Norton anthology project. The result was the Norton Anthology of African American Literature. One of the editors was the late feminist scholar Dr. Barbara Christian. She complained to me almost to the day that she died that she and the late Nellie Y. McKay, another editor, did all of the work while Gates took the credit. This seems to be Gates pattern. Getting others to do his work. Mother Jones magazine accused him of exploiting those writers who helped to assemble his Encarta Africana, of running an academic sweat shop and even avoiding affirmative action goals by not hiring blacks. Julian Brookes of Mother Jones wrote:

Henry Louis Gates Jr. has never been shy about speaking up for affirmative action. Indeed, the prominent Harvard professor insists that he wouldn't be where he is today without it. Odd, then, that when it came to assembling a staff to compile an encyclopedia of black history, Gates hired a group that was almost exclusively white. Of the up to 40 full-time writers and editors who worked to produce Encarta Africana only three were black. What's more, Gates and co-editor K. Anthony Appiah rejected several requests from white staffers to hire more black writers. Mother Jones turned to Gates for an explanation of this apparent inconsistency.

Did the staff members who expressed concern that the Africana team was too white have a point?

Gates responded:

It's a disgusting notion that white people can't write on black history--some of the best scholars of Africa are white. People should feel free to criticize the quality of the encyclopedia, but I will not yield one millimeter[to people who criticize the makeup of the staff]. It's wrongheaded. Would I have liked there to be more African Americans in the pool? Sure. But we did the best we could given the time limits and budget.

While his alliance with feminists gave Gates career a powerful boost, it was his Op ed for the Times blaming continued anti-Semitism on African Americans that brought the public intellectual uptown. It was then that Gates was ordained as the pre-eminent African American scholar when, if one polled African-American scholars throughout the nation, Gates would not have ranked among the top twenty five. It would have to be done by secret ballot given the power that Gates sponsors have given him to make or break academic careers. As Quincy Troupe, editor of Black Renaissance Noire would say, Gates is among those leaders who were given to us, not only by the white mainstream but also by white progressives. Amy Goodman carries on about Gates and Cornel West like the old Bobby Soxers used to swoon over Sinatra. Last week Rachel Maddow called Gates the nations leading black intellectual. Who pray tell is the nations leading white intellectual, Rachel? How come we can only have one? Some would argue that Gates hasnt written a first rate scholarly work since 1989.

CNN gave Gates accusation against blacks as anti-Semites a worldwide audience and so when I traveled to Israel for the first time in the year, 2000, Israeli intellectuals asked me why American blacks hated Jews so. In print, I challenged Gates libeling of blacks as a group in my book, Another Day at the Front, because at the time of his Op-ed, the Anti-Defamation League issued a report that showed the decline of anti-Semitism among black Americans. I cited this report to Gates. He said that the Times promised that there would be a follow up Op-ed about racism among American Jews. It never appeared. Barry Glassner was correct when he wrote in his The Culture of Fear that the whole Gates-generated black Jewish feud was hyped.

Under Tina Browns editorship at The New Yorker, Gates was hired to do hatchet jobs on Minister Louis Farrakhan and the late playwright August Wilson.

The piece on Wilson appeared after a debate between Robert Brustein and Wilson about Wilsons proposal for a black nationalist theater. Gates took Brusteins side of the argument. Shortly afterward, Brustein and Gates were awarded a million dollar grant from the Ford Foundation for the purpose of holding theatrical Talented Tenth dinner parties at Harvard at a time when regional black theater was heading toward extinction. Tina Brown, a one-time Gates sponsor, is a post-racer like Gates. Like Andrew Sullivan, a Charles Murray supporter, she gets away with the most fatuous comments as a result of Americans being enthralled by a London accent. On the Bill Maher show, she said that issues of race were passè because the country has elected a black president. This woman lives in a city from which blacks and Latinos have been ethnically cleansed as a result the policies of Mayor Giuliani, a man who gets his talking points from The Manhattan Institute. Thousands of black and Hispanic New Yorkers have been stopped and frisked without a peep from Gates and his Harvard circle of post-racers such as Orlando Patterson.

Even the Bush administration admitted to the existence of racial profiling, yet Gates says that only after his arrest did he understand the extent of racial profiling, a problem for over two hundred years. Why wasn't the nation's leading black intellectual aware of the problem? His exact words following his arrest were What it made me realize was how vulnerable all black men are, how vulnerable are all poor people to capricious forces like a rogue policeman. Amazing! Shouldn't the nation's leading black intellectual be aware of writer Charles Chesnutt who wrote about racial profiling in 1905!

The Village Voice recently exposed the brutality meted out to black and Hispanic prisoners at New York's Rikers Island and medical experiments that have damaged black children living in the city. Yet Maureen Dowd agrees with Tina Brown, her fellow New Yorker, that because the president and his attorney general are black--in terms of racism--its mission accomplished. Makes you understand how the German citizens of Munich could go about their business while people were being gassed a few miles away. You can almost forgive Marie Antoinette. She was a young woman in her thirties with not a single face lift operation.

What is it with this post-race Harvard elite? I got to see Dick Gregory and Mort Sahl perform in San Francisco the other night, the last of the great sixties comedians. During his routine, Gregory said that he's sending his grand kids to black historical colleges because even though he lives near Harvard and can afford to send them there, he wouldn't send his dog to Harvard. Maybe he is on to something.

When Queer Power became the vogue, Gates latched on to that movement, too. In an introduction to an anthology of Gay writings, Gates argued that Gays face more discrimination than blacks, which is disputed even by Charles Blow, Times statistician, who like Harvard's Patterson and Gates, makes tough love to blacks exclusively. Recently, he reported that the typical target of a hate crime is black, but failed to identify the typical perpetrator of a hate crime as a young white male.

Moreover, what's the percentage of Gays on death row? The percentage of blacks? Which group is more likely to be redlined by banks, a practice that has cost blacks billions of dollars in equity? Would Cambridge police have given two white Gays the problems that they gave Gates? Why no discussion of charges of Gay racism made by Marlon Riggs, Barbara Smith and Audre Lorde? How many unarmed white Gays have been murdered by the police? How many blacks? Undoubtedly, there are pockets of homophobia among blacks but not as much as that among other ethnic communities that I could cite. The best thing for blacks would be for Gays to get married and blacks should help in this effort, otherwise all of the oxygen on the left will continue to be soaked up by this issue.

For white Gays and Lesbians to compare their struggle to that of the Civil Rights movement is like Gates comparing his situation with that of Wole Soyinka's. Moreover, Barbara Smith says that when she tried to join the Gay Millennium March on Washington, the leaders told her to get lost. They said they were intent upon convincing white Heterosexual America that We're just like you.

Will the pre-late-80s Gates be resurrected as a result of what MSNBC and CNN commentator Touré calls Gates wake up call? (This is the same Toure, a brilliant fiction writer, who just about wrote a post-race manifesto for The New York Times Book Review, during which he dismissed an older generation of black activists as a bunch of Jesses.)

Will Gates let up on what Kofi Natambu the young editor of the Panopticon Review calls his opportunism. Will he re-think remarks like the one he made after the election of his friend, the tough love president Barack Obama? Gates said that he doubted that the election would end black substance abuse and unmarried motherhood?

Is it possible that things are more complicated than tough love sound bites which are designed to solicit more patronage? Will he reconsider the post-race neocon line of his blog, TheRoot.com, bankrolled by The Washington Post? Will he invite writers Carl Dix and Askia Toure, who represent other African American constituencies, as much as he prints the views of far right Manhattan Institute spokesperson and racial profiling denier, John McWhorter.

Will he continue to advertise shoddy blame-the-victim and black pathology sideshows like CNNs Black In America, and The Wire? (Predictably CNNs Anderson Cooper turned Gates controversy into a carnival act. The story was followed by one about Michael Jacksons doctors. CNN is making so much money and raising its ratings so rapidly from black pathology stories that its beginning to give Black Entertainment Network a run for its money, so to speak.)

Predictably, the segregated media--the spare all white jury dominating the conversation about race as usual--gave the Cambridge cop the benefit of the doubt and the police unions backed him up. The police unions always back up their fellow officers even when they shoot unarmed black suspects in the back or, in the case of Papa Charlie James, an elderly San Francisco black man, while he was laying in bed. They back each other up and testifie all of the time.

Will Gates listen to his critics from whom he has been protected by powerful moneyed forces, which have given him the ability to make or break academic careers, preside over the decision-making of patronage and grant-awarding institutions. Houston A. Baker Jr.s Betrayal: How Black Intellectuals Have Abandoned The Ideals Of The Civil Rights Era offers mild criticisms of Gates, West and other black public intellectuals, who, according to him, are embraced by virtue of their race transcendent ideology. His book went from the warehouse to the remainder shelves. The Village Voice promised two installments of courageous muckraking pieces about Gates written by novelist, playwright and poet Thulani Davis; part two never appeared. Letters challenging Gates by one of Gates main critics at Harvard, Dr. Martin Kilson, have been censored. Kilson refers to Gates as the master of the intellectual dodge. And even when Professor Melissa Harris-Lacewell at The Nations blog defied the 24-hour news cycle that has depicted Gates, a black nationalist critic, as an overnight black nationalist-- she calls him apolitical--she had to pull her punches. As an intellectual, she has more depth than all of the white mainstream and white progressive medias selected leaders of black intellection, among whom are post-modernist preachers who can spew rhetoric faster than the speed of light.

It remains to be seen whether Gates, who calls himself an intellectual entrepreneur, will now use his wake up call to lead a movement that will challenge racial disparities in the criminal justice system. A system that is rotten to the core, where whites commit the overwhelming majority of the crimes, while blacks and Hispanics do the time. A prison system where torture and rape are regular occurrences and where in some states the conditions are worse than at Gitmo. California prisons hospitals are so bad that they have been declared unconstitutional and a form of torture, over the objections of Attorney General Jerry Brown and Arnold Schwarzenegger, who leased his face to the rich and was on television the other day talking about how rough they have it. A man who is channeling his hero the late Kurt Waldheims attitudes toward the poor and disabled.

Gates can help lead the fight so that there will be mutual respect between law enforcement and minorities instead of their calling us niggers all the time and being Marvin Gayes trigger happy policemen. Not all of them but quite a few. Or Gates can coast along. Continue to maintain that black personal behavior, like not turning off the TV at night, is at the root of the barriers facing millions of black Americans. Will return to the intellectual rigor espoused by his hero W.E.B Dubois or will he continue to act as a sort of black intellectual Charles Van Doren? An entertainer. (An insider at PBS told me that the network is demanding that Gates back up his claims about the ancestry of celebrities with more solid proofs.)

Gates has discussed doing a documentary about racial profiling. I invite him to cover a meeting residents of my Oakland ghetto neighborhood have with the police each month. (Most of our problems incidentally are caused by the off-springs of two family households. Suburban gun dealers who arm gang leaders. The gang leader on our block isnt black! An absentee landlord who owns a house where crack operations take place.) He can bring Bill Cosby with him. Hell find that the problems of inner citizens are more complex than thirty five year-old grandmothers living in the projects and rappers not pulling up their pants and that racism remains in the words of the great novelist John A. Williams, an inexorable force.

Finally, in his 2002 Jefferson lecture, delivered at the Library of Congress, Henry Louis Gates, Jr., during remarks about the 18th-Century poet Phillis Wheatley in which he excoriated the attitudes of her critics in the Black Arts movement, one more time, ended his lecture with: We can finally say: Welcome home, Phillis; welcome home.

If Gates ceases his role as just another tough lover and an intellectual entrepreneur, and takes a role in ending racial traffic and retail profiling, and police home invasions, issues that have lingered since even more Chesnutts time, we can say, Welcome home, Skip; welcome home.

I am not surprised that a few MPs who ought to know, are the ones in the frontline championing for compensation for those who have invaded Mau Forests.

I want to agree with the Hon Prime Minister that these people must be evicted now. These sentiments are shared as well with Hon Michuki, Hon Ole Ntimama and many progressive MPs who have watched with sadness as Lake Nakuru dries up. The Flamingoes are no more in Nakuru and the 2 Rutos are not bothered.

Sadly, the main architect of Mau invasion, HE Rtd Mzee Daniel Arap Moi is very silent. He gives us words of wisdom but when it comes to Mau, those words disappear. He lives the life of his son and the 2 Rutos, the people who helped him destroy Kenya.

These are the times that we need leadership. And Raila Odinga has shown exactly that; he is ready to forego his presidential bid but have Mau saved. This is very clear. A leader must be prepared to take a stance and Raila has once again stepped in the frontline with all artillery at his disposal from myopic leadership.

I was in a discussion with a group of our brothers from Kalenjin land and they are all in agreement that Mau must be saved and Raila must do that. The political blackmail that the 2 Rutos are championing is not supported by Kalenjins. They are Kenyans like all of us, and we have seen Lake Elementaita and Lake Naivasha shrink because of Mau.

They have seen the effect of Mau on the 25 rivers that originate from there. They have seen the effect of Mau at Kericho tea farms, and they know, it is just a matter of time and the tea farms will be no more, courtesy of the confused political schemes of the 2 Rutos.

As Kenyans support the Prime Minister on the issue of Mau, let our brothers and sisters from the entire Rift Valley take stock of the effect of Mau on Kenya, and then call the Ruto bluffs.

That they want to decamp and form another party? My. Kenyans must rally behind Raila at this our of need. Sondu Miriu is drying because the 2 Rutos have invaded Mau. The Mara River is drying up because the 2 Rutos have invaded Mau; and they call on their tribes people to help them kill our country!!

Kalenjins must stand up and be counted as Kenyan Patriots. And the 2 Rutos should be consigned to the next flight to Switzerland.

Thank you soooo much!

I posted this on my network, Remember When...www.chitchatv.com with the picture of his daughter from his memorial...this means a lot to me in many ways....thank you!

Subject: [Ta_Seti] Michael Jacksons' Oxford speech 2001

Please take some time to read this speech, and get a broader understanding of this man. Thank you to Minister Farrakhan for enlightening me, for I would have never known about this were it not for him. This is a side of Michael you will NEVER hear about in the media. Read this excerpt written below, then read the rest later. He was a brilliant man!

Excerpt - I have started reflecting on the fact that my father grew up in the South, in a very poor family. He came of age during the Depression and his own father, who struggled to feed his children, showed little affection towards his family and raised my father and his siblings with an iron fist. Who could have imagined what it was like to grow up a poor black man in the South, robbed of dignity, bereft of hope, struggling to become a man in a world that saw my father as subordinate. I was the first black artist to be played on MTV and I remember how big a deal it was even then. And that was in the 80s!

My father moved to Indiana and had a large family of his own, working long hours in the steel mills, work that kills the lungs and humbles the spirit, all to support his family. Is it any wonder that he found it difficult to expose his feelings? Is it any mystery that he hardened his heart, that he raised the emotional ramparts? And most of all, is it any wonder why he pushed his sons so hard to succeed as performers, so that they could be saved from what he knew to be a life of indignity and poverty?

Friends, let me paint a picture for you. Here is a typical day in America - six youths under the age of 20 will commit suicide, 12 children under the age of 20 will die from firearms - remember this is a DAY, not a year - 399 kids will be arrested for drug abuse, 1,352 babies will be born to teen mothers. This is happening in one of the richest, most developed countries in the history of the world.

Heal The Kids - Oxford Speech

Thank you, thank you dear friends, from the bottom of my heart, for such a loving and spirited welcome, and thank you, Mr President, for your kind invitation to me which I am so honoured to accept. I also want to express a special thanks to you Shmuley, who for 11 years served as Rabbi here at Oxford. You and I have been working so hard to form Heal the Kids, as well as writing our book about childlike qualities, and in all of our efforts you have been such a supportive and loving friend. And I would also like to thank Toba Friedman, our director of operations at Heal the Kids, who is returning tonight to the alma mater where she served as a Marshall scholar, as well as Marilyn Piels, another central member of our Heal the Kids team.

I am humbled to be lecturing in a place that has previously been filled by such notable figures as Mother Theresa, Albert Einstein, Ronald Reagan, Robert Kennedy and Malcolm X. I've even heard that Kermit the Frog has made an appearance here, and I've always felt a kinship with Kermit's message that it's not easy being green. I'm sure he didn't find it any easier being up here than I do!

As I looked around Oxford today, I couldn't help but be aware of the majesty and grandeur of this great institution, not to mention the brilliance of the great and gifted minds that have roamed these streets for centuries. The walls of Oxford have not only housed the greatest philosophical and scientific geniuses - they have also ushered forth some of the most cherished creators of children's literature, from J.R.R. Tolkien to CS Lewis. Today I was allowed to hobble into the dining hall in Christ Church to see Lewis Carroll's Alice in Wonderland immortalised in the stained glass windows. And even one of my own fellow Americans, the beloved Dr Seuss graced these halls and then went on to leave his mark on the imaginations of millions of children throughout the world.

I suppose I should start by listing my qualifications to speak before you this evening. Friends, I do not claim to have the academic expertise of other speakers who have addressed this hall, just as they could lay little claim at being adept at the moonwalk - and you know, Einstein in particular was really TERRIBLE at that. But I do have a claim to having experienced more places and cultures than most people will ever see.

Human knowledge consists not only of libraries of parchment and ink - it is also comprised of the volumes of knowledge that are written on the human heart, chiselled on the human soul, and engraved on the human psyche. And friends, I have encountered so much in this relatively short life of mine that I still cannot believe I am only 42. I often tell Shmuley that in soul years I'm sure that I'm at least 80 - and tonight I even walk like I'm 80! So please harken to my message, because what I have to tell you tonight can bring healing to humanity and healing to our planet.

Through the grace of God, I have been fortunate to have achieved many of my artistic and professional aspirations realised early in my lifetime. But these, friends are accomplishments, and accomplishments alone are not synonymous with who I am. Indeed, the cheery five-year-old who belted out Rockin' Robin and Ben to adoring crowds was not indicative of the boy behind the smile.

Tonight, I come before you less as an icon of pop (whatever that means anyway), and more as an icon of a generation, a generation that no longer knows what it means to be children.

All of us are products of our childhood. But I am the product of a lack of a childhood, an absence of that precious and wondrous age when we frolic playfully without a care in the world, basking in the adoration of parents and relatives, where our biggest concern is studying for that big spelling test come Monday morning. Those of you who are familiar with the Jackson Five know that I began performing at the tender age of five and that ever since then, I haven't stopped dancing or singing. But while performing and making music undoubtedly remain as some of my greatest joys, when I was young I wanted more than anything else to be a typical little boy. I wanted to build tree houses, have water balloon fights, and play hide and seek with my friends. But fate had it otherwise and all I could do was envy the laughter and playtime that seemed to be going on all around me.

There was no respite from my professional life. But on Sundays I would go Pioneering, the term used for the missionary work that Jehovah's Witnesses do. And it was then that I was able to see the magic of other people's childhood.

Since I was already a celebrity, I would have to don a disguise of fat suit, wig, beard and glasses and we would spend the day in the suburbs of Southern California, going door-to-door or making the rounds of shopping malls, distributing our Watchtower magazine. I loved to set foot in all those regular suburban houses and catch sight of the shag rugs and La-Z-Boy armchairs with kids playing Monopoly and grandmas baby-sitting and all those wonderful, ordinary and starry scenes of everyday life. Many, I know, would argue that these things seem like no big deal. But to me they were mesmerising.

I used to think that I was unique in feeling that I was without a childhood. I believed that indeed there were only a handful with whom I could share those feelings. When I recently met with Shirley Temple Black, the great child star of the 1930s and 40s, we said nothing to each other at first, we simply cried together, for she could share a pain with me that only others like my close friends Elizabeth Taylor and McCauley Culkin know. I do not tell you this to gain your sympathy but to impress upon you my first important point : It is not just Hollywood child stars that have suffered from a non-existent childhood. Today, it's a universal calamity, a global catastrophe. Childhood has become the great casualty of modern-day living. All around us we are producing scores of kids who have not had the joy, who have not been accorded the right, who have not been allowed the freedom, or knowing what it's like to be a kid.

Today children are constantly encouraged to grow up faster, as if this period known as childhood is a burdensome stage, to be endured and ushered through, as swiftly as possible. And on that subject, I am certainly one of the world's greatest experts.

Ours is a generation that has witnessed the abrogation of the parent-child covenant. Psychologists are publishing libraries of books detailing the destructive effects of denying one's children the unconditional love that is so necessary to the healthy development of their minds and character. And because of all the neglect, too many of our kids have, essentially, to raise themselves. They are growing more distant from their parents, grandparents and other family members, as all around us the indestructible bond that once glued together the generations, unravels.

This violation has bred a new generation, Generation O let us call it, that has now picked up the torch from Generation X. The O stands for a generation that has everything on the outside - wealth, success, fancy clothing and fancy cars, but an aching emptiness on the inside. That cavity in our chests, that barrenness at our core, that void in our centre is the place where the heart once beat and which love once occupied.

And it's not just the kids who are suffering. It's the parents as well. For the more we cultivate little-adults in kids'-bodies, the more removed we ourselves become from our own child-like qualities, and there is so much about being a child that is worth retaining in adult life.

Love, ladies and gentlemen, is the human family's most precious legacy, its richest bequest, its golden inheritance. And it is a treasure that is handed down from one generation to another. Previous ages may not have had the wealth we enjoy. Their houses may have lacked electricity, and they squeezed their many kids into small homes without central heating. But those homes had no darkness, nor were they cold. They were lit bright with the glow of love and they were warmed snugly by the very heat of the human heart. Parents, undistracted by the lust for luxury and status, accorded their children primacy in their lives.

As you all know, our two countries broke from each other over what Thomas Jefferson referred to as "certain inalienable rights". And while we Americans and British might dispute the justice of his claims, what has never been in dispute is that children have certain inalienable rights, and the gradual erosion of those rights has led to scores of children worldwide being denied the joys and security of childhood.

I would therefore like to propose tonight that we install in every home a Children's Universal Bill of Rights, the tenets of which are:

1. The right to be loved without having to earn it
2. The right to be protected, without having to deserve it
3. The right to feel valuable, even if you came into the world with nothing
4. The right to be listened to without having to be interesting
5. The right to be read a bedtime story, without having to compete with the evening news
6. The right to an education without having to dodge bullets at schools

Friends, the foundation of all human knowledge, the beginning of human consciousness, must be that each and every one of us is an object of love. Before you know if you have red hair or brown, before you know if you are black or white, before you know of what religion you are a part, you have to know that you are loved.

About twelve years ago, when I was just about to start my Bad tour, a little boy came with his parents to visit me at home in California. He was dying of cancer and he told me how much he loved my music and me. His parents told me that he wasn't going to live, that any day he could just go, and I said to him: "Look, I am going to be coming to your town in Kansas to open my tour in three months. I want you to come to the show. I am going to give you this jacket that I wore in one of my videos." His eyes lit up and he said: "You are gonna GIVE it to me?" I said "Yeah, but you have to promise that you will wear it to the show." I was trying to make him hold on. I said: "When you come to the show I want to see you in this jacket and in this glove" and I gave him one of my rhinestone gloves - and I never usually give the rhinestone gloves away. And he was just in heaven.

But maybe he was too close to heaven, because when I came to his town, he had already died, and they had buried him in the glove and jacket. He was just 10 years old. God knows, I know, that he tried his best to hold on. But at least when he died, he knew that he was loved, not only by his parents, but even by me, a near stranger, I also loved him. And with all of that love he knew that he didn't come into this world alone, and he certainly didn't leave it alone.

If you enter this world knowing you are loved and you leave this world knowing the same, then everything that happens in between can he dealt with. A professor may degrade you, but you will not feel degraded, a boss may crush you, but you will not be crushed, a corporate gladiator might vanquish you, but you will still triumph. How could any of them truly prevail in pulling you down? For you know that you are an object worthy of love. The rest is just packaging.

But if you don't have that memory of being loved, you are condemned to search the world for something to fill you up. But no matter how much money you make or how famous you become, you will still feel empty. What you are really searching for is unconditional love, unqualified acceptance. And that was the one thing that was denied to you at birth.

Friends, let me paint a picture for you. Here is a typical day in America - six youths under the age of 20 will commit suicide, 12 children under the age of 20 will die from firearms - remember this is a DAY, not a year - 399 kids will be arrested for drug abuse, 1,352 babies will be born to teen mothers. This is happening in one of the richest, most developed countries in the history of the world.

Yes, in my country there is an epidemic of violence that parallels no other industrialised nation. These are the ways young people in America express their hurt and their anger. But don't think that there is not the same pain and anguish among their counterparts in the United Kingdom. Studies in this country show that every single hour, three teenagers in the UK inflict harm upon themselves, often by cutting or burning their bodies or taking an overdose. This is how they have chosen to cope with the pain of neglect and emotional agony.

In Britain, as many as 20% of families will only sit down and have dinner together once a year. Once a year! And what about the time-honoured tradition of reading your kid a bedtime story? Research from the 1980s showed that children who are read to, had far greater literacy and significantly outperformed their peers at school. And yet, less than 33% of British children ages two to eight have a regular bedtime story read to them. You may not think much of that until you take into account that 75% of their parents DID have that bedtime story when they were that age.

Clearly, we do not have to ask ourselves where all of this pain, anger and violent behaviour comes from. It is self-evident that children are thundering against the neglect, quaking against the indifference and crying out just to be noticed. The various child protection agencies in the US say that millions of children are victims of maltreatment in the form of neglect, in the average year. Yes, neglect. In rich homes, privileged homes, wired to the hilt with every electronic gadget. Homes where parents come home, but they're not really home, because their heads are still at the office. And their kids? Well, their kids just make do with whatever emotional crumbs they get. And you don't get much from endless TV, computer games and videos.

These hard, cold numbers which for me, wrench the soul and shake the spirit, should indicate to you why I have devoted so much of my time and resources into making our new Heal the Kids initiative a colossal success.

But since this is my first public lecture, and you have so warmly welcomed me into your hearts, I feel that I want to tell you more. We each have our own story, and in that sense statistics can become personal. They say that parenting is like dancing. You take one step, your child takes another. I have discovered that getting parents to re-dedicate themselves to their children is only half the story. The other half is preparing the children to re-accept their parents.

When I was very young I remember that we had this crazy mutt of a dog named "Black Girl," a mix of wolf and retriever. Not only wasn't she much of a guard dog, she was such a scared and nervous thing that it is a wonder she did not pass out every time a truck rumbled by, or a thunderstorm swept through Indiana. My sister Janet and I gave that dog so much love, but we never really won back the sense of trust that had been stolen from her by her previous owner. We knew he used to beat her. We didn't know with what. But whatever it was, it was enough to suck the spirit right out of that dog.

Then there are the far worse cases of children who harbour animosity and resentment toward their parents, so that any overture that their parents might undertake would be thrown forcefully back in their face. Tonight, I don't want any of us to make this mistake. That's why I'm calling upon all the world's children - beginning with all of us here tonight - to forgive our parents, if we felt neglected. Forgive them and teach them how to love again.

You probably weren't surprised to hear that I did not have an idyllic childhood. The strain and tension that exists in my relationship with my own father is well documented. My father is a tough man and he pushed my brothers and me hard, from the earliest age, to be the best performers we could be. He had great difficulty showing affection. He never really told me he loved me. And he never really complimented me either. If I did a great show, he would tell me it was a good show. And if I did an OK show, he told me it was a lousy show.

He seemed intent, above all else, on making us a commercial success. And at that he was more than adept. My father was a managerial genius and my brothers and I owe our professional success, in no small measure, to the forceful way that he pushed us. He trained me as a showman and under his guidance I couldn't miss a step.

But what I really wanted was a Dad. I wanted a father who showed me love. And my father never did that. He never said I love you while looking me straight in the eye, he never played a game with me. He never gave me a piggyback ride, he never threw a pillow at me, or a water balloon.

But I remember once when I was about four years old, there was a little carnival and he picked me up and put me on a pony. It was a tiny gesture, probably something he forgot five minutes later. But because of that moment I have this special place in my heart for him. Because that's how kids are, the little things mean so much to them and for me, that one moment meant everything. I only experienced it that one time, but it made me feel really good, about him and the world.

But now I am a father myself, and one day I was thinking about my own children, Prince and Paris and how I wanted them to think of me when they grow up. To be sure, I would like them to remember how I always wanted them with me wherever I went, how I always tried to put them before everything else. But there are also challenges in their lives. Because my kids are stalked by paparazzi, they can't always go to a park or a movie with me.

So what if they grow older and resent me, and how my choices impacted their youth? Why weren't we given an average childhood like all the other kids, they might ask? And at that moment I pray that my children will give me the benefit of the doubt. That they will say to themselves: "Our daddy did the best he could, given the unique circumstances that he faced. He may not have been perfect, but he was a warm and decent man, who tried to give us all the love in the world."

I hope that they will always focus on the positive things, on the sacrifices I willingly made for them, and not criticise the things they had to give up, or the errors I've made, and will certainly continue to make, in raising them. For we have all been someone's child, and we know that despite the very best of plans and efforts, mistakes will always occur. That's just being human.

And when I think about this, of how I hope that my children will not judge me unkindly, and will forgive my shortcomings, I am forced to think of my own father and despite my earlier denials, I am forced to admit that he must have loved me. He did love me, and I know that.

There were little things that showed it. When I was a kid I had a real sweet tooth - we all did. My favourite food was glazed doughnuts and my father knew that. So every few weeks I would come downstairs in the morning and there on the kitchen counter was a bag of glazed doughnuts - no note, no explanation - just the doughnuts. It was like Santa Claus.

Sometimes I would think about staying up late at night, so I could see him leave them there, but just like with Santa Claus, I didn't want to ruin the magic for fear that he would never do it again. My father had to leave them secretly at night, so as no one might catch him with his guard down. He was scared of human emotion, he didn't understand it or know how to deal with it. But he did know doughnuts.

And when I allow the floodgates to open up, there are other memories that come rushing back, memories of other tiny gestures, however imperfect, that showed that he did what he could. So tonight, rather than focusing on what my father didn't do, I want to focus on all the things he did do and on his own personal challenges. I want to stop judging him.

I have started reflecting on the fact that my father grew up in the South, in a very poor family. He came of age during the Depression and his own father, who struggled to feed his children, showed little affection towards his family and raised my father and his siblings with an iron fist. Who could have imagined what it was like to grow up a poor black man in the South, robbed of dignity, bereft of hope, struggling to become a man in a world that saw my father as subordinate. I was the first black artist to be played on MTV and I remember how big a deal it was even then. And that was in the 80s!

My father moved to Indiana and had a large family of his own, working long hours in the steel mills, work that kills the lungs and humbles the spirit, all to support his family. Is it any wonder that he found it difficult to expose his feelings? Is it any mystery that he hardened his heart, that he raised the emotional ramparts? And most of all, is it any wonder why he pushed his sons so hard to succeed as performers, so that they could be saved from what he knew to be a life of indignity and poverty?

I have begun to see that even my father's harshness was a kind of love, an imperfect love, to be sure, but love nonetheless. He pushed me because he loved me. Because he wanted no man ever to look down at his offspring. And now with time, rather than bitterness, I feel blessing. In the place of anger, I have found absolution. And in the place of revenge I have found reconciliation. And my initial fury has slowly given way to forgiveness.

Almost a decade ago, I founded a charity called Heal the World. The title was something I felt inside me. Little did I know, as Shmuley later pointed out, that those two words form the cornerstone of Old Testament prophecy. Do I really believe that we can heal this world, that is riddled with war and genocide, even today? And do I really think that we can heal our children, the same children who can enter their schools with guns and hatred and shoot down their classmates, like they did at Columbine? Or children who can beat a defenceless toddler to death, like the tragic story of Jamie Bulger? Of course I do, or I wouldn't be here tonight.

But it all begins with forgiveness, because to heal the world, we first have to heal ourselves. And to heal the kids, we first have to heal the child within, each and every one of us. As an adult, and as a parent, I realise that I cannot be a whole human being, nor a parent capable of unconditional love, until I put to rest the ghosts of my own childhood.

And that's what I'm asking all of us to do tonight. Live up to the fifth of the Ten Commandments. Honour your parents by not judging them. Give them the benefit of the doubt. That is why I want to forgive my father and to stop judging him. I want to forgive my father, because I want a father, and this is the only one that I've got. I want the weight of my past lifted from my shoulders and I want to be free to step into a new relationship with my father, for the rest of my life, unhindered by the goblins of the past.

In a world filled with hate, we must still dare to hope. In a world filled with anger, we must still dare to comfort. In a world filled with despair, we must still dare to dream. And in a world filled with distrust, we must still dare to believe.

To all of you tonight who feel let down by your parents, I ask you to let down your disappointment. To all of you tonight who feel cheated by your fathers or mothers, I ask you not to cheat yourself further. And to all of you who wish to push your parents away, I ask you to extend your hand to them instead. I am asking you, I am asking myself, to give our parents the gift of unconditional love, so that they too may learn how to love from us, their children. So that love will finally be restored to a desolate and lonely world.

Shmuley once mentioned to me an ancient Biblical prophecy which says that a new world and a new time would come, when "the hearts of the parents would be restored through the hearts of their children". My friends, we are that world, we are those children.

Mahatma Gandhi said: "The weak can never forgive. Forgiveness is the attribute of the strong." Tonight, be strong. Beyond being strong, rise to the greatest challenge of all - to restore that broken covenant. We must all overcome whatever crippling effects our childhoods may have had on our lives and in the words of Jesse Jackson, forgive each other, redeem each other and move on.

This call for forgiveness may not result in Oprah moments the world over, with thousands of children making up with their parents, but it will at least be a start, and we'll all be so much happier as a result. And so ladies and gentlemen, I conclude my remarks tonight with faith, joy and excitement.

From this day forward, may a new song be heard.
Let that new song be the sound of children laughing.
Let that new song be the sound of children playing.
Let that new song be the sound of children singing.
And let that new song be the sound of parents listening.
Together, let us create a symphony of hearts, marvelling at the miracle of our children and basking in the beauty of love.
Let us heal the world and blight its pain.
And may we all make beautiful music together.
God bless you, and I love you.

CCNP V5.0 Cisco Certified Network Professional

CCNP Scholarship

For who looking to better career.

For who looking on professionalize in networks.

For who looking forward distinction.

IT GATE ACADEMY is pleased to announce for the first time in Egypt and Middle East starting the first class of CCNP Scholarship.

Cisco Networking Academy

We live in an increasingly connected world, creating a global economy and a growing need for technical skills. Cisco Networking Academy delivers information technology skills to over 500,000 students a year in more than 165 countries worldwide. Networking Academy students have the opportunity to participate in a powerful and consistent learning experience that is supported by high quality, online curricula and assessments, instructor training, hands-on labs, and classroom interaction. This experience ensures the same level of qualifications and skills regardless of where in the world a student is located.

Networking Academy students will become the architects of the networked economy; enabling everyday experiences on the global human network. With the ever-increasing demand for their skills, Networking Academy students have the chance to dream about business-critical positions never before imagined, in industries ranging from medicine and finance to entertainment and aerospace. Networking Academy opens doors to rewarding careers and opportunities for economic advancement and local community development. Students only need to be 'Mind Wide Open' to the possibilities.

CCNP Overview

The Cisco CCNP curriculum includes four modules, which align with the four exams required for CCNP certification. The CCNP curriculum builds on Cisco CCNA courses with more complex network configurations, diagnosis, and troubleshooting. The curriculum is intended for those interested in continuing their post-CCNA preparation to become network administrators, Level 2 support engineers, Level 2 systems engineers, network technicians, or deployment engineers. Students interested in this course should have completed CCNA 1-4, or the equivalents. CCNA certification is also desirable; however, it is not a prerequisite.

CCNP Course Descriptions

Building Scalable Internetworks (70 Hr):

In this course, students will learn how to create an efficient and expandable enterprise network. Students will also learn how to install, configure, monitor, and troubleshoot network infrastructure equipment. Topics include configuration of EIGRP, OSPF, IS-IS, and BGP routing protocols, and how to manipulate and optimize routing updates between these protocols. Other topics include multicast routing, IPv6, and DHCP configuration.

Explain routing in the enterprise network

Implement and verify multicast forwarding using PIM

Implement IPv6 in an enterprise network

Implement and verify EIGRP operations

Build a scalable multi-area network with OSPF

Certification Exam: BSCI v3.0, Routing Protocols at Campus Edge, and 642-901

Implementing Secure Converged Wide-Area Networks (70 Hr):

Students are introduced to secure enterprise-class network services for teleworkers and branch sites. Students will learn how to secure and expand the reach of an enterprise network with a focus on VPN configuration and securing network access. Topics include teleworker configuration and access, frame-mode MPLS, site-to-site IPSEC VPN, Cisco EZVPN, strategies used to mitigate network attacks, Cisco device hardening, and IOS firewall features.

Implement secure broadband connections for teleworkers

Describe Cisco network architecture alignment with connectivity requirements

Describe MPLS conceptual model data and control planes

Describe and configure a site-to-site IPsec VPN

Describe and configure Cisco device hardening strategies to mitigate network attacks

Certification Exam: ISCW v1.0 and 642-825.

Building Multilayer Switched Networks(70 Hr):

This course covers the deployment of state-of-the-art campus LANs. The primary focus is on the selection and implementation of the appropriate Cisco IOS services to build reliable, scalable, multilayer-switched LANs. Focus areas of the course include VLANs, Spanning Tree Protocol, wireless client access, minimizing service loss, and minimizing data theft in a campus network. This hands-on, lab-oriented course stresses the design, implementation, operation, and troubleshooting of multilayer switched networks.

Define VLANs to segment network traffic

Explain Cisco hierarchy network model for campus networks

Implement Spanning Tree Protocol and implement and verify InterVLAN routing

Design and implement security features

Implement high-availability technologies and techniques

Describe and configure wireless LAN access and switch to support voice

Certification Exam: BCMSN v3.0 exam and 642-812.

Optimizing Converged Networks(70 Hr)

Optimizing Converged Networks introduces students to effective QoS techniques for optimization in converged networks with voice, wireless, and security applications. Topics include implementing a VoIP network, specific mechanisms for implementing the DiffServ QoS model, AutoQoS, wireless security, and basic wireless management.

Describe the converged network requirements within Cisco conceptual network models, with a focus on wireless security

Describe basic principles of VoIP network bandwidth requirements, VoIP packet encapsulation, and VoIP implementation

Explain the need for QoS and the methods to implement QoS

Explain the key IP QoS mechanisms used to implement the DiffServ Qos model

Configure Cisco AutoQoS model

Describe and configure wireless security and basic wireless management

Certification Exam: ONT and 642-845.

I agree with Asar too. How can it be possible for a language NOT to be related to other languages?

Hi

Researchers do this to maintain the status quo and the dogma that Africans played no role in the rise of ancient civilizations.

Peace

Here is a question that has boggled me as of late. GJK Campbell-Dunn has argued in many papers that Basque, Etruscan, Maori and Minoan are all really Niger-Congo languages. Other African scholars contend that The ancient Egyptian (kiKami) is also related to Niger-Cong

What I have noticed is that linguists who have classified the above mentioned languages in Indo-European and Afro-Asiatic languages, have all classified them as "isolate" languages the exception of Maori I think.

It seems like when they can't explain a language to an alleged family association, they call "isolate." A language isolate, in the absolute sense, is a natural language with no demonstrable genealogical (or "genetic") relationship with other languages; that is, one that has not been demonstrated to descend from an ancestor common with any other language.

My question is how does a 3000 plus year old language (kiKami) NOT have branches or 1 descend from a previous language? That is humanly and by the physical laws of nature impossible unless you posit the polygenetic theory of human origins.

When a clearly African language is present in Europe or Asia, they call it an "isolate" instead of showing its relation to the Black African languages. And of course Egypt is NOT in Africa according to certain blind people so this convention works for them as well. Maybe it should be a practice that if a language is considered an isolate, to look to Africa and then move on from there.

I agree with Rev. Farakkhan that while MJ seems to have had some self-image problems, it appears he was the victim in that case since his childhood.

However, he had more than the right idea in his universal approach, and this far out-weighted any weaknesses. He was probably the only person, much less entertainer, who was able in a big way to reach across all borders and cultures.

I also agree with Rev. Sharpton that Barack Obama owes a measure of his success to Michael Jackson.

I'm not a fanboy, btw, never have purchased an MJ album/single or been to a concert.

30th July 2009

Dear Friends of KCDN,

Today is my birth day and on this day, I want to look back at the efforts that we are trying to make with your support at KCDN.

Without your support, nothing could have moved in the last 18 months. As Friends of KCDN, I want to share my appreciation with you. You have made us strong and moving.

Last month when things were looking gloomy for us, you came in very strongly and very swiftly and we were able to pay our rent arrears. We were also faced with some other arrears for furniture which we know we will pay with your support.

As I celebrate this day, I want you to help us move From Talking to Tasking. By ourselves, we cannot do anything. But as a team, we can move the masses and help make Kenya a beautiful place.

At KCDN, our main forte is child support. On December 4th, we will host the 2nd edition of KCDN Child Support Initiative. On this day, we will give educational materials such as books, stationery, uniforms, shoes and socks to 1950 children who have come to us for support.

We do not care where these children come from. All we know is that they are Kenyans and they are orphans or they are in dire need. And, we simply offer KCDN to be the medium of choice through which you can give hope to a needy child, a needy mother. That is our satisfaction.

On 5th September, these children, their parents and the residents of Komarock will come together to say thank you to the community for the support that they have received. Together with Friends of KCDN, we will all clean the Komarock Canal and plant trees along the Canal as well. We will also encourage the residents to each plant a tree at the family compound and that tree to become the responsibility of the child at home.

To enable us do this, we need a lot of support in terms of mobilization, logistics and tasking.

As we look forward to working closely with you, we want to thank the following people for their support to us in the month of July;

- 1] Maurice Odenyo Kshs 2,000.00
- 2] Lenny Amolo Kshs 3,000.00
- 3] Sam Olendo Kshs 2,000.00
- 4] Oduor Ongwen Kshs 3,000.00
- 5] Janet Feldman Kshs 3,693.00 USD 50
- 6] Elijah Kombo Kshs 8,000.00
- 7] Arinolah EN Kshs 2,000.00
- 8] Otieno Sungu Kshs 1,500.00
- 9] George Nyongesa Kshs 2,000.00
- 10] Jeanette M. Khaoya Kshs 6,823.50 CHF100
- 11] Dennis Obiero Kshs 1,000.00
- 12] Reginald Okumu Kshs 2,000.00
- 13] David Ochwangi Kshs 7,432.00 USD 100
- 14] Nancy Wambui Kshs 5,000.00
- 15] Shem Ochuodho Kshs 2,500.00
- 16] John Maina Kshs 1,500.00

Totals Kshs 53,448.50 and this helped clear our rent arrears

Thank you so much. You made our work fairly easier and you made a clear statement that we can actually move From Talking to Tasking.

As we appeal for your continued support and partnership, let us come together and clean our environments on 5th September 2009. If you cannot make it to KCDN, do something at your residence.

We thank you for getting time to visit our blogspot.

God bless you all.

You are very welcome. I see that MJ touched your life so I assume you have experienced pain due to his death. I am happy that perhaps his words brought you some comfort.

On a side note - the Minister also shed some light on several conversations he had over the years with MJ. He said MJ asked why blacks in this country had been taught to see themselves in such a negative way. Michael had apparently began studying EGYPT and realized that the Pharaohs / people were black. He was inspired, and went to his movie making "friends" Steven Spielberg and another whose name escapes me- to ask for their help in bringing this story of the beauty of our people to film. He quotes MJ as saying they turned him down, so he decided he would do it himself.... Perhaps this was around the time of the video remember the time???? (with Magic Johnson, Iman, Eddie Murphy) Its my favorite video of all time because it is what I envision in my mind of what it was like in those ancient times.

They can say what they want, but none of our black actors/directors ever made such a bold move to challenge the historical lies to bring truth to light - even if it was a small gesture on his part.

As a Friend to Mtumishi Orina, I want to encourage the people of Bomachoge to turn up in large numbers and help elect Cyprian to be the next MP Bomachoge.

I have had the pleasure of knowing and working closely with Orina over the years. If you wanted someone with a firm grip over national issues, vote Orina.

If you want a dynamic Kenyan, the breed that will take us out of tribalism and tribal thinking, vote Orina.

If you believe that time has come for Kenya to move to the next level, vote Orina.

We all know, and the people of Bomachoge, they who gave us Orina to the National stage, should rise up to the occasion now and help hoist Orina to the level where his voice can be heard loud and clear tackling our national problems; corruption, impunity, environmental conservation and bad governance in general.

Orina has been a present and vocal voice in defense of Kenya. We need to help him bring that articulate voice, that presence of mind, to parliament. If the people of Bomachoge can do that, Kenya and the world in general will sing songs of praise.

It will be the first step to reclaiming our country, a country that has been ravaged by poor leadership for the last 46 years.

As Friends of Orina, all we can do is to appeal to all the voters in Bomachoge to rally behind Orina at this time. We hope to visit Bomachoge and be with Orina at the times of campaigns, to help drive the change agenda forward.

To the youth, women and men of this country, make that call now to that friend who is a voter in Bomachoge with very clear appeal. It is time for Orina in Bomachoge.

Communicated from Mtumishi Cyprian Orina Nyamwamu to all our people in Bomachoge Constituency

This by election is for us to form a strong Bomachoge partnership for change! We need a change from the way we have been doing things in the past. We shall stop electing passengers to Parliament and elect a wise, humble, courageous and visionary leader; That is Mtumishi Cyprian Orina Nyamwamu
July 2, 2009

1. This is my application to all the voters of Bomachoge constituency. I shall be running to become the MP for Bomachoge on August 27, 2009. Your vote is not only for you but also for your children, your family and the whole constituency. It is a vote to end poverty in Bomachoge; Family after Family, Village after Village. We have established committees in all the 130 polling stations. Each Polling station Committee has 20 leaders. Each polling Station Committee leader shall be required to deliver a minimum of 5 votes. So we are working with a plan to deliver at least 100 votes in each polling station. This is the opportunity for all of us Bomachoge citizens to elect wisely.

2. Kofi Annan, Barrack Obama and Kenya shall be watching

There are supporters of our opponents who have been saying that I may not run in this by election. That I shall be vying in 2012. NO. They are doing politics. I have a right to lead this constituency more than some of the suspect characters who are being touted as serious candidates. I am a true, courageous, proud, visionary and competent son of this constituency. I am not a follower but a Leader! This by election is the right time. The whole of Kenya shall be in Bomachoge. Kofi Annan and Barrack Obamas representatives shall also be in Bomachoge. Who among the aspirants has more friends in Bomachoge and In Kenya than Mtumishi Cyprian Nyamwamu? This is the time to end the shameful culture of electing Passengers to Parliament that our constituency has suffered for so many years. This is the time to put Bomachoge in the Kenyan Map by electing a tested and tried visionary leader.

3. Elect a leader with a Programme and not a Passenger

We shall not allow our people to get lost again. We do not want people to regret once again after casting their ballot on August 27; we must become clear that the time for electing PASSENGERS is over. This is the time to elect a leader;

a. Who shall unite our people! We want the end of the DIVIDE and RULE system that has indeed

b. who shall wisely and courageously fight for our youth to get employment and skills; our farmers to get better incomes for their tea; for our business people to access credit and markets

c. who shall be trusted with our CDF and resources such as LATF

d. who understands how government works, how parliament works, how the judiciary works, how the provincial administration works, how the Kenya works as a members of EAC, IGADD, the AU, the UN. This the person who understands the National Accord and Agenda Number 4 so that we can work to end poverty, inequalities, devolve resources, strength our institutions and end the 800,000 cases piling in the courts; so that we shall punish those who sponsor killings of others like we saw in 2007/8. We want a leader not a passenger in Parliament.

e. We want a leader who shall Market Bomachoge in Kenya and Africa and increase investments through forming and strengthening new cooperatives, new Companies, new Business Associations, new NGOs, new Trusts and New Foundations

f. We want a leader who shall fight for the Bomachoge and Kenya we Want by fighting corruption hold government to be accountable and ensure that Goldenberg, Anglo leasing and other corruption cases are resolved and never repeated again. There are many cases of corruption in the budget such as the Kenren fertilizer company that we keep paying hundreds of millions for every year yet the fertilizer factory is NON EXISTENT! We want this corruption to stop so that people can get medicines in hospitals and roads can be built.

g. We want a leader who shall deliver better hospitals, better education, better roads, and better services in offices, electricity and a better environment; water and security for all of us. We must fight crime.

These are the issues of this election. I know I am the one who is able to deliver on this programmes better than any one else. We can not achieve this ambitious programme if we elect a Passenger once again to Parliament;

4. The P4C committees and voter registration

The Partnership for Change Committees shall help to ensure that as many people as possible register to vote. So please ensure that all of us register. There are those who opposed the fresh voter register but I stood firm to ensure that our youth register as voters. I know we did the right thing. Those opposed to a fresh voter register have a motive!

5. No violence no Voter bribery and vote buying

We shall ensure that there is NO VIOLENCE and there is ZERO TOLERANCE to voter buying and voter bribery. Those women groups and youth groups that have specialized in forming companies to sell the votes of their members are warned to stop this practice. This by election is not for people to be given money. You were given the money in 2007 but still made a big blunder. We must vote with our brains no with the stomach and auction our constituency like Essau auctioned his inheritance by accepting a bowl of soup! The money confused us and we ended up scoring a Y in the 2007 election. The By election is for us to write the exam properly NOT to be given money. All of us must wake up on August 27 and vote wisely. We shall ensure that all those who do not vote are investigated. Those who do not vote are those who sell their vote for Kshs. 100. Shall we allow people to sell our constituency to thieves? No. in 2009, every registered voter Must vote or be arrested and fined for not voting.

6. Clique of brokers

There is a clique of brokers who are used by politicians to buy voters and to bribe voters on Election Day in maize plantations and shopping centers. The IIEC is properly informed of these brokers who have used every election to receive money from politicians to enrich themselves while leaving our people poor and destitute. We have declared war in the 130 polling stations. The Partnership for Change has invited 270 Lawyers, Ambassadors and other Professionals from Bomachoge and from all over Kenya to come and monitor and Observe this by elections so that these brokers shall be identified, arrested and jailed for bribery and crimes against democracy. Warn them that this by election shall be different and the whole of Kenya shall be watching. We want this election to be peaceful, free and fair. We want more than 80% of registered voters to turn up and vote wisely.

7. My first 100 Days in office as Bomachoge MP;

7.1 Bomachoge Foundation

- 1) Samwel Onuko
- 2) Dismas Oyieko
- 3) Dr. Naftali Oirere
- 4) Eucabeth Obara
- 5) Joram Makori
- 6) Gideon Achwoga
- 7) Onyancha Ombongi
- 8) Morris Mbegera
- 9) Lumumba Onderi

7.2 Bomachoge Constituency Convention Assembly

7.2.8 CDF And Projects Committee

We want this committee to be elected by the peoples delegates. If we had each polling station electing 5 delegates to the meet at each location, then each location can elect 20 delegates to the Constituency Electoral College for purposes of electing the 15 members of the CDF committees. The Committees functions and roles are clearly outlined under the Act but what we now must do is to make this process more consultative, open and transparent.

7.2.9 Liaison, Policy And Dialogue Committee

Serve as the Development Policy Think Tank or coordinate policy Think tanks

Liaison with the KNUT , workers,

Civil society

Liaison with the National debates and policy processes

Liaison with the Gusii Development forums

I would love to recommend Jesse Onsando to head this committee since he has already taken up the responsibilities of representing Bomachoge constituency in the Gusii Professionals

Development Forum

7.2.10 The Bomachoge Constituency Convention Assembly Steering Committee

Shall constitute each of the conveners and secretaries of the 9 committees, the convener of the women Convention, convener of the youth convention and convener of the Teachers and workers representative.

Shall meet every six months

Shall receive reports from the MP on his performance

Shall receive reports from each town council and county council on the application of funds and the performance of each elected civic leader.

Shall convene ward convention assemblies which shall receive reports of performance of each elected and nominated councilor every four months as outlined here in.

Each of the 7 locations shall nominate 30 leaders making it a total of 210 leaders meeting to elect the 15 members of CDF

7.4 The Gucha Community Progress Complex

Bomachoge should urgent build a complex that shall be the engine of transformation in Bomachoge. The Complex shall house

- 1) The Gucha Cultural and Multi-Purpose Hall
- 2) School for special needs children
- 3) Offer High quality Civic and Conference centre and hostels
- 4) Diploma and certificates courses in liaison with KIM and Kenyatta University
- 5) Farmers Training college
- 6) Offer Banking Halls for several banks to take advantage of the business potential in Gucha
- 7) House the Bomachoge SACCO

7.5 Within 200 Days, Institute the Adopt-a-school- Programme in all the primary and secondary schools in Bomachoge Constituency

7.6 Hold a walk to raise the first 5 Million shillings for a Widows and orphans programme

8 United we stand, divided we shall fall!

This by election is a blessing. It is our time to unite and stop the divide and rule tactic that has been used to fragment us and keep us poor. The way forward is for each and every one of us; kera omosweta; to be a Partner for Change. Join the Partnership for Change and together we shall form a strong movement for change in Bomachoge and work with the rest of the nation to change our lives. When united we shall work for a better future. We shall end poverty family by family, village by village! This election is therefore about you and not about Mtumishi Nyamwamu or this politician or that. This election is the by-election of HOPE in Bomachoge.

HOPE for employment for our youth

HOPE for unity

HOPE for visionary, selfless and Courageous Leadership

HOPE for better use of CDF

HOPE for the protection and promotion of the rights of each and every omomachoge

HOPE for a better education for every child

HOPE for farmers to earn better incomes for their tea and other produce

HOPE for better medication

HOPE for better roads and infrastructure

HOPE for security in our homes and business premises

HOPE for electricity and water for our constituency

HOPE for a united, peaceful and prosperous Kenyan nation

So vote wisely. Make sure you vote for your life and the life of your children.
God bless you.

Your friend

Cyprian Orina Nyamwamu, Mtumishi

No arguments from me about any of this. The Minister did mention MJ being a troubled man, but more than anything he praised Michael and alluded to his growth back into his culture and people on the "inside". He spoke of the tremendous work he did in Africa, the enormous amounts of money he donated to charity, and his donation to the Million Man March as well.

While I do celebrate Michael's life, legacy and music.... When the grief settles and the smoke clears, we as a people need to go inside and shut the door and have a heart to heart about Michael... And how to instill self love in our kids so that they have a foundation to sustain them in a society where they are undervalued and systematically taught that they are inferior.

In response to our posting of yesterday, Bishop Dr Julius Mbagaya, the President of the B Convention in Kenya has sent me Kshs 3,000.00 via Mpesa.

On behalf of KCDN, I want to sincerely thank him. He was there for us during the 2nd Ec the KCDN Peace Run/Walk, where besides giving us financial support, he was able to ge from his busy schedule to be physically with us.

We appeal for more people of goodwill to join in supporting our Initiatives.

As we mobilize for 5th September 2009, we need all the support that we can get from all of goodwill. Environmental Conservation has become a hot issue and we are happy that a KCDN, we had taken note of this very early and set aside a date when we will be moving Talking to Tasking.

Kenya is at her lowest now in all fronts. But we believe that this is not the time to mourn baby. It is time to do something and stop talking. And at KCDN, we are happy that friend come on board to help us do exactly this.

It is not time to be confrontational with the government officials. Most do not know what are doing and this is why you get our politicians engaging in unending ping pong games.

This is the time to engage with fellow Kenyans, soul search and retrace our steps. We mu the lost route and the only best way is through positive engagement where we also engage government officials in what we do. They might change and change for the better.

But it can only work with an informed approach to issues. That is why we are engaging a Kenyans in our mobilization process at KCDN. Learning is a continuous process and we benefit from the experience of all.\

We will implement all the positive experiences and discard all the negative. But the botto that Kenya is Marwa and we must save her from imminent collapse at the weight of politi

I think this movement should come up with a listing of United State Companies that are at the source of the demand and aim our boycott at them, just like we did with the South African Krugerands. Then circulate that list so we can know which schools, churches, governments and so in the U. S. who have stock and other kinds of investment in those electronic companies.

What about us adults? Does this directions for the boycott only apply to children?

Just like the Atlantic Enslavement trafficking. No European Demand = cause, No African supply = effect.

Subject: [SOA] BOYCOTT TO HELP THE CONGO

This is the time of year many parents and students wait for before purchasing that new computer/cell phone/or other electronics, why? Because this is the BACK-TO-SCHOOL- TAX-FREE SHOPPING SEASON.

But this year we will use this season to launch another type of savings. We all have asked `what can we do to help save our people in the Congo?' being so far removed many of us feel helpless while being made aware of the millions of our brothers and sisters slaughtered/ massacred/ raped/dehumanize d/dis-membered, and the list of atrocities flow on. This year we will use this BACK-TO-SCHOOL- TAX-FREE SHOPPING SEASON to begin a campaign to affect the flow of the plundered natural resources used explicitly in cell-phones/ computers/ playstations/ TVs and many other popular electronics.

What we have learnt first-hand from our brothers and sisters from the Congo is that the massacre of our people is tied directly to the plundering of the natural resources which are sold on the white market to major corporations right here in he USA and Europe.

The Congo has vast wealth of minerals, particularly diamonds, coltan, cassiterite, tin, and copper. Coltan, short for Columbite-tantalite, is essential for the power-storing parts of cell phones, nuclear reactors, Play Stations, and computer chips. Coltan is increasingly exploited in the mountains in the conflict torn eastern part of the country. The Rwanda and Uganda backed rebels have primary control over the ore and are reaping huge profits which maintain and finance the protracted war. It is estimated that the Rwandan army made $20 million per month mining coltan in 2000, and the people got bullets to the head, chopped up, raped, and watched their children dragged off to become child-soldiers and sex toys. It is vital to understand that this money, this $20+ million made by Rwanda, not to mention Uganda and other groups. came from the consumers in the West, consumers like you and I, yes, we are helping to finance the destruction of our own people, the destruction of the very heart of Afrika, and so goes the heart, so goes the body. Coltan is necessary for the high-tech industry and as demand increases, motivation to end the destruction in the Congo decreases.

We can help stem the demand for this mineral Coltan by not buying any new electronics until the tide turns, if at all possible only buy refurbished or used PCs/laptops/ cellphones/ playstations; we can make this very small sacrifice and have a very huge impact on the illicit activity of mining this ore.

So beginning on July 30th, 2009 let us boycott the buying of new electronics, let us send a strong message to the mega corporations that we will not help them kill our people.

Please spread this message to everyone that you know, this much we can do.

Long Live the Congo.

On a side note - the Minister also shed some light on several conversations he had over the years with MJ. He said MJ asked why blacks in this country had been taught to see themselves in such a negative way. Michael had apparently began studying EGYPT and realized that the Pharaohs / people were black. He was inspired, and went to his movie making "friends" Steven Spielberg and another whose name escapes me- to ask for their help in bringing this story of the beauty of our people to film. He quotes MJ as saying they turned him down, so he decided he would do it himself.... Perhaps this was around the time of the video Remember the Time???? (with Magic Johnson, Iman, Eddie Murphy) Its my favorite video of all time because it is what I envision in my mind of what it was like in those ancient times.

Remember the Time is my favorite music video too, but I wish the real murals had been copied onto the palace walls; they would have reflected the cast.

They can say what they want, but none of our black actors/directors ever made such a bold move to challenge the historical lies to bring truth to light - even if it was a small gesture on his part.

It is a breakthrough video. Maybe the future is promising too. Posted here many months ago, Will Smith is reported to be working on a film called The Last Pharaoh about Taharqa. Halle Berry wants to be Nefertiti in an epic she is planning. They could be very positive movies dispelling lies and negative images on a global scale; I hope that they will be great.

This is what you can do to help the people of the Congo.

1) Shine a spotlight on all the western concession owners and corporations who profit from being in the DRC.

If you are looking for source material, check out:

Gertler's Bling Bang Torah Gang

Israel and the Ongoing Holocaust in Congo (Part 1)

by Keith Harmon Snow / February 9th, 2008

<http://dissidentvoice.org/2008/02/gertlers-bling-bang-torah-gang/>

2) Demand the following:

That all corporations who extract raw materials in Africa, pay the market value of those materials to African governments.

If that is done, it would be better than reparations, donor aid, and a Marshall Plan combined.

We are talking about $1 trillion leaving Africa every single year, and 1/4 of that returning as "donor aid", always with strings attached, and most of that re-spent in the 'donor' countries through use of donor country corporations, aid agencies, imported finished products, etc. The rest of this money is paid to corrupt stooges, whose only reason for being in power is keeping this rackets (a shell game) going. Eliminate that incentive (the fight to be the recipient of western patronage) and you eliminate the (oil) war of the Sudan, the (coltan, diamond, and cobalt) wars in the Congo, the exploitation of the people of the Niger Delta, etc. In fact, you eliminate pretty much all wars from the African continent, because all wars in Africa are wars over the right to be the one who takes bribes and kickbacks from the West, for delivering to them Africa's resources free of charge.

Think about that - $1 trillion leaves Africa every year. Most of the world's gold, diamonds, copper, cobalt, bauxite, platinum and a range of industrial metals as well as precious metals and stones are mined in Africa because of the geology of the African Rift.

Now if that money gets re-invested in agriculture, manufacturing and infrastructure, Africa is going to develop.

Attachments :

Dear Friends,

Mr. William Makora called me from Mombasa yesterday and was happy with what we have been doing at KCDN. He was convinced and decided to become a Friend of KCDN. Welcome brother.

We also welcome Sister Sara Nyagah on board as another new Friend of KCDN. You touched me with our chat of this morning. Welcome on board sister.

As I welcome William and Sara on board, ours is an approach to our Kenyan problems with a difference. We have been talking for so long about our problems as Kenyans. At KCDN, we have decided to move From Talking to Tasking. Through this initiative, we engage with the public with Evidence Based Advocacy as we explore all means of being of support to our children in need.

We have had 46 years of governance that has tended to make Kenya degenerate towards the status of a failed state at a time when our leaders are some of the wealthiest on this planet. We need to know what science makes our leaders that rich as Kenya and Kenyans become poorer.

In our mobilization series, we engage the participants in issues topical and current with a view to having solutions, not apportioning blame. We engage the various government arms with all facts, after all, they are also Kenyans and are as much desirous of making Kenya a better place to live in.

We know that we have some people in the public service whose interest are at variance with the expectations of the public. In this category, we have the invaders; people who will invade open space without caring whether it is a water tower. In this category, we have the invaders; people who will invade our hotels and sell them for a song.

In this category we have the invaders, people who will invade our silos and sell off all the grain as Kenyans go hungry. In this category we have people who will invade our oil storage and sell all oil as our cars go without oil on their account.

In this category we have the schemers, people who will work with all their might to generate another scandal that benefits their offshore bank accounts; the invaders!

With such, we hold them at arms length and make the people demand accountability.

If we all do this, we shall have moved From Talking to Tasking, and the 220 politicians will never hold us to ransom again.

In the meantime, we invite the support of willing Friends of KCDN to support our upcoming event on 5th September 2009 [\[enclosed\]](#). We take this opportunity to thank the support of following Friends;

- 1] Otieno Sungu; 100 seedlings
- 2] Bishop Dr Julius Mbagaya; Kshs 3,000.00
- 3] Arinolah EN; Seedlings
- 4]

We look forward to welcoming all the support from all Friends of KCDN. And we need to know that in government, we have some very positive initiatives that we need to nurture for the good of all Kenya.

Are they now proving to be right?

Excerpts:

[Questioner] Why in the world is Janet Napolitano talking about the need to "Continue to fight terrorism and expanding our focus and efforts" this week and invoking 9/11? Surely the Obama administration is not planning on ramping up false flag terror like Bush did? ( I hope) We had enough of that with Bush and barely survived. The bailout and corruption game continues as full speed with huge Bonuses being paid out by Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley and others, mostly with stolen or taxpayer money. Is there not even a desire to reign these types in? Surely 6 months is long enough for the Obama admin to put some honest regulators in place. I agree that Obama seems to want to help and do the right thing in many cases and he did inherit a giant mess, no doubt. But people are beginning to see a disturbing lack of change on the corruption front, and we need real change in addition to just fixing our health care system (jobs and Industry in the US for example, instead of all of the "global race to the bottom free trade" that has been pushed down our throats since 1993).

[Zeta Space angel response] We have addressed these questions almost a dozen times, and the answer is the same. You are expecting that after creating a mess, the Bush administration can be reversed in a nanosecond. The Executive branch requires Congress cooperation and must work within the law. Their enemies are waiting eagerly for any sign of weakness against what is considered by most of the public to be "enemies" of the US. Congressmen worry about being re-elected, and their cooperation is needed for laws to be passed. Are you so naive as to think that Obama can simply wave a wand like a magician and all would be fixed? Grow up!

[Questioner] Lately the rhetoric against Obama and especially his health care bill has been turned up full volume on this forum. This appears to be supported wholeheartedly as evidenced by all of the anti-Obama pins. What is going on here? And Will Obama be able to pass the long needed health reform? [and from another] I was gonna ask a question like this as well. Why has GLP and other places become so paranoid and hateful of Obama when it's clear he does everything he can. He isn't perfect but he is one of the best. It seems like even true criminals such as Cheney and Bush, didn't recieve as much hate here at GLP like Obama does.

[Zeta Space angel response] If one examines the Republican mindset one finds those who want to control their environment, and thus are leaning to the Service-to-Self. A study was done on how various toddlers emerged later in their political inclinations, and it was found that Republicans, as toddlers, were whiny, while Democrats could live with insecurity without being reduced to whining. Republicans in general want security first, for themselves and by extension their class or job or nation, regardless of what this means in pain for others. Obama is embracing the common man, not giving privilege to those in the ranks of the Republican elite, and thus the rage in those ranks.

The origins of state formation in ancient Egypt have been the focus of recent research utilizing biological data to test hypotheses regarding in situ development of local groups, or large-scale in-migration, possibly by an invading army. The primary goal of the present research is to further test these hypotheses. Our secondary goal is to compare different distance measures and assess how they might affect interpretation of population history. We analyze craniodontal nonmetric data using several different measures of biological distance, as well as a method for estimating group diversity using multidimensional scaling of distance estimates. Patterns of biological variation and population relationships were interpreted in temporal and geographic contexts. The results of our analyses suggest that the formation of the ancient Egyptian state likely included a substantial in situ process, with some level of contribution by outside migrants probable. The higher level of population structure in Lower Egypt, relative to Upper Egypt, suggests that such influence and migration by outsiders may not have been widespread geographically. These findings support, but serve to refine further those obtained by the second author in a previous study. Moreover, our comparison of distance measures indicates that the choice of measure can influence identification and interpretation of the microevolutionary processes shaping population history, despite being strongly correlated with one another.

Go and hug your Michael by Maya Angelou

Yesterday I cried watching the Michael Jackson memorial. I cried for a little black boy who felt the world didn ' t understand him. I cried for a little black boy who spent his adulthood chasing his childhood. And I thought about all the young black boys out there who may too feel that the world doesn ' t understand them. The ones who feel that the world does not understand their baggy jeans, their swagger, their music, their anger, their struggles, their fears or the chip on their shoulder. I worry that my son, may too, one day will feel lonely in a wide, wide world.

I cried for the young children of all colors who may live their life feeling like a misfit, feeling like no one understands their perspective, or their soul. What a burden to carry.

As a mother, I cried for Katherine Jackson because no mother should ever bury a child. Period. And I think about all the pain, tears and sleepless nights that she must have endured seeing her baby boy in inner pain, seeing him struggle with his self-esteem, and his insecurities and to know he often felt unloved even while the world loved him deeply. How does it feel to think that the unconditional love we give as mothers just isn ' t enough to make our children feel whole? I wonder if she still suffers thinking, "what more could I have done?" Even moms of music legends aren ' t immune to mommy guilt, I suppose. When Rev. Al Sharpton ("who always delivers one" awesome "funeral speech") said to Michael ' s children, "Your daddy was not strange...It was strange what your Daddy had to deal with," I thought of all the "strange" things of the world that my children will have to deal with. Better yet, the things I hope they won ' t ever have to deal with anymore.

And as a mother raising a young black boy, I feel recommitted and yet a little confused as to how to make sure my son is sure enough within himself to take on the world. Es pecially a "strange" one. To love himself enough to know that even when the world doesn ' t understand you, tries to force you into its mold or treats you unkindly, you are still beautiful, strong and Black. How do I do that?

Today, I am taking back "childhood" as an inalienable right for every brown little one. In a world, that makes children into booty-shaking, mini-adults long before their time, I ' m reclaiming the playful, innocent, run-around-outside, childhood as the key ingredient in raising confident adults. Second, I will not rest until my little black boy, MY Michael, knows that his broad nose is beautiful, his chocolately brown skin is beautiful, and his thick hair is beautiful.

And nothing or no one can ever take that away from him.

"Now ain ' t we bad? And ain ' t we black? And ain ' t we fine?"

Ancient Cemetery Found; Brings "Green Sahara" to Life
Christine Dell'Amore
National Geographic News
August 14, 2008

Dinosaur hunters have stumbled across the largest and oldest Stone Age cemetery in the Sahara desert.

Paleontologist Paul Sereno and his team were scouring the rocks between harsh dunes in northern Niger in 2000 when they stumbled across the graveyard, on the shores of a long-gone lake. (See photos.)

The scientists eventually uncovered 200 burials of two vastly different cultures that span five thousand years-the first time such a site has been found in one place.

Called Gobero, the area is a uniquely preserved record of human habitation and burials from the Kiffian (7700 to 6200 B.C.) and the Tenerian (5200 to 2500 B.C.) cultures, says a new study led by Sereno of the University of Chicago.

The "watershed" find also offers a new window into how these tribes lived and buried their dead during the extreme Holocene period, when a grassy Sahara dried up in the world's largest desert.

Coming across such a site "sends a tingle up your spine," said Sereno, a National Geographic explorer-in-residence. (The National Geographic Society owns National Geographic News.)

"You're not looking at [dinosaurs], you're looking at your own species."

One of the most striking discoveries was what the research team calls the "Stone Age Embrace": A woman, possibly a mother, and two children laid to rest holding hands, arms outstretched toward each other, on a bed of flowers.

Sereno and colleagues have also made several dinosaur discoveries in the region, including the bizarre cow-like dino Nigersaurus and the bus-size SuperCroc.

Green Desert

A wobble in Earth's orbit-along with other environmental factors that occurred about 12,000 years ago-brought intense monsoons to the Sahara, greening the desert and attracting a wave of human inhabitants, according to Sereno and colleagues.

Scientists already knew that the hunter-gatherer Kiffian occupied the region during a temperate phase. Between 6200 and 5200 B.C., one of the most severe climatic fluxes in that period's history desiccated the land and forced people out, the authors say. Soon afterward a second group arrived, the Tenerian.

But evidence of such population shifts rested largely on tool artifacts, with few human skeletons to analyze-until now. Radiocarbon dating of the bones has provided an "outstanding record" of the ancient Saharans, Sereno said.

Exodus From Drying Sahara Gave Rise to Pharaohs, Study Says (July 20, 2006)
Stone Age Cemetery, Artifacts Unearthed in Sahara (October 26, 2005)
"Green Sahara" in National Geographic Magazine (September 2008)

"We have the Green Sahara written in those sand dunes, and the people who lived in it," he added.

Skeleton Clues

The team discovered that the older group, the Kiffian, were buried with harpoon points and bone fishhooks, along with 6-foot (1.8-meter) Nile perch skeletons.

The presence of the fish bones and tools suggested the lake water was deeper around 7000 B.C., though probably no more than ten feet deep (three meters), Sereno said. The bones of catfish and tilapia in Tenerian burials suggest the lake was shallower later in the Holocene.

A ridge on a male Kiffian thighbone also told bioarchaeologist Chris Stojanowski of Arizona State University that the people-who ranged from six feet two inches (185 centimeters) to six feet eight inches (203 centimeters) tall-had huge leg muscles, likely from a high-protein diet and strenuous lifestyle.

The Tenerian thighbone, on the other hand, had a smaller ridge, indicating a smaller build. To adapt to an arid climate, Tenerians had a more diverse palate, including clams, fish, and savanna animals, the study says.

Stefan Krüger, of the Institute of Prehistoric Archaeology at the University of Cologne, finds the site impressive.

But he points out that it is a single location situated in a unique landscape at the foot of the Aq Mountains, and shouldn't be linked to broader ancient climatic changes in the Sahara.

"Reasons behind an interruption in local human occupation of the region may have been related to a variety of socioeconomic or cultural changes, and not necessarily to general climatic deterioration throughout the Sahara," he said.

Kröner doubts there will be much support for the theory of a thousand-year break in rainfall throughout the entire Sahara around 6200 to 5200 B.C.

But Sereno said that the general climate record, bolstered by lake-core samples and solid animal and pollen evidence, points to this "arid interruption" period that separates the Kiffian and Tenerian.

The new study appears today in the journal PLoS One.

Stone Age Embrace

Grave goods, such as bones or tusks from wild animals-including warthogs, crocodiles, and hippos, many of which roam southern Africa today-ceramics, and ivory and shell ornaments were also found, shedding light on funerary rituals.

Perhaps most incredible was the 2006 discovery the Stone Age Embrace-a Tenerian woman facing the remains of two young children, their arms posed and hands interlaced. Pollen remnants from underneath the skeletons shows the dead had been laid on a bed of flowers. "This is a landmark burial-there's nothing like it in prehistory," Sereno said.

Though the site has provided a wealth of insights into the little-studied cultures, mysteries still persist, Sereno says.

Most puzzling is how the Tenerian dug new graves alongside the Kiffian dead without disturbing them-an "absolutely remarkable" feat, Sereno said.

The graves were also, for the most part, not clustered according to tribe-suggesting that the graves may have been marked, Arizona State's Stojanowski said.

But it's obvious why the two cultures likely buried their dead at Gobero: It was the "Daytona Beach of the Holocene," Sereno said.

"It was a strip of obviously desirable real estate that stuck out into the lake," he said-an ideal place to spot fish and incoming animals.

Exodus From Drying Sahara Gave Rise to Pharaohs, Study Says
Sean Markey
for National Geographic News
July 20, 2006

The pharaohs of ancient Egypt owed their existence to prehistoric climate change in the eastern Sahara, according to an exhaustive study of archaeological data that bolsters this theory.

Starting at about 8500 B.C., researchers say, broad swaths of what are now Egypt, Chad, Libya, and Sudan experienced a "sudden onset of humid conditions." (See a map of Africa.)

For centuries the region supported savannahs full of wildlife, lush acacia forests, and areas so swampy they were uninhabitable.

During this time the prehistoric peoples of the eastern Sahara followed the rains to keep pace with the most hospitable ecosystems.

But around 5300 B.C. this climate-driven environmental abundance started to decline, and most humans began leaving the increasingly arid region.

"Around 5,500 to 6,000 years ago the Egyptian Sahara became so dry that nobody could survive there," said Stefan Kröpelin, a geoarchaeologist at the University of Cologne in Germany and study co-author.

Without rain, rivers, or the ephemeral desert streams known as waddis, vegetation became sparse, and people had to leave the desert or die, Kröpelin says.

Members of this skilled human population settled near the Nile River, giving rise to the first pharaonic cultures in Egypt (related feature: sample and download Egyptian music).

Gift of Pottery

The new study, which appears online today on the Science Express Web site, is based on painstaking research that combines new radiocarbon dating of about 500 artifacts from the region with data from past studies.

Kröner and study co-author Rudolph Kuper also collected geological climate data from countless ancient lakebeds, rain pools, and rivers.

Over the course of 30 years the researchers labored for months at a time in deserts where daytime temperatures sometimes topped 120 to 140F (50 to 60C).

The information collected allowed the scientists to piece together a picture of the ancient climate, environment, and migration of prehistoric peoples in the eastern Sahara over the past 12,000 years.

Among their findings, the researchers provide further evidence that the human exodus from the desert about 5,000 years ago is what laid the foundation for the first pharaohs' rule.

"Egypt is a gift of the Nile, as Herodotus said, as many people still think today," Kröner said, referring to the 5th-century B.C. Greek historian. "But at the same time also it is a gift of the desert."

"Without the tradition and the know-how and the knowledge of the desert, probably the Egyptian pharaonic civilization wouldn't have emerged as it did."

For example, pottery was first invented in Africa in the Egyptian Sahara at the same time, if not before, it was developed in the Middle East.

"[Pottery] is the first modern plastic, one of the most important inventions in human history," Kröner said.

The innovation provided the economic basis for the Neolithic revolution—a period of human cultural development about 5,200 to 4,500 years ago.

Pottery vessels enabled nomadic peoples to preserve and store food and thus settle down (photo: excavating ancient Egyptian pottery).

"It was really a very, very big step in human evolution, and this happened in the desert," Kröner said. "Only when the desert dried out, this condition was brought to the Nile Valley."

Adding Some Meat

In their study, Kröner and Kuper also describe how pastoral cultures moved along with the desert's southern march.

The ancient peoples' progress helped sow aspects of farming, particularly domestic animal herding, throughout Africa (explore an interactive atlas of the human journey out of Africa).

David Phillipson, a professor of African archaeology, directs the Museum of Archaeology and Anthropology at the University of Cambridge in England.

The study "adds a great deal of meat and detail to something which has been envisaged for a little while," he said.

"And it's extremely useful to have this, because it enormously increases the amount of basic data on which the conclusions are drawn.

"As the Sahara dried and became less suited and eventually unsuited to habitation, people ultimately had to move out, whether it be southward or to the east into the Nile Valley," Phillipson said.

"And this [study] helps [us] to understand the apparent rather sudden development of intensive settlement by sophisticated societies in the Nile Valley 'round about five or six thousand years ago."

Be very afraid.

The Minister for Energy has just released a schedule unto darkness for Kenya. And the m so brave giving explanations about how they want to drive Kenyan in to darkness, crime : more crime.

When he appeared on TV last night, rationing started immediately in Komarock by the liq going off for 30 minutes. We hence missed the details.

We have many Kenyans who rely on electric power to drive their small businesses. If they are driven into darkness as envisaged by the Kenya Government, how will this person feed his family, take his children to school and be a good citizen?

If power was to be rationed, as sad as it is, why can it not be done in a manner that power is off in the dead of night as we sleep. We need no power as we sleep. But many small scale business operators in the Jua Kali Industry need power in the day when they are eking out a living.

The sad reality is that we have people in leadership who are very rudderless. If Masinga Dam was built in 1942 by the British, what has the Ministry of Energy done in the intervening years to ensure that we have a continuous access to electric power? Look at the shenenigans going on in Sondu for all this long? That is the Kenya Government for you!

This is not the first time the rains have failed and the Dams gone low. The problem is that we have a government that refuses to learn from history. They keep subjecting the common man to their ineptitude.

If I were in power and I encounter one problem, it should be a lesson learnt.

I wonder whether Hon Kiraitu and the Kenya Electricity Generating Company have ever had of recycling water for use?

The water flowing down stream from Masinga and Kindaruma Dams, if recycled, will ensure that we have enough and constant water capacity to run our turbines all throughout the year. Then, the surplus water will be released down the stream to remain being of economic benefit to those along the river.

Egypt is a desert and they rely solely on River Nile. They suffer nothing like power rationing. Libya is another country that manifests leadership that supports the growth of the common man.

Why is it only in Kenya that we have a continuous chain of governments that are this inept? And when it comes to talking, 'dhogi nka', [their mouths are here], meaning, you cannot beat them.

I want to believe that the problem is not the government. We are the problem. It is us who elect these charlatans every 5 years and hand them the instruments to steal from us, not to lead us.

How come when it comes to KenRen, Goldenberg, Anglo Leasing, Triton, Grand Regency, Maize and such like enterprises, the government acts with clean precision. And when it comes to service delivery, they do not know what to do?

No. It is time Kenyans moved From Talking to Tasking. We must find solutions to our problems, just like God, The Almighty, when faced with similar situations, acted swiftly and conclusively.

God had an issue with the people during the time of Abraham, and he swept Sodom and Gomorrah clean. He was not pleased by the ineptitude of the then 'Kenya Government' in Sodom and Gomorrah.

Again, when the 'Kenya Government' of then became stupid, he sent Noah to build an Ark. The rest is history.

If God in all His wisdom could act such decisively, what makes Kenyans cow in fear? Yet most of us share in that history of creation. We can once and for all sort out the issue of these 220 charlatans and bring back sanity to our country.

The task begins with you and your vote.

It's eerie, and it's creepy: An ancient limestone Egyptian bust in the Field Museum is a dead bang look-a-like of singer Michael Jackson.

??The big question: Did Jackson, who went under the plastic surgeon's knife numerous times, pattern his ultimate appearance after the statue carving?

Click to enlarge image

'Jackson' at the Field

??Answer: "I have no idea whether Jackson ever visited the museum, but the similarity between the limestone statue of a woman -- which is about 3,000 years old -- and Jackson is astounding," said a museum spokesman.

??A history note: The limestone bust, which went on public display in 1988, was carved during the New Kingdom Period (1550 B.C. to 1050 B.C.); the same time period as Ramesses and King Tut.

??The shocker: In 1993, Jackson, whose face was then virtually identical to the statue, cut a video titled "Remember The Time," which he sets in ancient Egypt -- during the time of the Pharaoh Ramses. (In the video, actor Eddie Murphy plays Ramesses. It also features Magic Johnson and Iman.)

??The curiosity: The nose of the ancient Egyptian statue, which has been in the museum's private collection since 1899, is disintegrating. At the end of his life, Jackson's nose appeared to be disintegrating.

??Nasal notes: Famed plastic surgeon Dr. Steven Hoefflin, who claims he began performing nose surgery on Jackson in his teens-- told Jackson he was going to limit him to two surgeries. "If only he'd stopped there," Dr. Hoefflin told Entertainment Tonight.

??Backshot: The statue, which was not on view at the museum for almost 100 years, now resides near the exit of the "Inside Ancient Egypt" exhibit -- and has been bantered about on the blogs recently.

??Funshot: It just made a blogger's list of the "Top Ten Things You Didn't Know about Michael Jackson!"

 | 29480|2009-08-05 22:55:57|Asar Imhotep|Re: Response to Asar on the Supposed Name
 `KiKami`|
 Greetings Fari

Although I am a part of the Classical African Civilizations yahoogroup, I have not been able to post any information to the forum in quite some time. I hope you do not mind that I respond here on Ta-Seti as I know you still receive messages from this forum. I will reply to your comments from that forum.

GORE: The Egyptologists call it `Egyptian` as an adjective derived from `Egypt` derived from Aeiguptos, supposedly derived from Hikuptah. In the English language `Egypt` is the name of the country hence `Egyptian`. If we were speaking Arabic then to indicate an `Egyptian` we would say something like Misri. If we wanted to be authentic we would call the land Kem, or Kem-t and the language Ra-en-Kem following Budge`s Hieroglyphic Dictionary

ASAR: Again, I call the language kiKami because thats what people I know from the continent from Kenya and Tanzania call it. As mentioned before, according to the oral traditions of Rwanda, they call the country iKami and its people as Abanyakami. According to their oral traditions, what is called Ethiopia, Somalia and Eritrea was called i-Bwega. Rwanda was known as Buhanga. The southern part of Africa for the people in Rwanda including parts of Tanzania was called Buha (Buha bwa Ruguru). For more info about these ancient names, search out the works of Amani Athar. Amadou Hampate Ba has made the case for African oral history as accurate sources of information, so I trust African oral tradition as there is more than enough info to back up the claim. The mere possibility that the ancient Rwandians called the country i-Kami is strengthened when we examine cognates of KM in other African languages:

KaMa ?Black in Coptic,
KaMi ? Charcoal in Malenke Bambara
KaMbi ? Charcoal in Malenke - Bambara
iKaMa ? Blackened in Mbochi
KaMi ? Burnt in Bambara

KeMi ? Burnt in Mandjakou
KeM ? Burnt in Wolof
KiM ? Burnt in Mossi
KaMMi ? Dark in Dravidian (Tamil)
KaMMu ? Dark in Dravidian (Tamil)
KeMbou ? Charcoal in Pulaar
KeMpori ? Black in Vai
KeMatou ? Completely burnt in Mandjakou
Gꞑ Gye ? Black in Dogon (k > g)

As Pfouma notes, KM is not only related to the color black or charcoal as everyone believes, but represents Farm or Polity in African languages:

KM IN REGARDS TO A FARM

Km "*farm" ? Egyptian
Kaam "farm" ? Basa
Kaam "farm" ? Doai
eKaam "id." ? Esitako
Kam "id." ? Ngodzin
Kumadin "id." ? Runda

KM IN REGARDS TO A COUNTRY, CITY OR VILLAGE (k > g)

Km "*polis" ? Egyptian
Kꞑ "Egypt" vs kmom "black" ? Coptic
Kom "country, region" ? Balue
eKoma "city" ? Okam
Kꞑꞑb "rural area" ? Ndzem
Komwa "country, region" ? Bateteka
Kumi "country" ? Bakweri
-khumbi "nation" ? Zulu
Guma "country, region" ? Pende
Gumo "village, city" ? Dewoi
Gumi "rural area" ? Caga
-gumba "city" ? Lingala
Gomdji "land which grows warm and is healthy cultivated" ? Galla

The grounds are sufficient to call the language ki-kami.

GORE: Why would you want to call it what the Rwandans, or more likely a section of the Rwandans, call it when the Egyptians themselves had a name for their language and that name has come down to us? And this name for their language does not make use of the ki-prefix. If the Yoruba have a name for the Igbo but the Igbo themselves do not use this name should we use the Yoruba name or should we just call them Igbo? I notice that you do not propose calling Yoruba kiYoruba and Igbo kiIgbo. Why?

And how old are these Kem-based names amongst modern Africans? As old as the modern manifestation of the Afrocentric movement? Did these names predate Champollion`s decipherment? Because we wouldn`t want to give that impression if they didn`t now would we.

ASAR: The first part has been answered. To your second set of questions, as can be seen from the examples above, it is impossible for KM to have been spread recently into all of these languages via some mythological European teacher of Egyptology who went out spread the term to the masses of Black Africans. Any such suggestion would be ludicrous.

GORE: Of course you don`t make such a claim because you know that to do so you would have to show hundreds of reflexes of the Proto-Bantu reconstructions and you certainly have not shown this.

ASAR: Oscar Pfouma, Theophile Obenga, and M. Bilolo have written extensively on the kiKami and Bantu relations in morphology, phonology and lexical correspondences. This is why Dr. Bilolo refers to the ancient Egyptian language as ciKam. Anyone doubting the scholarship on the relatedness of Egyptian and Niger-Congo languages, which Bantu is a sub-branch, is encouraged to read Gilbert Ngoms article in Ankh #2 Avril 1993 La parente genetique entre legyptian pharaonique et la langues negro-africaines modernes: L'exemple du duala. I have identified, contrary to your expectations, at least 5 pro-Bantu prefixes in use in ancient Egyptian. As Blench has noted, to be related to Bantu doesnt require that all features of Bantu be present.

GORE: Present the evidence in an easily readable format where the reader ias at once struck by the correspondences between Proto-Bantu and Ancient Egyptian the same way I do with Proto-Bantu and Niger-Congo languages.

ASAR: For now, just read the material given by the scholars I named. For you to make a counter argument, you will need to publish in article form the necessary data to debunk their works. Ive already provided you with one source.

GORE: I don`t have to explain or explain away anything. It is you who has to explain the etymology and analysis of ntu, untu and muntu in Egyptian and how it is similar to the etymology and analysis of ntu, untu, and muntu in any Bantu language.

ASAR: Again, I will not act like you are not familiar with the history of Bantu languages and why they are categorized as such. The three major factors that categorize Bantu are the nasal N, the noun and verbal affixes, and the very word NTU to mean things or people. Ive already given the break-down of NTU and its etymology which you have not addressed. There is little to no chance that the word NTU in the Bantu languages and all instances of

NTU in the Egyptian, having the EXACT same meanings, are coincidence.

EGYPTIAN

NTU Those who (referring to people) Budge 400b (Bantu see below)

UNTU men, women, people, society, folks Budge 170a (Bantu umtufu, vanhu, bantfu, anu, utu (human nature), watu, umuntu, untu, aantu, abantu, vatu, batho, hanu, anthu, vantu UNTU things Budge 170a (bantu ntu, zintu,

GNBTW foreigner (Bantu Geni Batu foreigner, literally other people)

NTU Gods Budge 400b (Bantu ntu meaning gods)

NTU-TI One of the forms of Ra Budge 400b (Bantu meaning form)

MUNTU Warrior God of Hermonthis Budge 306a (bantu muntu meaning God)

MT seed, offspring, semen, progeny - Budge 331a (bantu mtu)

MTWT seed, progeny, semen Faulkner 121 (bantu - Mtowto, Mtoto)

PAWT beings, men Budge 230b (Bantu Pawatu)

MNH young man, boy, youth Budge 303a (Bantu Munhu)

MTY compatriot Budge 306b (Bantu Mtuye = a person belonging to him, a compatriot, his fellow person)

WMT mass of men Budge 164a (Bantu Kiswahili waume-tu)

At this point the argument for chance correspondence and the loaning of all of these words and its forms is pretty much laid to rest.

GORE: Presenting a case for a Niger-Congo relationship does not take much time. Just show as many cognates between PB and Ijo, the most senior branching in Niger-Congo that is accepted by all Niger-Congo experts, and the most distant from Bantu, between PB and Egyptian, or Ra-en-Kem if you prefer.

ASAR: If relatedness was based strictly on vocabulary, then English would be considered a latin language. Chance similarities between two or more languages do not obey any system, meaning there is no regularity be mere chance or at random. The fact that these terms obey the same laws in Bantu for the same sounding words (agglutination and prefixation) demonstrates that this is not chance.

Secondly, Obenga notes in his article Morphological Comparisons Between Ancient Egyptian and Dagara (translated from the French):

Chance cannot explain similarities observed not on isolated cases but on series. Egyptian is closer to Dagara, a modern black african language than assyrian, although contemporary. Whether or not we have reconstructed earlier states of dagara, the genetic relationship between dagara and egyptian is still there, demonstrable and their common ancestor can be reconstructed. This is reconstruction that proves a relationship, not all this fictional earlier states, like "proto-bantu". Here are the two reasons why:

-there is no hierarchy in the comparison and in the classification: the sanskrit, even though very useful is not superior to greek in the indo-european field;

-the germanic branch is not "closer" to indo-european than slavic or iranian branches.

The "proto-bantu" is just a convincing hypothesis, but is still only a reconstruction. To use this reconstruction to reconstruct the common ancestor of egyptian and bantu is "to play" with two reconstructions. To do well, one must also reconstruct proto egyptian, to compare it with proto-bantu. To result in what? And how to deal with african languages that are not bantu languages in this bantu/egyptian comparison? Proto-germanic (so does proto-bantu) never proved alone indo-european (in the same way, proto-bantu cannot prove alone the genetic relationship between egyptian, coptic and other modern black african languages). One has to be very blind to get into this mess that will never manage to reconstruct the common ancestor of egyptian and all the other black african languages.

The goal is the reconstruction of the common ancestor, as it has been done for indo-european, semitic, etc. Africanists, who are often poor comparatists, misguide african researchers who are methodologically weak, to erroneous methods that are presented as logical inventions, whereas their premises are completely false.

Again, my paper was to demonstrate the agglutinative nature of the bi and triliteral roots in the ancient Egyptian language. The argument linguists make to try and connect Egyptian (kiKamì) to the Semetic, Afro-Asiatic languages is by arguing for consonant compatibility restrictions of bi and triliteral roots. The assumption is that the consonant cluster cannot be broken down into smaller morphemes, thus making a case for a Afrasan relationship. But as Ferg and I have demonstrated on a consistent basis, that Egyptian is an agglutinative language which is one of the morphological features of the Niger-Kordofanian languages. I have provided clear and demonstratable instances of related vocabulary in Egyptian and Bantu AND its agglutinative properties for the terms.

What you have to do, and have failed to do, is to debunk the notion that Egyptian is an agglutinative language. You have to prove that the bi and triliteral words can NOT be broken down into smaller morphemes with meaning. That has yet to be done by you and I await your analysis on that point. The agglutinative nature of the language is just ONE morphological feature used to make the case for its relationship with the Niger-Congo languages.

Greetings all.

I've been looking into Meroitic and Bantu cognates for some time now. Here is a paper I wrote a while ago. I am including a PDF version for your perusal. The Bantu word KADI, a woman or wife is highly significant. There are two parts to the investigation. This is part 1
Part 2 in PDF will follow part 1. It is the latest findings.

Came across this and thought it might be interesting for the forum. I think I posted something similar before, but I don't remember. So if this is a repeat, I apologize.

I cried for the young children of all colors who may live their life feeling like a misfit, feeling like no one understands their perspective, or their soul.

What a burden to carry.

As a mother, I cried for Katherine Jackson because no mother should ever bury a child. Period. And I think about all the pain, tears and sleepless nights that she must have endured seeing her baby boy in inner pain, seeing him struggle with his self-esteem, and his insecurities and to know he often felt unloved

even while the world loved him deeply. How does it feel to think that the unconditional love we give as mothers just isn ' t enough to make our children feel whole? I wonder if she still suffers thinking, "what more could I have done?" Even moms of music legends aren ' t immune to mommy guilt, I suppose. When Rev. Al Sharpton ("who always delivers one" awesome "funeral speech") said to Michael ' s children, "Your daddy was not strange...It was strange what your Daddy had to deal with," I thought of all the "strange" things of the world that my children will have to deal with. Better yet, the things I hope they won ' t ever have to deal with anymore.

And as a mother raising a young black boy, I feel recommitted and yet a little confused as to how to make sure my son is sure enough within himself to take on the world. Es pecially a "strange" one. To love himself enough to know that even when the world doesn ' t understand you, tries to force you into its mold or treats you unkindly, you are still beautiful, strong and Black. How do I do that?

Today, I am taking back "childhood" as an inalienable right for every brown little one. In a world, that makes children into booty-shaking, mini-adults long before their time, I ' m reclaiming the playful, innocent, run-around-outside, childhood as the key ingredient in raising confident adults. Second, I will not rest until my little black boy, MY Michael, knows that his broad nose is beautiful, his chocolately brown skin is beautiful, and his thick hair is beautiful.

And nothing or no one can ever take that away from him.

"Now ain ' t we bad? And ain ' t we black? And ain ' t we fine?"

With all due respect! I have layperson questions:

At first this all apperas very neat and good except that this does not explain the Great Sphinx or the Great Pyramid or finds farther south along the Nile, whichall seem to predate these assertions by hundreds if not thousands of years... or is this previously recordeddata accurate or logical? I would like to know how all this stacks up together. Is there further light on these questions? Specifically the dates which other authorities have previously set forth. Why is there such disagreement?

Exodus From Drying Sahara Gave Rise to Pharaohs, Study Says
Sean Markey
July 20, 2006

The pharaohs of ancient Egypt owed their existence to prehistoric climate change in the eastern Sahara, according to an exhaustive study of archaeological data that bolsters this theory.

Starting at about 8500 B.C., researchers say, broad swaths of what are now Egypt, Chad, Libya, and Sudan experienced a "sudden onset of humid conditions." (See a map of Africa.)

For centuries the region supported savannahs full of wildlife, lush acacia forests, and areas so swampy they were uninhabitable.

During this time the prehistoric peoples of the eastern Sahara followed the rains to keep pace with the most hospitable ecosystems.

But around 5300 B.C. this climate-driven environmental abundance started to decline, and most humans began leaving the increasingly arid region.

"Around 5,500 to 6,000 years ago the Egyptian Sahara became so dry that nobody could survive there," said Stefan Krüger, a geoarchaeologist at the University of Cologne in Germany and study co-author.

Without rain, rivers, or the ephemeral desert streams known as waddis, vegetation became sparse, and people had to leave the desert or die, Kröner says.

Members of this skilled human population settled near the Nile River, giving rise to the first pharaonic cultures in Egypt (related feature: sample and download Egyptian music).

Gift of Pottery

The new study, which appears online today on the Science Express Web site, is based on painstaking research that combines new radiocarbon dating of about 500 artifacts from the region with data from past studies.

Kröner and study co-author Rudolph Kuper also collected geological climate data from countless ancient lakebeds, rain pools, and rivers.

Over the course of 30 years the researchers labored for months at a time in deserts where daytime temperatures sometimes topped 120 to 140F (50 to 60C).

The information collected allowed the scientists to piece together a picture of the ancient climate, environment, and migration of prehistoric peoples in the eastern Sahara over the past 12,000 years.

Among their findings, the researchers provide further evidence that the human exodus from the desert about 5,000 years ago is what laid the foundation for the first pharaohs' rule.

"Egypt is a gift of the Nile, as Herodotus said, as many people still think today," Kröner said, referring to the 5th-century B.C. Greek historian. "But at the same time also it is a gift of the desert."

"Without the tradition and the know-how and the knowledge of the desert, probably the Egyptian pharaonic civilization wouldn't have emerged as it did."

For example, pottery was first invented in Africa in the Egyptian Sahara at the same time, if not before, it was developed in the Middle East.

"[Pottery] is the first modern plastic, one of the most important inventions in human history," Kröner said.

The innovation provided the economic basis for the Neolithic revolution-a period of human cultural development about 5,200 to 4,500 years ago.

Pottery vessels enabled nomadic peoples to preserve and store food and thus settle down (photo: excavating ancient Egyptian pottery).

"It was really a very, very big step in human evolution, and this happened in the desert," Krüger said. "Only when the desert dried out, this condition was brought to the Nile Valley."

Adding Some Meat

In their study, Krüger and Kuper also describe how pastoral cultures moved along with the desert's southern march.

The ancient peoples' progress helped sow aspects of farming, particularly domestic animal herding, throughout Africa (explore an interactive atlas of the human journey out of Africa).

David Phillipson, a professor of African archaeology, directs the Museum of Archaeology and Anthropology at the University of Cambridge in England.

The study "adds a great deal of meat and detail to something which has been envisaged for a little while," he said.

"And it's extremely useful to have this, because it enormously increases the amount of basic data on which the conclusions are drawn.

"As the Sahara dried and became less suited and eventually unsuited to habitation, people ultimately had to move out, whether it be southward or to the east into the Nile Valley," Phillipson said.

"And this [study] helps [us] to understand the apparent rather sudden development of intensive settlement by sophisticated societies in the Nile Valley 'round about five or six thousand years ago."

This does not appear to be Ms. Angelou's writing, and there is not legitimate publishing of it anywhere online.

Maya Angelou has got to be the most amazingly misquoted poet in the history of Black people.

I've never seen anything like it.

Add to all this there does not seem to be real corroboration but rather just enough conflict to cause suspicions: again the dates... even between these two studies - conducted side-by-side in the field?

Ancient Cemetery Found; Brings "Green Sahara" to LifeChristine Dell'Amore

National Geographic News

August 14, 2008

Dinosaur hunters have stumbled across the largest and oldest Stone Age cemetery in the Sahara desert.

Paleontologist Paul Sereno and his team were scouring the rocks between harsh dunes in northern Niger in 2000 when they stumbled across the graveyard, on the shores of a long-gone lake. (See photos.)

The scientists eventually uncovered 200 burials of two vastly different cultures that span five thousand years-the first time such a site has been found in one place.

Called Gobero, the area is a uniquely preserved record of human habitation and burials from the Kiffian (7700 to 6200 B.C.) and the Tenerian (5200 to 2500 B.C.) cultures, says a new study led by Sereno of the University of

The "watershed" find also offers a new window into how these tribes lived and buried their dead during the extreme Holocene period, when a grassy Sahara dried up in the world's largest desert.

Coming across such a site "sends a tingle up your spine," said Sereno, a National Geographic explorer-in-residence. (The National Geographic Society owns National Geographic News.)

"You're not looking at [dinosaurs], you're looking at your own species."

One of the most striking discoveries was what the research team calls the "Stone Age Embrace": A woman, possibly a mother, and two children laid to rest holding hands, arms outstretched toward each other, on a bed of flowers.

Sereno and colleagues have also made several dinosaur discoveries in the region, including the bizarre cow-like dino Nigersaurus and the bus-size SuperCroc.

Green Desert

A wobble in Earth's orbit-along with other environmental factors that occurred about 12,000 years ago-brought intense monsoons to the Sahara, greening the desert and attracting a wave of human inhabitants, according to Sereno and colleagues.

Scientists already knew that the hunter-gatherer Kiffian occupied the region during a temperate phase. Between 6200 and 5200 B.C., one of the most severe climatic fluxes in that period's history desiccated the land and forced people out, the authors say. Soon afterward a second group arrived, the Tenerian.

But evidence of such population shifts rested largely on tool artifacts, with few human skeletons to analyze-until now. Radiocarbon dating of the bones has provided an "outstanding record" of the ancient Saharans, Sereno said.

Exodus From Drying Sahara Gave Rise to Pharaohs, Study Says (July 20, 2006)
Stone Age Cemetery, Artifacts Unearthed in Sahara (October 26, 2005)
"Green Sahara" in National Geographic Magazine (September 2008)

"We have the Green Sahara written in those sand dunes, and the people who lived in it," he added.

Skeleton Clues

The team discovered that the older group, the Kiffian, were buried with harpoon points and bone fishhooks, along with 6-foot (1.8-meter) Nile perch skeletons.

The presence of the fish bones and tools suggested the lake water was deeper around 7000 B.C., though probably no more than ten feet deep (three meters), Sereno said. The bones of catfish and tilapia in Tenerian burials suggest the lake was shallower later in the Holocene.

A ridge on a male Kiffian thighbone also told bioarchaeologist Chris Stojanowski of Arizona State University that the people—who ranged from six feet two inches (185 centimeters) to six feet eight inches (203 centimeters) tall—had huge leg muscles, likely from a high-protein diet and strenuous lifestyle.

The Tenerian thighbone, on the other hand, had a smaller ridge, indicating a smaller build. To adapt to an arid climate, Tenerians had a more diverse palate, including clams, fish, and savanna animals, the study says.

Stefan Krüger, of the Institute of Prehistoric Archaeology at the University of Cologne, finds the site impressive.

But he points out that it is a single location situated in a unique landscape at the foot of the Aï Mountains, and shouldn't be linked to broader ancient climatic changes in the Sahara.

"Reasons behind an interruption in local human occupation of the region may have been related to a variety of socioeconomic or cultural changes, and not necessarily to general climatic deterioration throughout the Sahara," he said.

Krüger doubts there will be much support for the theory of a thousand-year break in rainfall throughout the entire Sahara around 6200 to 5200 B.C.

But Sereno said that the general climate record, bolstered by lake-core samples and solid animal and pollen evidence, points to this "arid interruption" period that separates the Kiffian and Tenerian.

The new study appears today in the journal PLoS One.

Stone Age Embrace

Grave goods, such as bones or tusks from wild animals—including warthogs, crocodiles, and hippos, many of which roam southern Africa today—ceramics, and ivory and shell ornaments were also found, shedding light on funerary rituals.

Perhaps most incredible was the 2006 discovery the Stone Age Embrace-a Tenerian woman facing the remains of two young children, their arms posed and hands interlaced. Pollen remnants from underneath the skeletons shows the dead had been laid on a bed of flowers. "This is a landmark burial-there's nothing like it in prehistory," Sereno said.

Though the site has provided a wealth of insights into the little-studied cultures, mysteries still persist, Sereno says.

Most puzzling is how the Tenerian dug new graves alongside the Kiffian dead without disturbing them-an "absolutely remarkable" feat, Sereno said.

The graves were also, for the most part, not clustered according to tribe-suggesting that the graves may have been marked, Arizona State's Stojanowski said.

But it's obvious why the two cultures likely buried their dead at Gobero: It was the "Daytona Beach of the Holocene," Sereno said.

"It was a strip of obviously desirable real estate that stuck out into the lake," he said-an ideal place to spot fish and incoming animals.

10th August 2009

I accuse the press

As Philip Ochieng would say, I accuse the press for our current state of affairs in our country. I do not want to point an accusing finger, but I want to state facts as they are.

There is a lot of goodness taking place all over the land, yet, they are never given coverage, to bring such happenings to the attention of Kenyans and the world at large. Instead, our journalists and media houses are more concerned in reporting to us and flooding our houses with the conveyor belt open mouth policy of our politicians.

For the last 46 years, our open mouth conveyor belt politicians have been advising us on everything, and our journalists know this, and in all those 46 years, with all this advice and knowledge, Kenya has had a steady decline. At the same time, our politicians with their conveyor belt open mouth policy have become some of the richest individuals in the world.

And yet, they are the best news items for our journalists and politicians.

The problem is, our journalists are mercenary. They report for reward. If you do not pay them, you do not get covered. And they are at the top shouting for transparency and good governance while they fall in for the ill gotten wealth from our conveyor belt open mouth policy politicians.

It is time Kenyans moved From Talking to Tasking. We must put our journalists to task. Or still, we must ignore them. They are a syndicate in joint enterprise with our politicians to perpetually consign Kenya to the dogs. Are the journalists so incapable to note that our politicians have been advising us for the last 46 years and nothing seems to have happened?

Are our journalists such daft?

No. They are part of the conveyor belt open mouth policy that advocates for news coverage for the highest offer. It does not matter even if your advice leads Kenya to ruins, so long as you can pay the journalists, you will be covered.

Just watch the way our talk show journalist handle these conveyor belt open mouth policy politicians when they appear on talk shows. Are you convinced the journalist do not have the right questions to ask them?

No. It is always a charade. They are handled with kids gloves over issues that they had rehearsed at some point. I do not believe our journalist do not share in the Kenyan problems!

They are in business and they must make their profits. The company must make some profits and the individual journalist must make out a living. It does not matter how.

Kenyans must take note of this and ignore both the journalist and the politician. They are a breed unto darkness.

Man Oketch,

You had a good recipe but you overcooked the food. What you write here is, to be very generous with you, only 0.6% true.

The culprit with media houses the world over is a monster called EDITORIAL POLICY - the owner's keyhole worldview that directs the hand of the editor with a balcony worldview. That's the tool of corruption in the media, and no journalist of whatever faith and fighting spirit can get over it. (May be you should read my play Voice of the People and see how this plays out to silence the real voice of the people so that the official distorted voice can be heard.)

Then there are the advertising interests and the PR firms, all with the power to kill stories. These three kill 99% of the stories that don't make it to the Press.

There are also real life business considerations like the amount of space available, timeliness, etc. that may kill off another 0.4%, leaving the rogue journalist with power over another 0.6%.

Now, what is disturbingly a uniquely Kenyan issue is our media's continued posturing as a neutral entity while it is not. It has political interests to push just like you and me do, yet it deceives us that it is neutral. I long for the day it will openly take sides in the political divide so we know for example that the Standard/KTN axis supports Odhiambo Okech, while the Nation/NTV roots for Okiya Omtatah Okioti. Press neutrality is NADA!

Regards,

OOokoiti

I've only had a scant review of it and it looks promising. I can't think of anything off hand that deals with Mr. Rilly's reconstruction of the term SA or *SUN for milk or breast, but if your Bantu references are correct, we may need to broaden our scope to find the answer to a Bantu cognate (if it exist) for the term yer, era, or ira dealing with milk.

It would seem that the Bantu terms for milk, MA-SIWA or MA-ZIWA would actually refer to a container of life giving waters. I say that because I am drafting up a manuscript currently titled The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani in which, in one section, I discuss the possible origin of the myth of the NU or NWN and the NILE river deriving from lake NYANZA in central east Africa.

I argue that the myth is speaking about the Egyptians origins in many respects. But anyway, the word NYANZA is two words: NYUA (water) and NZA (za) lake, pond, etc. It is usually translated as Great Waters. Among the Zulu they call it lake NYASSA, so SA would definitely refer to a lake or the body that holds the water. It may refer to a large, hollow "cup" that holds living giving waters.

I would argue you may have to look towards the nurturing aspect of the term (breast being the source of nurturing for the young) as I am connecting with lake NYANZA whose (milk) is the nile river and of course the people are its children.

So we may have to look at it different and look for words that represent large containers of liquid or something like that. It may be fruitful.

Greetings all.

I've been looking into Meroitic and Bantu cognates for some time now. Here is a paper I wrote a while ago.

I am including a PDF version for your perusal. The Bantu word KADI, a woman or wife is highly significant. There are two parts to the investigation. This is part 1

Part 2 in PDF will follow part 1. It is the latest findings.

Friends of KCDN,

We are very pleased to announce some positive changes at KCDN. Visit our blogspot for <http://kcdnkomarockswatch.blogspot.com>

Secondly, we are happy that Eco-challenge, a division of Total Kenya Ltd will be joining us on 5th September for the Greening of Nairobi East where we will clean the Komarock Canal and plant trees along the same.

We are also happy with the other players who have indicated their support for us for this day;

- 1] Mr. Otieno R Sungu; 100 seedlings
- 2] Bishop Dr Julius Mbagaya; Kshs 3,000.00
- 3] Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite; seedlings
- 4] Infill Academy [Dr Thitie]; seedlings
- 5] Residents; labour
- 6]

All the children in the KCDN Child Support Initiative and their parents/Guardians will participate in this clean up.

As we confirm more participants and co-sponsors, we want to appeal to all of us, it is our time; let us move From Talking to Tasking. Let us come in large numbers with whatever equipments we can marshall and help clean this Canal.

As a country, we have talked for so long, let us now stop talking and engage in positiveness.

Our thanks and appreciation to all Friends of KCDN.

Hutuapo Asar!

I cannot open your Pdf file on Osiris. I keep getting an error message and the word saying 'from d.yimg.com' Do you know what this stands for. I've looked for it on Google but it did not make any sense... Trying to sort it.

Thanks for the input. I agree with your analysis, the concept of nurturing. Examining the Bantu word BERE,milk, breast, it does seem to have the concept of nurturing hidden in the ending of the word.

The Shona-Bantu word RERA means to nurse or bring up a child. This is similar to the Kiswahili-Bantu form LEA or REA. So the Bantu word could be a combination of BE+ RE?

However, good news, we don't need to prove ourselves any further. A few days ago after sending the article I was determined to find a Bantu word which matched the Meroitic word for milk. After all the Nilo-Saharan people, Nilotic people have always associated themselves with Bantu people. Oral traditions states that the Nilotic and Bantu people always existed together as a people (proof in Kenya) and came together from Egypt on foot or canoe. The Gi-Kuyu word for milk is IRIA. This follows closely the Meroitic word for milk YER. I'm so pleased to have discovered this word.

So Claude Rilly's table is now almost complete having found the Gi-Kuyu word IRIA, milk. The only other word is APEDE-MK, the Meroitic God which I am currently working on.

Have you read Felix Chami's book on 'The unity of African history'. He has a good chapter on page 61 - 76 analysing the words you mention and dealing with word etymologies. Perhaps it might give you a little more information for your book. Incidentally the Proto-Bantu word DIBA means milk and water. So here again the same concept exists. Somo

Well said Oba Kabaila,

The time for one-dimensional eurocentrist's types of thinking and patterns in our ways of life have come and gone. As Afrocentric and Afroasiatic peoples we must return to our own biological, psychological, mental and spiritual patterns in life which biological pattern is in accordance with nature and is itself a force of nature.

Developing the institutions of a Afrocentric/Afroasiatic way of life in the form of Organized Society should be the work ( the only work ) of all of our black american schools, businesses, churches, groups, communities and organizations now.

Thanks for sharing this information and I still urge all concerned black americans to check out the National African-American Congress( N.A.A.C. Forum ) at :

Thanks for this great video.

If all this info checks out,specifically the patents for both the "invention/synthesis" of HIV/AIDS and its cure, then a lot of folks, big and small (politicians, scientists, etc.), will have beenfound guiltyof the biggest genocide in history. I think we need to to distibute copies to all the medical speciaslists we know. That's what I plan to do.

Well said Oba Kabaila,

The time for one-dimensional eurocentrist's types of thinking and patterns in our ways of life have come and gone. As Afrocentric and Afroasiatic peoples we must return to our own biological, psychological, mental and spiritual patterns in life which biological pattern is in accordance with nature and is itself a force of nature.

Developing the institutions of a Afrocentric/ Afroasiatic way of life in the form of Organized Society should be the work ( the only work ) of all of our black american schools, businesses, churches, groups, communities and organizations now.

Thanks for sharing this information and I still urge all concerned black americans to check out the National African-American Congress( N.A.A.C. Forum ) at :

Vaccine Action: Cover Letter

DOZENS OF EXPERTS AND WORLD LEADERS REBUKE FEDERAL FLU VACCINATIONS AND QUARANTINE CAMPS CITING RISKS AND UNPROVEN BENEFITS

This letter delivers urgent notice that dozens of health experts, religious leaders, and world leading scientists are condemning governments worldwide for going along with pharmaceutical industry-influenced plans to inject people with poorly-tested toxic vaccines this flu season based on fears of pandemic swine flu.

1. The flu vaccines are questionably effective, dangerous, insufficiently tested, and potentially lethal.

Substantive research shows all flu vaccinations have little to no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.

Side effects from vaccine fillers and adjuvants especially squalene include a variety of debilitating auto-immune diseases and a significant percentage of deaths. Squalene, condemned congressional investigators in 2004, is indicated as the primary cause of tens of thousands of deaths, and hundreds of thousands of chronic cases of Gulf War-related illnesses.

Besides squalene, other vaccine ingredients include: animal tissues, viral proteins, foreign DNA and RNA, formaldehyde, live genetically-engineered viruses, and mercury that has been scientifically linked to skyrocketing rates of autism in children.

Significant evidence, including genetic sequencing analysis, proves the circulating swine flu sourced from man-made outbreaks, is from collaborating government and vaccine-industry laboratories.

2. Mandatory vaccinations and quarantines violate human rights and US Constitutional mandates including religious freedoms and compensation required when anyones property, including natural body immunity, is taken.

Those who refuse the live virus swine flu vaccination may be jailed or held indefinitely in private-industry administered internment camps directed by FEMA.

Government officials have increased demand for flu vaccines, and public compliance with vaccination policies using fear and propaganda consistent with military psychological operations. The U.S. Government classifies the avian flu as a biological weapon, and administers biodefense as a national security operation.

3. Alternative and complementary individual care options, including proven disease prevention strategies, are being grossly neglected by government health officials.

Through building a healthy immune system using vitamin supplements, herbs, immune-building medicinal mushrooms, nano-silvers, oxygenation therapies, a healthy diet, proper hydration, and adequate rest, people do not result to toxic vaccinations for any type of flu prevention.

Scientific evidence has shown one to three Vitamin C IVs of 50,000 gm gives 100% relief from this or any flu.

GOOD NEWS: According to several constitutional legal authorities, the Federal Government and WHO cannot legally mandate vaccines for small town America at the state level, they can only recommend it. The US Constitution provides for each state to decide whether or not to allow religious, philosophical, and medical exemptions, or to allow self-quarantine at a location of personal choice. It is your responsibility to tell local county, township, and state officials what you choose.

ACT NOW: Use a template letter to write your local and state representatives, urging them to support your right to religious, philosophical, and medical exemptions as well as your right to self-quarantine in a location of your choice.

READ MORE: The following letter is a full scientifically documented article, which explains all of these points in detail and is available for you to share through the links below. This letter will empower you to speak at town meetings, county councils, and to local state representatives to protect your rights, your children, and your grandchildren by creating laws that will protect against what some people feel is genocidal abuse by agencies whom some believe are aligned with the attempt to create a One World Government, such as WHO, U.N., and the Federal Governors who are overstepping their powers.

Particular sections in the following letter we recommend reading are: the Eleven Point Summary, Brief Summary, One Sentence Summary, and all of Point Eleven (which outlines the next steps to take, as this is an action letter that requests your thoughtful participation).

Vaccine Action Letter: Summary

A HARD LOOK AT MANDATORY LIVE VIRUS VACCINATIONS

WHATS REALITY AND WHAT TO DO

11 POINT SUMMARY:

1. The proposed swine flu squalene adjuvant live virus vaccination is neither adequately or sufficiently tested, nor proven effective or safe; it is uninsurable, can stimulate the onset of a variety of debilitating auto-immune diseases, and is a serious assault on the immune system.
2. The swine flu vaccine contains dangerous & life-threatening fillers, including adjuvants such as squalene, animal tissues, which may include pig tissue, viral and bacterial proteins, and live viruses all of which contain pig DNA.
3. Live viruses have a history of lethal danger, disease, and are contagious. Secondary Spread of live viruses from those vaccinated with a live virus lasting up to three weeks is a well-known fact.
4. The swine flu appears to have been laboratory generated and designed to have its dangerous effects amplified by the use of all the available swine flu vaccines.
5. The United States government classifies the bird flu virus as a biological weapon.
6. If the government intent is to make the live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu vaccination mandatory for all Americans, it is a violation of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States.
7. Analysis from the British Medical Journal article titled, Influenza Vaccination: Policy Versus Evidence, presents evidence from a systematic review based on a meta-analysis of all the research that shows inactivated vaccines have little or no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.
8. Those who refuse the live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu and regular flu vaccinations may be jailed or held indefinitely in internment camps established by states or FEMA because the so called swine flu pandemic has been, as far as we are concerned, unnecessarily classified as a Level 6 Pandemic, potentially allowing international law to override the United States Constitution to justify American martial law and detention for vaccine refusers.
9. Attempts by the United States government to increase the demand for flu vaccinations through fear are explicitly revealed in a classified, private CDC (Center for Disease Control) sponsor conference for vaccine manufacturer executives entitled 7-step Recipes to Increase Demand for Flu Vaccination.

10. The best way to be protected from any flu including the H1N1 live virus swine flu is to have a healthy immune system by living a natural, earth-connected way of being, which includes: organic, plant-source-only foods, supplements including nano-silver, vitamin C, A, and D, medicinal immune-building mushrooms and herbs, and specific aromatherapy oils. Physicians of the State of Arizona Board of Homeopathic and Integrated Medicine Society have found that usually one to three Vitamin C IVs of 50,000 milligrams will give 100% relief from this or any flu in the instance one actually gets the flu. Other effective treatments include nano-silvers and Oxygen Treatment Therapy (OTT). This is a safe, less expensive, simple, and more effective treatment as compared to Tamiflu (Tamiflu, although supposedly designed for the antiviral effect, is a psychotropic drug that has significant brain and nervous system side effects, which are toxic and debilitating). These healthy approaches have been historically proven to be far more safe and effective than generated vaccines, which have truly never been scientifically proven to be either safe or effective except for building the economic pockets of the vaccine companies. In other words, there are strong international and national vested interests on many levels backing these inadequately tested, dangerous, and ineffective vaccines. These vested interest groups are not exactly concerned about your health.

11. We have options and we can create more. It is important that we all take a stand while we are still healthy enough to be standing.

BRIEF SUMMARY:

There are two reasonable questions that must be asked: (1) Is the swine flu live virus squalene adjuvant vaccine safe and effective, and if so, (2) will vaccinating 95% or more of the general population provide any more protection for the whole population? If both of these questions were answered in the affirmative, then we would have a reasonable justification for mandatory vaccinations. However, the overwhelming scientific data suggests just the opposite. The live virus swine flu has not been adequately tested, proven safe or effective, is non-insurable, and because of the well-known phenomena of Secondary Transmission of live virus vaccines (meaning it can be contagious), it may actually increase the transmission of the virus.

This live virus vaccine has 2.3 times more genetic mutability, and added adjuvant toxicity than a natural virus because it includes squalene. Squalene has significant autoimmune inflammatory effects, and general severe autoimmune effects, which are a significant potential threat to the health of the individual. According to congressional hearings in 2004, squalene was considered the main cause of 300,000 GIs with Gulf War Syndrome who are now applying for complete disability. Aside from the horrendous, misery and ill health created by the Gulf War Syndrome, based on our understanding of the 1918 flu pandemic (which some significant scientific work has suggested was precipitated by the water-oil adjuvant that was part of the typhus vaccine and unknowingly given to the soldiers to protect against typhus), it appears that the water-oil adjuvant in combination with the Spanish Flu was the main precipitator of the millions of deaths that occurred. Research at that time, which was limited because they didn't even know about viruses, suggests that the high percentage of deaths in soldiers (healthy young men) was connected to the adjuvant, which gave them a hyper-immune, autoimmune response and cytokine storm (strong inflammatory reaction) 3 to 6 months after receiving the vaccine. This explains why so many of them died from hemorrhagic pneumonia, activated by the viral flu. The use of squalene as an adjuvant in the vaccine, which causes severe health symptoms on its own, could actually mirror the whole 1918 scenario. The interaction of the flu and the hyperimmune autoimmune imbalance response to the squalene (a water-oil adjuvant) could theoretically pre-dispose people who receive the vaccine with this live virus in it to mimic the actual pandemic called the Spanish Flu of 1918. Please understand that this deadly synergy of squalene and the live virus in a vaccine is theoretical and there is no proof that this is the potential case, except the research on the actual cause of the 1918 Spanish Flu. However, this just adds to the potential risk of a squalene-based live virus swine flu vaccination.

According to the British Medical Journal article titled, Influenza Vaccination: Policy Versus Evidence, evidence from a systematic review based on a meta-analysis of all the research shows vaccines have little or no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.

In other words, the benefit to risk ratio is extremely poor from a scientific point of view. In answering the second part of the question, all the vaccine studies to date show that vaccinating 95% or more of a population does not make a difference in stopping outbreaks of the particular disease people were vaccinated for. In fact, based on the scientific evidence, mass mandatory vaccinations with a highly mutable live virus could actually activate a real and lethal pandemic rather than prevent it. Therefore, from a purely scientific perspective, there is no valid reason for mandatory vaccinations. For this reason we believe that all people have a constitutional, religious, philosophical, and medical right to the freedom of choice of whether or not to be vaccinated.

In essence, as confirmed by veteran US Constitutional attorney Larry Becraft, there is no basis in statutory law for state official mandates, county cooperation, or public compliance, in-so-far-as forced vaccinations and/or quarantines, even during officially declared epidemics or pandemics. Presidential executive orders lack the legal power to force or enforce vaccination and/or quarantine mandates on the American people. Likewise, state statutes and administrative rules and regulations pertaining to compulsory vaccinations and quarantines advanced by health departments shall be prohibited as violations of fundamental human rights, religious freedoms, and just compensation for personal property secured by the US Constitution. Given these conclusions, it is official malfeasance for state and federal health officials to advance such unconstitutional policies and engage such procedures. Furthermore, health officials may be held accountable for gross criminal negligence: engaging in broadcasting flu warnings, using the news media to relay deadly predictions of pandemic morbidity and mortality, or otherwise sensitizing people to promote compliance with vaccination or forced quarantines while grossly neglecting their mental health and quality of life; increasing anxiety, phobia, and depression, and causing severe economic damages from the medical, psychosocial, and behavioral impacts of these public health malpractices. In other words no one has any constitutional authority at the Federal or State level to enforce mandatory vaccinations. However, waiting until legal suits are filed afterwards is not an option because irreversible damage may be done by then to our global family. The State officials are more vulnerable to official malfeasance. In other words, lawsuits on one level also have the immediate power to veto Federal mandates of forced vaccinations. At the state level we have protection from Federal mandates...and in practical reality we have more personal access to state politicians to get them to vote against any Federal mandates, as they are more directly accountable to the public. For further information, please see:

ONE SENTENCE SUMMARY:

The overwhelming scientific studies and research do not in any way support the action of mandatory flu, squalene adjuvant, live virus vaccination; to do so might result in the desecration of a significant amount of Gods creation of humanity on planet earth; the science strongly suggests that mandatory vaccinations are both immoral and ethically illegal (ethics that are core in the Judaic-Christian system) and this mandatory vaccination violates the basic Ten Commandments in at least 6 ways: Thou shall not murder, steal, lie, bear false witness, engage in idol worship (money and power), envy or covet.

We also recommend reading Vaccine Safety Manual by Neil Miller for additional scientific information on the subject as well as Cochrane collaboration/influenza studies, which show virtually no benefit to the flu vaccines. Also check Oct. 6 BMJ, Dec 2006 New England Journal of Medicine, and Feb. 2005 Archives of Internal Medicine. <http://thinktwice.com/>

Vaccine Action Letter: Expanded Research

Potential Vaccination Risks

Dear Parents and Grandparents, We are writing this letter as concerned parents, grandparents, physicians, health professionals, and clergy for the health and well-being of our children, grandchildren, and also ourselves. Everything reported here, either from direct scientific papers or explicit written reports by reputable leaders, is based on fact not rumor or myth. The scientific research below, which suggests the upcoming live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu vaccination may be compromising to the health and well-being of you and your loved ones, is overwhelming. The costs including life-threatening, life-crippling side effects and death are high; the theoretical benefits are questionable at best. Our interest is that you have enough valid scientific data to make an informed choice in the best interest of the health of yourself and your children. The decision of whether or not to vaccinate is a personal one. Every parent should be allowed full freedom to accept or reject vaccines for their children and themselves. We should be allowed the privilege of informed consent, the same as with any medical procedure that includes the possibility of adverse reactions. Parents are ultimately responsible for their own health and the health of their children.

At issue is what we consider to be the serious deception and general misinformation about the safety of the impending live virus swine flu vaccine, which is neither adequately tested nor safe, although the so-called researchers have publicly declared it safer than the regular flu vaccine before even beginning the testing process. They may be right in that the regular flu vaccine was anything but safe. There were an average of 8,364 adverse reactions to the flu vaccine reported to the federal government in 2007 and 2008. The Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS) is a passive reporting system, notorious for under-representing true reaction rates. Passive reporting systems may capture just 1 percent or less of true damage to recipients of pharmaceutical drugs (as noted by David Kessler, former head of the FDA). Based on the VAERS data, calculations suggest an average of 850,000 life threatening, life crippling side effects, or deaths associated with all vaccinations given per year based on an extrapolation of the CDC data. Dr. Marie-Paule Kieny, Director of the Initiative for Vaccine Research at the World Health Organization (WHO) Headquarters, even stated herself that vaccines do induce adverse reactions and this can be the case as well for adjuvanted vaccines and non-adjuvanted vaccines. She also said the vaccine safety data is, for certain populations, significantly lacking; and for quite a few populations, there is no data at all to verify the safety of vaccines including children, those over 65, pregnant mothers, and asthmatics.

Identification- through-Imagination.

The battles of the Egyptians may have been over decades or centuries, but without any ancient text to identify who they were fighting, the 'experts' declare all enemies of the Egyptians to be 'Hyksos'

Evidence through imagination, I guess !

No where in the accounts of Ahmose, is Avaris ever identified as "the capital of the Hyksos" this hog wash, is more concoctions based on imagination, instead of hieroglyphs.

The conflicts at Avaris are not tied to any other conflicts through Egyptian hieroglyphics, nor are the enemy at Avaris ever identified as 'Hyksos'

The text in the accounts of Ahmose does indicate the naval battles. The rivers that come from the Mediterranean sea are the doors to the northern cities of Egypt.

Unless the hieroglyphs actually identify any one specifically, the wind of the 'experts' is the same if it comes from their mouth or the back of their pants. The information left by the Egyptians are in the hieroglyphs, and the fabrications of the 'experts' is but a fart in the wind.

Looks like Ahmose spent a lot of time fighting in naval battles. The entry point of these invaders was not through the Sinai, from Canaan, but it was on the river that flows from the sea.

Remember the whole story of 'Hyksos' were they were farmers/shepherds that came to settle in Egypt. To believe the battles at Avaris was with the 'Hyksos', you would have to believe a bunch of farmers/herders settled in Egypt, then formed a fleet of ships to battle the Egyptians.. Duh

Friends of KCDN,

If it could take you to fuel at Total, you would be fueling for a worthy cause.

Mr. Robert Mutuma from Eco Challenge, a division of Total Kenya Ltd was at KCDN today in the morning and we went with him to view the Komarock Canal to enable him determine how Total Kenya Ltd could be of technical support.

In the process, I learnt a lot.

Now, the challenge begins; our role as a community in encouraging and supporting environmental conservation. We also expect some positive response and support from the Ministry of Environment and Mineral Resources since the Minister will be our Guest of Honour for the day. We also expect the support of the City Council of Nairobi.

At KCDN, we are mobilizing the 1950 children in the KCDN Child Support Initiative, their parents and guardians, the youth and the residents into action. With the support from Total Kenya Ltd and Eco Challenge, and all those other players of goodwill, and of course with your support, we will all come out in large numbers on 5th September 2009 and swing into action.

We will all be moving From Talking to Tasking, and we invite all your collective support. We need 2000 T shirts, we need to print 10,000 mobilization fliers, and we need airtime. If you can join us in this process, we will be appreciative to receiving your support.

This is how we stand as at now;

- Total Kenya Ltd/Eco Challenge
- Mr Otieno Sungu; 100 seedlings
- Bishop Dr Julius Mbagaya; Kshs 3,000.00
- Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite; seedlings
- Infill Academy [Dr Thitie]; seedlings
- Youth and residents and Friends of KCDN; labour

We are looking forward to all soiling our hands on 5th September in support of our environment.

To enable us fuel environmental conservation, fuel Total.

What we have learnt first-hand from our brothers and sisters from the Congo is that the massacre of Afrikan people is tied directly to the plundering of the natural resources which are sold on the white market to major corporations and consumed by customers on all 6 inhabitable continents.

The Congo has vast wealth of minerals, particularly diamonds, coltan, cassiterite, tin, and copper. One of these minerals in particular, Coltan, short for Columbite-tantalite, is essential for the power-storing parts of cell phones, nuclear reactors, play stations, and computer chips. Coltan is increasingly exploited in the mountains in the conflict torn eastern part of the country. The Rwandan and Ugandan backed rebels have primary control over the ore and are reaping huge profits which maintain and finance the protracted war. It is estimated that the Rwandan army made $20 million per month mining coltan in 2000, and the people got bullets to the head, chopped up, raped, and watched their children dragged off to become child-soldiers and sextoys. It is vital to understand that this money, this $20+ million made by Rwanda, not to mention Uganda and other groups, came from consumers like you and I. Yes, we are helping to finance the destruction of Afrikan people and the destruction of the very heart of Afrika. So goes the heart, so goes the body. Coltan is necessary for the high-tech industry and as demand increases, motivation to end the destruction of The Congo decreases.

You can help stem the demand for this mineral Coltan by participating in and spreading the word on the sustained BOYCOTT which began July 30th, 2009 against the purchase of new electronics with an emphasis on cellphones, all things computerized, computers, ipods, play stations, digital cameras, etc. From now on, your inquiry and purchase of refurbished electronic items can slow down the excavation of raw materials from The Congo until proper action is taken in the international court of law.

You can make this very SMALL sacrifice and have a very

HUGE impact on the murderous low-down, dirty activity of mining this ore. As you

You're welcome

The key to understanding the deities of Ancient Egypt is 1) many of them are just different aspects of each other or extended meanings personified for emphasis and 2) the saying "Know thyself and thou shalt know the gods" is a LITERAL statement.

All of the gods correspond to a component part of the body. Study the human body and you will KNOW the gods of ancient Egypt. If one pays attention the myths, besides dealing with character development, are books of medical treatment and health.

A lot of these texts were written by "medical students." That's the key. But of course, all facets of life are included in these stories beyond health and it is ingenious the way they wove it all together.

I hope you were able to get the document via the link to the yahoogroups.

As far as your rendering of BE + RE meaning breast milk, it should be noted that the general name for CHILD in the Niger-Congo languages is BI or BE. The word BE + RE would seem to indicate "to nurse a child" or "that which nurses a child" or something along those lines.

I haven't read Chimi's book, but I will be sure to put it on my immediate list of books to purchase.

Doing more research into Osiris, it is clear that he is associated with the pineal gland of the body. I am also researching to see if there is a connection between Lake Nyassa and the pineal gland or the mind, and the Nile river being a channel of the melanin secretions. There is evidence to support this and may be far fetched for some.

The key is understanding that in African spiritual traditions, the "ancestral realm" is not some underground place, but literally inside the mind. I will prove this linguistically and with texts from the Yoruba, Kongo-bantu, Zulu-bantu and Egyptian spiritual systems. This makes me reevaluate the whole "Ta-Netcher" thing. I am discovering that the "upper and lower" or "two lands" are not lands at all as I have suspected, but concepts that deal with the mind.

We have to do a new evaluation on what KMT is as KMT has nothing to do with the "land" of Egypt. This will be proven in the later work on Ancestors. The key is the majority of the time KMT is mentioned in Egyptian texts is stories that are "myths." That is a big key. Secondly, the name KMT doesn't appear in Egyptian texts until the 10th or 11th dynasty.

I remember a priest from Nigeria telling me that a lot of people who you read about in ancient Egyptian texts did not exist. I was skeptical at first but now I'm starting to see that that might be true. My old roommate Dr. Kmt Shockely who teaches out in Mason University told me when we first met that the first time he met Dr. Ben and introduced himself as KMT, he told me Dr. Ben said, "You don't exist." Meaning the name he is associating himself with is not what he thinks it is. Dr. Ben is an initiate in the Ethiopian traditions and he would have access to knowledge the public doesn't. I think I can prove Dr. Ben right in this area.

Hutuapo Asar!

I cannot open your Pdf file on Osiris. I keep getting an error message and the word saying 'from d.yimg.com' Do you know what this stands for. I've looked for it on Google but it did not make any sense... Trying to sort it.

Thanks for the input. I agree with your analysis, the concept of nurturing. Examining the Bantu word BERE, milk, breast, it does seem to have the concept of nurturing hidden in the ending of the word.

The Shona-Bantu word RERA means to nurse or bring up a child. This is similar to the Kiswahili-Bantu form LEA or REA. So the Bantu word could be a combination of BE+ RE?

However, good news, we don't need to prove ourselves any further. A few days ago after sending the article I was determined to find a Bantu word which matched the Meroitic word for milk. After all the Nilo-Saharan people, Nilotic people have always associated themselves with Bantu people. Oral traditions states that the Nilotic and Bantu people always existed together as a people (proof in Kenya) and came together from Egypt on foot or canoe. The Gi-Kuyu word for milk is IRIA. This follows closely the Meroitic word for milk YER. I'm so pleased to have discovered this word.

So Claude Rilly's table is now almost complete having found the Gi-Kuyu word IRIA, milk. The only other word is APEDE-MK, the Meroitic God which I am currently working on.

Have you read Felix Chami's book on 'The unity of African history'. He has a good chapter on page 61-76 analysing the words you mention and dealing with word etymologies. Perhaps it might give you a little more information for your book. Incidentally the Proto-Bantu word DIBA means milk and water. So here again the same concept exists. Somo

I've only had a scant review of it and it looks promising. I can't think of anything off hand deals with Mr. Rilly's reconstruction of the term SA or *SUN for milk or breast, but if you Bantu references are correct, we may need to broaden our scope to find the answer to a Ba cognate (if it exist) for the term yer, era, or ira dealing with milk.

It would seem that the Bantu terms for milk, MA-SIWA or MA-ZIWA would actually refer to a container of life giving waters. I say that because I am drafting up a manuscript currently titled The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani in which, in one section, I discuss the probable origin of the myth of the NU or NWN and the NILE river deriving from lake NYANZA in central east Africa.

I argue that the myth is speaking about the Egyptians origins in many respects. But anyway word NYANZA is two words: NYUA (water) and NZA (za) lake, pond, etc. It is usually translated as Great Waters. Among the Zulu they call it lake NYASSA, so SA would definitely refer to a lake or the body that holds the water. It may refer to a large, hollow "cup" that holds living giving waters.

I would argue you may have to look towards the nurturing aspect of the term (breast being the source of nurturing for the young) as I am connecting with lake NYANZA whose (milk) is the Nile river and of course the people are its children.

So we may have to look at it different and look for words that represent large containers of liquid or something like that. It may be fruitful.

Greetings all.

I've been looking into Meroitic and Bantu cognates for some time now. Here is a paper I wrote a while ago. I am including a PDF version for your perusal. The Bantu word KADI, a woman or wife is highly significant. There are two parts to the investigation. This is part 1
Part 2 in PDF will follow part 1. It is the latest findings.

DOZENS OF EXPERTS AND WORLD LEADERS REBUKE FEDERAL FLU VACCINATIONS AND QUARANTINE CAMPS CITING RISKS AND UNPROVEN BENEFITS

This letter delivers urgent notice that dozens of health experts, religious leaders, and world leading scientists are condemning governments worldwide for going along with pharmaceutical industry-influenced plans to inject people with poorly-tested toxic vaccines this flu season based on fears of pandemic swine flu.

1. The flu vaccines are questionably effective, dangerous, insufficiently tested, and potentially lethal.

Substantive research shows all flu vaccinations have little to no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.

Side effects from vaccine fillers and adjuvants especially squalene include a variety of debilitating auto-immune diseases and a significant percentage of deaths. Squalene, condemned congressional investigators in 2004, is indicated as the primary cause of tens of thousands of deaths, and hundreds of thousands of chronic cases of Gulf War-related illnesses.

Besides squalene, other vaccine ingredients include: animal tissues, viral proteins, foreign DNA and RNA, formaldehyde, live genetically-engineered viruses, and mercury that has been scientifically linked to skyrocketing rates of autism in children.

Significant evidence, including genetic sequencing analysis, proves the circulating swine flu sourced from man-made outbreaks, is from collaborating government and vaccine-industry laboratories.

2. Mandatory vaccinations and quarantines violate human rights and US Constitutional mandates including religious freedoms and compensation required when anyones property, including natural body immunity, is taken.

Those who refuse the live virus swine flu vaccination may be jailed or held indefinitely in private-industry administered internment camps directed by FEMA.

Government officials have increased demand for flu vaccines, and public compliance with vaccination policies using fear and propaganda consistent with military psychological operations.

The U.S. Government classifies the avian flu as a biological weapon, and administers biodefense as a national security operation.

3. Alternative and complementary individual care options, including proven disease prevention strategies, are being grossly neglected by government health officials.

Through building a healthy immune system using vitamin supplements, herbs, immune-building medicinal mushrooms, nano-silvers, oxygenation therapies, a healthy diet, proper hydration, and adequate rest, people do not result to toxic vaccinations for any type of flu prevention.

Scientific evidence has shown one to three Vitamin C IVs of 50,000 gm gives 100% relief from this or any flu.

GOOD NEWS: According to several constitutional legal authorities, the Federal Government and WHO cannot legally mandate vaccines for small town America at the state level, they can only recommend it. The US Constitution provides for each state to decide whether or not to allow religious, philosophical, and medical exemptions, or to allow self-quarantine at a location of personal choice. It is your responsibility to tell local county, township, and state officials what you choose.

ACT NOW: Use a template letter to write your local and state representatives, urging them to support your right to religious, philosophical, and medical exemptions as well as your right to self-quarantine in a location of your choice.

READ MORE: The following letter is a full scientifically documented article, which explains all of these points in detail and is available for you to share through the links below. This letter will empower you to speak at town meetings, county councils, and to local state representatives to protect your rights, your children, and your grandchildren by creating laws that will protect against what some people feel is genocidal abuse by agencies whom some believe are aligned with the attempt to create a One World Government, such as WHO, U.N., and the Federal Governors who are overstepping their powers.

Particular sections in the following letter we recommend reading are: the Eleven Point Summary, Brief Summary, One Sentence Summary, and all of Point Eleven (which outlines the next steps to take, as this is an action letter that requests your thoughtful participation) .

Vaccine Action Letter: Summary

A HARD LOOK AT MANDATORY LIVE VIRUS VACCINATIONS

WHATS REALITY AND WHAT TO DO

11 POINT SUMMARY:

1. The proposed swine flu squalene adjuvant live virus vaccination is neither adequately or sufficiently tested, nor proven effective or safe; it is uninsurable, can stimulate the onset of a variety of debilitating auto-immune diseases, and is a serious assault on the immune system.
2. The swine flu vaccine contains dangerous & life-threatening fillers, including adjuvants such as squalene, animal tissues, which may include pig tissue, viral and bacterial proteins, and live viruses all of which contain pig DNA.
3. Live viruses have a history of lethal danger, disease, and are contagious. Secondary Spread of live viruses from those vaccinated with a live virus lasting up to three weeks is a well-known fact.
4. The swine flu appears to have been laboratory generated and designed to have its dangerous effects amplified by the use of all the available swine flu vaccines.
5. The United States government classifies the bird flu virus as a biological weapon.
6. If the government intent is to make the live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu vaccination mandatory for all Americans, it is a violation of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States.
7. Analysis from the British Medical Journal article titled, Influenza Vaccination: Policy Versus Evidence, presents evidence from a systematic review based on a meta-analysis of all the research that shows inactivated vaccines have little or no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.
8. Those who refuse the live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu and regular flu vaccinations may be jailed or held indefinitely in internment camps established by states or FEMA because the so called swine flu pandemic has been, as far as we are concerned, unnecessarily classified as a Level 6 Pandemic, potentially allowing international law to override the United States Constitution to justify American martial law and detention for vaccine refusers.

9. Attempts by the United States government to increase the demand for flu vaccinations through fear are explicitly revealed in a classified, private CDC (Center for Disease Control) sponsor conference for vaccine manufacturer executives entitled 7-step Recipes to Increase Demand for Flu Vaccination.

10. The best way to be protected from any flu including the H1N1 live virus swine flu is to have a healthy immune system by living a natural, earth-connected way of being, which includes: organic, plant-source- only foods, supplements including nano-silver, vitamin C, A, and D, medicinal immune-building mushrooms and herbs, and specific aromatherapy oils. Physicians of the State of Arizona Board of Homeopathic and Integrated Medicine Society have found that usually one to three Vitamin C IVs of 50,000 milligrams will give 100% relief from this or any flu in the instance one actually gets the flu. Other effective treatments include nano-silvers and Oxygen Treatment Therapy (OTT). This is a safe, less expensive, simple, and more effective treatment as compared to Tamiflu (Tamiflu, although supposedly designed for the antiviral effect, is a psychotropic drug that has significant brain and nervous system side effects, which are toxic and debilitating) . These healthy approaches have been historically proven to be far more safe and effective than generated vaccines, which have truly never been scientifically proven to be either safe or effective except for building the economic pockets of the vaccine companies. In other words, there are strong international and national vested interests on many levels backing these inadequately tested, dangerous, and ineffective vaccines. These vested interest groups are not exactly concerned about your health.

11. We have options and we can create more. It is important that we all take a stand while we are still healthy enough to be standing.

BRIEF SUMMARY:

There are two reasonable questions that must be asked: (1) Is the swine flu live virus squalene adjuvant vaccine safe and effective, and if so, (2) will vaccinating 95% or more of the general population provide any more protection for the whole population? If both of these questions were answered in the affirmative, then we would have a reasonable justification for mandatory vaccinations. However, the overwhelming scientific data suggests just the opposite. The live virus swine flu has not been adequately tested, proven safe or effective, is non-insurable, and because of the well-known phenomena of Secondary Transmission of live virus vaccines (meaning it can be contagious), it may actually increase the transmission of the virus.

This live virus vaccine has 2.3 times more genetic mutability, and added adjuvant toxicity than a natural virus because it includes squalene. Squalene has significant autoimmune inflammatory effects, and general severe autoimmune effects, which are a significant potential threat to the health of the individual. According to congressional hearings in 2004, squalene was considered the main cause of 300,000 GIs with Gulf War Syndrome who are now applying for complete disability. Aside from the horrendous, misery and ill health created by the Gulf War Syndrome, based on our understanding of the 1918 flu pandemic (which some significant scientific work has suggested was precipitated by the water-oil adjuvant that was part of the typhus vaccine and unknowingly given to the soldiers to protect against typhus), it appears that the water-oil adjuvant in combination with the Spanish Flu was the main precipitator of the millions of deaths that occurred. Research at that time, which was limited because they didn't even know about viruses, suggests that the high percentage of deaths in soldiers (healthy young men) was connected to the adjuvant, which gave them a hyper-immune, auto-immune response and cytokine storm (strong inflammatory reaction) 3 to 6 months after receiving the vaccine. This explains why so many of them died from hemorrhagic pneumonia, activated by the viral flu. The use of squalene as an adjuvant in the vaccine, which causes severe health symptoms on its own, could actually mirror the whole 1918 scenario. The interaction of the flu and the hyperimmune auto-immune imbalance response to the squalene (a water-oil adjuvant) could theoretically pre-dispose people who receive the vaccine with this live virus in it to mimic the actual pandemic called the Spanish Flu of 1918. Please understand that this deadly synergy of squalene and the live virus in a vaccine is theoretical and there is no proof that this is the potential case, except the research on the actual cause of the 1918 Spanish Flu. However, this just adds to the potential risk of a squalene-based live virus swine flu vaccination.

According to the British Medical Journal article titled, Influenza Vaccination: Policy Versus Evidence, evidence from a systematic review based on a meta-analysis of all the research shows vaccines have little or no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.

In other words, the benefit to risk ratio is extremely poor from a scientific point of view. In answering the second part of the question, all the vaccine studies to date show that vaccinating 95% or more of a population does not make a difference in stopping outbreaks of the particular disease people were vaccinated for. In fact, based on the scientific evidence, mass mandatory vaccinations with a highly mutable live virus could actually activate a real and lethal pandemic rather than prevent it. Therefore, from a purely scientific perspective, there is no valid reason for mandatory vaccinations. For this reason we believe that all people have a constitutional, religious, philosophical, and medical right to the freedom of choice of whether or not to be vaccinated.

or public compliance, in-so-far-as forced vaccinations and/or quarantines, even during officially declared epidemics or pandemics. Presidential executive orders lack the legal power to force or enforce vaccination and/or quarantine mandates on the American people. Likewise, state statutes and administrative rules and regulations pertaining to compulsory vaccinations and quarantines advanced by health departments shall be prohibited as violations of fundamental human rights, religious freedoms, and just compensation for personal property secured by the US Constitution. Given these conclusions, it is official malfeasance for state and federal health officials to advance such unconstitutional policies and engage such procedures. Furthermore, health officials may be held accountable for gross criminal negligence: engaging in broadcasting flu warnings, using the news media to relay deadly predictions of pandemic morbidity and mortality, or otherwise sensitizing people to promote compliance with vaccination or forced quarantines while grossly neglecting their mental health and quality of life; increasing anxiety, phobia, and depression, and causing severe economic damages from the medical, psychosocial, and behavioral impacts of these public health malpractices. In other words no one has any constitutional authority at the Federal or State level to enforce mandatory vaccinations. However, waiting until legal suits are filed afterwards is not an option because irreversible damage may be done by then to our global family. The State officials are more vulnerable to official malfeasance. In other words, lawsuits on one level also have the immediate power to veto Federal mandates of forced vaccinations. At the state level we have protection from Federal mandates...and in practical reality we have more personal access to state politicians to get them to vote against any Federal mandates, as they are more directly accountable to the public. #### ONE SENTENCE SUMMARY:

The overwhelming scientific studies and research do not in any way support the action of mandatory flu, squalene adjuvant, live virus vaccination; to do so might result in the desecration of a significant amount of Gods creation of humanity on planet earth; the science strongly suggests that mandatory vaccinations are both immoral and ethically illegal (ethics that are core in the Judaic-Christian system) and this mandatory vaccination violates the basic Ten Commandments in at least 6 ways: Thou shall not murder, steal, lie, bear false witness, engage in idol worship (money and power), envy or covet.

Dear Parents and Grandparents, We are writing this letter as concerned parents, grandparents, physicians, health professionals, and clergy for the health and well-being of our children, grandchildren, and also ourselves. Everything reported here, either from direct scientific papers or explicit written reports by reputable leaders, is based on fact not rumor or myth. The scientific research below, which suggests the upcoming live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu vaccination may be compromising to the health and well-being of you and your loved ones, is overwhelming. The costs including life-threatening, life-crippling side effects and death are high; the theoretical benefits are questionable at best. Our interest is that you have enough valid scientific data to make an informed choice in the best interest of the health of yourself and your children. The decision of whether or not to vaccinate is a personal one. Every parent should be allowed full freedom to accept or reject vaccines for their children and themselves. We should be allowed the privilege of informed consent, the same as with any medical procedure that includes the possibility of adverse reactions. Parents are ultimately responsible for their own health and the health of their children.

At issue is what we consider to be the serious deception and general misinformation about the safety of the impending live virus swine flu vaccine, which is neither adequately tested nor safe, although the so-called researchers have publicly declared it safer than the regular flu vaccine before even beginning the testing process. They may be right in that the regular flu vaccine was anything but safe. There were an average of 8,364 adverse reactions to the flu vaccine reported to the federal government in 2007 and 2008. The Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS) is a passive reporting system, notorious for under-representing true reaction rates. Passive reporting systems may capture just 1 percent or less of true damage to recipients of pharmaceutical drugs (as noted by David Kessler, former head of the FDA). Based on the VAERS data, calculations suggest an average of 850,000 life threatening, life crippling side effects, or deaths associated with all vaccinations given per year based on an extrapolation of the CDC data. Dr. Marie-Paule Kieny, Director of the Initiative for Vaccine Research at the World Health Organization (WHO) Headquarters, even stated herself that vaccines do induce adverse reactions and this can be the case as well for adjuvanted vaccines and non-adjuvanted vaccines. She also said the vaccine safety data is, for certain populations, significantly lacking; and for quite a few populations, there is no data at all to verify the safety of vaccines including children, those over 65, pregnant mothers, and asthmatics.

Dr. Kieny actually says that she doesn't even know what the proportions of the ingredients are in the 4.9 billion vaccines they are about to inject into people. There have been no complete clinical trials for a medical product that is about to be administered on mass to pregnant women and children. There literally is no data for this vaccine as per its use in children, pregnant women, and asthmatics. There is a considerable amount of data with squalene in Gulf War vets receiving both an experimental anthrax vaccine and experimental HIV vaccine. It is highly associated with at least 300,000 vets who have made permanent claims for total disability. Animal research also supports these findings.

As reported in the Irish Times, the Lancet recently stated: Countries need to assess carefully the risks and benefits of the rapid approval of a human swine flu vaccine to avoid repeat of past problems with mass-vaccination. According to the London Evening Standard, WHO officials have warned that H1N1 vaccines may be unsafe. The Institute of Science and Society has said that the vaccines will be far more deadly than the swine flu, and that mass vaccinations are a recipe for disaster.

The new swine flu live virus vaccine could be more dangerous than "seasonal" flu vaccines because some of them are using new technologies, and all of them are being fast-tracked, reducing testing periods and safety requirements before licensing occurs. As mentioned earlier, the doctor responsible for overseeing the trials has already claimed the shot is "really as safe, actually if not safer," than previous flu vaccines. That's a curious statement considering he is still recruiting test subjects and the trials have not yet begun. This is anything but a scientific attitude and certainly does not inspire confidence in the found results especially if they are already predetermined.

2. The swine flu vaccine contains dangerous & life-threatening fillers, including adjuvants such as squalene, animal tissues, which may include pig tissue, viral and bacterial proteins, and live viruses all of which contain pig DNA.

The contents of this live swine flu virus vaccine injection are cause for concern. One of the most dangerous substances contained in this injection is squalene. There are over two-dozen animal studies that show squalene's ability to induce severe autoimmunity. Research at this point suggests squalene is heavily associated with the debilitating and life-destroying Gulf War Syndrome. Because of this, there is a serious risk of a Gulf War Syndrome outbreak amongst the vaccinated general public. Of course, this autoimmune syndrome will not show up after one week of human vaccine trials, nor will autism, Guillain-Barre syndrome

(a demyelization of the nervous system that can paralyze a person from the neck down), or an assortment of autoimmune disorders including type 1 diabetes. In one study of over 100,000 vaccinated children in Finland, there was a 147% increase in the rate of type 1 diabetes in those vaccinated. The lack of sufficient testing on this experimental live virus vaccine raises many concerns. There are no criteria on its efficacy or valid statistics to speak of. During the 1976 swine flu scare, the swine flu vaccine itself killed hundreds & sickened countless others, and had an unusually high rate of Guillain-Barre Syndrome associated with it.

Dr. Leonard Horowitz, author of Emerging Viruses: AIDS And Ebola: Nature, Accident or Intentional? says the swine-bird-human flu strain, reported to be found first in Mexico in late-March 2009, most likely came from Dr. James S. Robertson and his colleagues in association with the US Center for Disease Control (CDC) and vaccine manufacturer Novavax, Inc., which was ready to profit from the release. Nobody else takes H5N1 Asian-flu infected chickens, takes them to Europe, extracts their DNA, combines their proteins with H1N1 viruses from the 1918 Spanish flu isolate, additionally mixes in some swine-flu genes from pigs, then reverse engineers them to infect humans, he said. True Ott, PhD., N.D. also gives evidence of this being a laboratory generated virus, and associates the origin of this lab-generated flu with Novartis International AG, which happens to be the worlds largest multinational pharmaceutical company. He feels the key figure in making this lab-generated virus is Dr. Jeffrey Taubenberger. What is key to this understanding is that two researchers have made a very strong case for this being a laboratory-created virus.
<http://uncensored.co.nz/2009/04/30/dr-horowitz-mexicanswine-flu-made-in-lab/>

Some of the new H1N1 (swine flu) vaccines are going to be made by Novartis. These shots will probably be made in PER.C6 cells (human retina cells) and contain MF59, a potentially debilitating adjuvant. MF-59 is an oil-based adjuvant primarily composed of squalene. All rats injected with squalene (oil) adjuvants developed a disease that left them crippled, dragging their paralyzed hindquarters across their cages. Injected squalene can cause severe arthritis and severe immune responses, such as autoimmune arthritis and lupus.

LIST OF VACCINE FILLERS & ADJUVENTS: This list, officially administered by design with every vaccine provided to the public, in addition to the squalene that appears to be in this upcoming swine flu vaccine, is of great concern to many parents and grandparents, with the announcement that they will start vaccinating children and pregnant women first and then wait to see if there are too many adverse events (including seizures, neurological problems, and death).

In addition to the viral and bacterial RNA or DNA that is part of the vaccines, here are the fillers:

Aluminum hydroxide - directly linked to causing Alzheimer's disease

Aluminum phosphate - directly linked to causing Alzheimer's disease

Ammonium sulfate - an inorganic chemical compound used as fertilizer and "protein purifier"; known to cause kidney & liver damage, gastrointestinal dysfunctions

Amphotericin B - an "antifungal disinfectant" and anti-biotic, which damages the urinary tract, bowels, and heart functions

Animal tissues (a causal element for all the various auto-immune diseases associated with vaccination) : horse blood, rabbit brain, dog kidney, monkey kidney, chick embryo, chicken egg, duck egg, pig blood, Porcine (pig) pancreatic hydrolysate of casein (the pig protein/tissue is an additional objectionable issue for Jewish and Muslim people)

Calf (bovine) serum & fetal bovine serum (cow blood is recognized as a significant transmitter of Mad Cow Disease)

Betapropiolactone

Formaldehyde - used as "a preservative & disinfectant" , known to cause cancer, chronic bronchitis, eye irritation when exposed to the body's immune system

Formalin

Gelatin

Glycerol

Human diploid cells (originating from human aborted fetal tissue)

Hydrolyzed gelatin

Monosodium glutamate (MSG) - now known to cause cancer in humans, also linked to obesity

Neomycin (anti-biotic)

Neomycin sulfate (anti-biotic)

Phenol red indicator - a highly toxic disinfectant dye, attributed to liver, kidney, heart & respiratory damage

Phenoxyethanol (antifreeze) - proven to have extreme neurotoxic side effects

Potassium diphosphate

Potassium monophosphate

Polymyxin B

Polysorbate 20

Polysorbate 80 associated with infertility when injected

Residual MRC5 proteins

Sorbitol

Sucrose

Thimerosal (mercury) - a neurotoxin linked to psychological, neurological, & immunological problems especially autism. Nervous system damage (such as sub-acute sclerosing panencephalitis (SSPE), brachial plexitis, post-vaccinal encephalitis, transverse myelitis and peripheral neuropathies) , kidney disease, birth defects, dental problems, mood swings, mental changes, hallucinations, memory loss, and inability to concentrate can occur. Symptoms also include tremors, loss of dermal sensitivity, slurred speech, and in rare cases even death and paralysis. This additive alone was the catalyst for another recent Class Action Lawsuit organized by mothers of children born with autism & the many related behavioral disorders associated with it. Autism is now occurring at levels never seen before in history; depending on the state, its rate is now 1 in 67 to 1 in 150. The autism rates used to be 1 in 20,000. Mercury may also be associated with the significantly increased rates of senility and Alzheimers, which is associated with five or more successive flu vaccinations. Although most mercury (thimerosal) has been removed from childrens vaccines, it is still in all flu vaccines at toxic doses.

VERO cells, a continuous line of monkey kidney cells - linked to the SV-40 virus known to cause leukemia

Washed sheep red blood cells

THESE ADDITIVES ARE GIVEN TO OUR CHILDREN WITHOUT PUBLIC KNOWLEDGE OR CONSENT.

Whats the problem with this horrendous looking list? The problem is two-fold: (1) the adjuvants are added to increase inflammation and immune response in the system, and (2) the adjuvants are significantly detrimental to the overall welfare of the organisms, according to the neurosurgeon Russell Blaylock, M.D., an expert in this field. His research suggests the vaccinations may cause brain swelling and inflammation for up to two years. This alone would be enough to significantly disrupt the immune and endocrine systems, as well as increase senility, activate Alzheimers, and other brain dysfunctions. For example, Hugh Fudenberg, MD, Founder and Director of the Neuro Immuno Therapeutic Research Foundation, reported at the NVIC International Vaccine Conference in Arlington, Virginia in September 1997, that five consecutive seasonal (yearly) flu shots increases the risk of Alzheimers disease ten fold. Other devastating side effects of vaccines involve neurological damage, including encephalitis, transverse myelitis, peripheral nerve damage, autism, seizures, mental retardation, language delays, behavioral problems, multiple sclerosis, and SSPE (sub-acute sclerosing panencephalitis) . There is also significant animal research that supports Blaylocks findings.

The veterinary research has shown that vaccines can cause a wide range of brain and nervous system damage. In the Merck Manual it states, in regard to its own product, that vaccines can cause encephalitis: brain inflammation and damage. Merck states, Examples are the encephalitis following measles, chicken pox, rubella, small pox, vaccinia, and many other less well-defined viral infections.

Although dog and cat research doesn't necessarily mean it will be the same for humans, it is highly probable this animal research is revealing what is really happening with human vaccines. Because of this, there is much to learn by looking at the animal vaccine research. The following is a summary of some of this research.

In the Canine Health Concerns (CHC) study, reports show that 73.1% of the dogs developed short attention spans within three months of being vaccinated. 72% of the dogs were considered to be nervous and worrying within three months post vaccination. It is interesting that dogs can develop paralyzed rear legs and death shortly after a vaccine shot and that paresis is listed as a symptom of encephalitis in the Merck Manual. The Science of Vaccine Damage by Catherine O'Driscoll outlines results from several animal studies regarding the effects of vaccinations on dogs and cats as collaborated by a team at Purdue University School of Veterinary Medicine.

Vaccinated dogs in the produced study developed autoantibodies to their own biochemical protein structures, which included antibodies against fibronectin, laminin, DNA, albumin, cytochrome C, cardiolipin, and collagen. The fibronectin is involved in tissue repair, cell multiplication and growth, and the differentiation between tissues and organs. The vaccinated dogs also developed autoantibodies to laminin affecting adhesion, differentiation, spreading, and proliferation and moving of cells. What the vaccines are doing is disrupting the natural intelligence of the cells. The vaccinated dogs also developed autoantibodies to their own collagen, which is about one quarter of all the protein in the body and thus, in the CHC 1997 study of 4,000 dogs there was a much higher number of dogs developing mobility problems shortly after they were vaccinated. The dogs also developed autoantibodies to their own DNA.

The AVMA (American Veterinary Medical Association) Vaccine-Associated Feline Sarcoma Task Force conducted several studies to determine why 160,000 cats each year in the USA developed terminal cancer at their injection sites. Veterinarians around the world, as well as the British Government, have acknowledged the fact that cats do get vaccine-induced cancer. In August 2003 the Journal of Veterinary Medicine reported an Italian study that showed dogs also developed vaccine-induced cancer at their injection sites. It is no coincidence that vaccine-site cancer is a possible sequel to human vaccines. For example, Dr. Bernice Eddy, a microbiologist at the National Institutes of Health (NIH), has proven that both dead and live vaccines carry a monkey retrovirus (SV-40) that produces an inheritable cancer in experimental animals. It is unfortunate to note that this monkey retrovirus (SV-40), which is spread from human to human and from mother to child, also appears frequently in human cancer sites. In 1987, Dr. Hilleman, head of all vaccine production of Merck Pharmaceuticals, stunned the world with his public admissions that mass vaccination campaigns of the 1950s and 60s likely caused thousands of cancer deaths each year. This was due to the presence of SV-40. Doctors estimate that the virus was injected into tens of millions during the vaccination campaigns, including several million in Canada. It is also widely acknowledged that vaccines can cause a fast acting, usually fatal, disease called autoimmune haemolytic anaemia (AIHA). People may die from this in days. In the Merck Manual of Diagnosis and Therapy, even though Merck is a multinational vaccine manufacturer, it states that AIHA may be caused by modified live virus vaccines (MLV). The British Governments Working Group also acknowledged this.

The veterinary research also showed a connection between vaccine events and arthritis. Again, it is no accident that the New England Journal of Medicine reported it is possible to isolate the rubella virus from affected joints in children vaccinated against rubella. It also reported isolating viruses from the blood of women with prolonged arthritis following vaccination. In 2000, the CHCs 1997 findings indicated that polyarthritis and other diseases like amyloidosis, which affects organs in dogs, were linked to the combined vaccines given to dogs. The dog research also confirms our explanation of human autoimmune responses to vaccination because they also found that dogs produced antibodies against their own DNA and their own tissues, such as found in heart cells. When we look at this picture from a broader perspective, it is not too hard to show scientifically that vaccines can put people into an allergic state, which may range from mild to anaphylactic shock and death. There are also some individuals who have an inherited faulty B and T cell functioning and therefore are very susceptible to abnormal immune reactions to vaccinations. The Merck Manual warns that patients with or from families with genetically altered B and or T cell immune cell deficiency history should not receive live virus vaccines due to the severe rate and risk of infection. How is this going to work when vaccinations are mandated with no medical or religious exceptions? In other words, some of these B and T cells will manifest as food allergies, neurological deterioration, eczema and heart disease. A deranged immune response may lead to inflammatory conditions such as arthritis, colitis, pancreatitis, and a number of autoimmune diseases as well as cancer and leukemia. The more serious meaning of this is that people with these conditions can die if they receive these live virus vaccinations because their immune systems are not strong enough to handle viral assault from modified live virus vaccinations. Some veterinarians have actually said, I think that vaccines are leading killers of dogs and cats in America today.

A major mechanism, which is the explanation for these life-threatening autoimmune and inflammatory diseases, such as type 1 diabetes, severe rheumatism, Guillain-Barre, SIDS (sudden infant death syndrome), other autoimmune diseases, and death, is that all the foreign animal tissues in a vaccine can set off an autoimmune response, which is the cause of all of these diseases, which attack various organs and tissues according to ones genetic pre-disposition toward a particular inflammatory disease. What that means is these animal tissues are foreign antigens that the body responds to as antigens in an attempt to eliminate the foreign invaders. In essence, the immune system in essence creates an attack against these unhealthy invaders with its own antibodies. However, in the case of an autoimmune response, these foreign tissues create a cross reaction that ends up attacking our own organ tissues, which are similar to the animal tissues that were injected, such as attacking the beta cells of the pancreas, the brain cells, and the myelin sheaths. These two factors combined with the danger of a live virus create a potentially lethal effect.

SO WHAT IS THE PROBLEM WITH LIVE VIRUSES?

3. Live viruses have a history of lethal danger, disease, and are contagious. Secondary Spread of live viruses from those vaccinated with a live virus lasting up to three weeks is a well-known fact.

We have to understand that live virus vaccines have a history of danger and disease, especially of the disease that is targeted. For example, the live polio flu vaccine virus that was used from 1979 2000 was pulled off the market because the vaccine itself was considered to be the major cause of polio and as such, Dr. Salk, the inventor of the vaccine, admitted this to be the case.

The contagious power of a live virus vaccine is no longer new information. It is scientifically recognized that an attenuated live virus vaccine can be contagious. The scientific term for this is called Secondary Transmission. Translated into common language, it means if all the children are vaccinated with a live virus, the adults who haven't been vaccinated are significantly more likely to pick up the live virus from being in contact with children. The current science has found those who are injected with a live virus vaccine are releasing the live virus from their bodies for up to three weeks, contrary to the inaccurate theory that everyone needs to be vaccinated to stop an epidemic, which is a false and unproven justification. The real danger is the opposite. The live virus vaccinated people can infect everyone else.

There is also significant research to show that in populations that are 95% fully vaccinated, viral infection outbreaks still occur. This is extremely well documented with major communicable diseases such as measles and pertussis. For further information please see:
<http://thinktwice.com/7reasons.pdf> for <http://www.opposingviews.com/questions/should-schoolsrequire-that-children-be-vaccinated>.

Another piece of important information regarding the danger of live viruses was an informal clinical trial of the avian flu live virus vaccine on about 200 Polish vagrants, which resulted in 11 immediate deaths and 20 subsequent deaths. This amounted to about 15% of the test population that died. The doctors and nurses involved were charged with murder. This happened in 2008. It obviously makes the point that it is not an exaggeration to say that live virus vaccinations may be extremely dangerous and lethal.

We also saw this lethal effect in the 1960s and 1970s when Australian Aborigine infants began to mysteriously die at astonishing rates<sup>1</sup> of every 2 babies after being vaccinated. Archie Kalokerinos, M.D. eventually made the connection when he realized the babies were dying after being vaccinated against pertussis and other diseases. Heath officials had recently initiated a mass vaccination program to protect Aborigine babies; their deaths corresponded with the program. He wrote a book called Every Other One documenting this tragic and preventable event in detail.

Although this is not an analysis of vaccinations in general, it obviously leaks over into this discussion. This however, is a specific exploration of the potential dangers verses the minimal health benefits of live virus vaccines.

Although there are some valid humanitarian concerns, based on the pattern of the 1918 swine flu in which the flu came lightly in spring/summer and came back heavily in the fall, which may be fueling this push to vaccinate or go to prison consciousness, there are some very incriminating and questionable facts regarding the intentions behind this massive push. For example, Baxter International Incorporated was in the application process for supplying avian flu vaccinations to European countries in the event of an epidemic when they accidentally shipped live avian flu vaccines to 18 countries in Europe. A laboratory technician tested the Baxter Seasonal Flu vaccines sent to the Czech Republic and discovered that they were contaminated with a highly pathogenic version of the avian flu, which could have launched a global pandemic. The total amount of the pathogenic avian flu virus sent to these 18 countries was 72 kilograms (over 150 pounds), which is a lot. Because Level 3 precautions were in place, such contamination could not have happened accidentally according to experts in the field. In spite of this so-called accident, Baxter was rewarded with a lead role in developing, producing, and disseminating the swine flu vaccine for the labeled Level 6 pandemic.

It normally takes a minimum of 12-18 months to create a vaccine after a virus has been identified. How is it that Baxter Laboratories, after receiving the seed culture of the swine flu virus that was provided in May 2009, announced that they would have the vaccine ready by July of 2009. One can't help but question how they were able to do this in 2 months rather than the usual 12-18 months until we understand the reality of the situation. True Ott, PhD, ND points out that the patent for the Swine Flu vaccine on November 4th, 2005 by Novartis International AG was granted on February 19, 2009 before the Swine Flu pandemic even began. The US patent office granted US patent number 20090047353A for a Split Influenza Vaccine with Adjuvants. The so-called Swine Flu grabbing headlines today is actually a recombinant, or split influenza virus consisting of A-strain Bird-Flu (H5N1), Swine Flu (H1N1) and multiple strains of human flu (H3N2) the 1918 Killer Flu that killed untold millions of people.

According to True Ott, PhD, N.D., Dr. Jeffrey Taubenberger was quite likely the primary author of the Novartis Nov. 6, 2005 provisional patent application. On page 2, paragraph 32 of the patent publication it says, The influenza virus [that the invention vaccine is designed to protect against] may be a reassortant strain, and may have been obtained by reverse genetics techniques. Reverse genetics techniques allow influenza viruses with desired genome segments to be prepared in vitro using plasmids. The remnant of the paragraph then goes into very specific detail as to the actual mechanics of how the pandemic virus was actually created by Taubenberger's Ft. Detrick team. At the very least, the author of the patent application had to have studied Taubenberger's various published reports on his work at Detrick, for the wording and science is virtually verbatim. As Dr. True Ott points out, this paragraph is even more incriminating by the words may have been obtained. Who obtained this virus and for what reason was it obtained? With this detailed information as it's explained here, it appears that Novartis then sold the vaccine prototype to its subsidiary Baxter Laboratories and possibly other vaccine companies so they could have it ready for the fall. Great timing and a great financial move create a lab-generated virus and have the vaccines ready to go for phase 2 demands for a vaccine. The more serious issue for the health of the public may be, as Dr. Ott's evidence shows (<http://www.pandemicfluonline.com/>) that the Novartis vaccine material with the live virus and squalene adjuvant is designed to facilitate the further mutation of the pandemic into more lethal waves of increasingly virulent and deadly diseases, rather than curtail and limit the existing outbreak.

Other virus experts are aware that this Swine Flu is a laboratory-generated virus. This current swine flu is at best between 4-8% a match in terms of genetic material to its closest genetic relatives and there is no remotely close match in the public NIH databases. This implies that between 92-96% of the viral genetic code is from spliced laboratory genetic material from previous swine, avian, and 1918 human flu viruses. Aware of these insider facts, a significant number of virologists and other health professionals and scientists stated that this had to be produced in a laboratory and could not occur naturally. This includes Adrian Gibbs, the inventor of Tamiflu who has gone on record stating that the very metrics (nucleic acid ratios) as well as genetic history indicates that this virus is passed through eggs, i.e.: it was created in a laboratory situation. Other whistle blowers include world famous virologist, author, and masters in public health, Dr. Leonard Horowitz who has actually identified the highly probable laboratory location and the highly likely scientists who created it. Former NIH employee Alexander S. Jones has done a genetic analysis using data from Andrew Rambaut at the University of Edinburgh, which indicates that this virus is mutating approximately 2.3 times faster than any natural swine or avian flu virus has ever done. Although we do not have 100% evidence, for obvious reasons, the overwhelming proof is that this was a laboratory created virus. It is important to note that once a virus undergoes a significant mutation, the vaccine that was made for it is no longer designed for the mutated virus, assuming any clinical effect from the vaccine.

5. The United States government classifies the bird flu virus as a biological weapon.

According to the United States government, in its own export regulations, the bird flu virus has been classified as a biological weapon. Given the evidence, this so called swine flu is a bioengineered virus and therefore a component of a biological weapons system as defined by Section 175(a) of the BWATA (Biological Weapons Anti-Terrorism Act of 1989). It is designed like the bird flu to deliver toxins and microorganisms so to deliberately inflict disease and death on people, while being disguised as injections for prophylactic, protective, or other peaceful purposes. In other words, by their own definition the US accurately views live virus vaccines as potential tools for biological warfare, and in this context, restricts the export of untested, untried, and potentially lethal experimental vaccines as biological weapons to rogue nations. The obvious question is why would we attempt to force the same untested and untried potentially lethal live vaccine onto American citizens and particularly our children?

6. If the government intent is to make the live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu vaccination mandatory for all Americans, it is a violation of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States.

The push behind mandatory vaccinations for the live virus swine flu has reached the highest level in our nation. Although this plan did not start with President Obama, for whatever good or bad intentions, he announced to the public that every man, woman and child should receive the vaccine this fall along with seasonal flu shots. For the record, Obama said he believes vaccinations should be mandatory. Upping this pressure to recklessly vaccinate with an untested live virus vaccine is at best irresponsible as even the statistical scientific evaluation of the effectiveness of flu vaccines suggests all flu vaccinations have had negligible success up until this time. In a scientific review of the data titled: Are US Flu Death Figures More PR Than Science?, it says: CDC states that the historic 1968-9 Hong Kong Flu pandemic killed 34,000 Americans. At the same time, the CDC claims 36,000 Americans annually die from flu. As of August 2009, the swine flu has killed approximately 1,000 people worldwide, according to CNN, which is a lot less than 36,000. This is hardly a traditionally defined pandemic in terms of numbers, yet there has been a major media fear/panic, which preps the people to take this untested and potentially lethal flu vaccine without even a freedom of choice. An uninformed public without adequate compensation for damages, loss of property, life, liberty, or the pursuit of happiness required under the US Constitution, is not really acting with choice.

The U.S. Constitutional Amendment I states: Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. Amendment IV secures the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures; Amendment V states that No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law and Amendment VIII states, cruel and unusual punishment [shall not be] inflicted. In context of the U.S. Constitution, the health and natural immunological adequacy of the human body represents private property and is not to be taken or compromised for public use, without just compensation.

At this point live virus flu vaccinations are seen to be mandatory for children and most likely will become mandatory for all Americans with refusal possibly resulting in being put in internment camps. Federal health officials are starting to recommend that most Americans get three flu shots this fall: one regular flu shot and two doses of the live vaccine made against the new swine flu strain. School children who have never had a flu shot are targeted for four shots in the fall twice for seasonal flu, twice for pandemic swine flu. (July 15, 2009 news). This unprecedented Department of Health's 2009 flu response plan calls for people especially children to receive three or four different live flu virus vaccines simultaneously, which is especially dangerous considering the combining of laboratory-engineered live flu viruses in these vaccines with other viruses resident in the human body (such as seasonal influenza) have the potential be lethal, undermine natural immunity, and/or produce more auto-immune and other diseases in people locally and globally.

The question when considering any medical treatment is what are the risks versus the benefits? We need to look at potential benefits to this or any other flu vaccine to make a reasonable risk/benefit analysis. It is already clear the risks are too high are they balanced, or a secondary concern as compared to the benefits?

7. Analysis from the British Medical Journal article titled, Influenza Vaccination: Policy Versus Evidence, presents evidence from a systematic review based on a meta-analysis of all the research that shows inactivated vaccines have little or no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.

The science by our own CDC (Center of Disease Control) shows that flu vaccines are somewhere between 0-14% effective. Research in Israel shows they are 1% effective with a general lowering of the immune system. In general, the most thorough analysis on all the flu vaccine data was reported in the British Medical Journal article entitled Influenza Vaccination: Policy Versus Evidence, which gives evidence from a systematic review based on a metaanalysis of all the research showing that, inactivated vaccines have little or no effect on the effects measured. The paper states most studies are of poor methodological quality and little comparative evidence exists on the safety of these vaccines. It shows that in children under 2 years, inactivated vaccines had the same field efficacy as placebo. Similar results were found in an article from The Cochrane Database of Systematic Reviews. 2 (2008), titled, Vaccines for Preventing Influenza in Healthy Children where review of 51 studies involving more than 294,000 children, found there was no evidence that injecting children 6-24 months of age with a flu shot was any more effective than placebo. In children over 2 yrs, it was effective 33% of the time in preventing the flu.

In a study of 800 children with asthma, half were vaccinated and the other half did not receive the influenza vaccine. The two groups were compared with respect to clinic visits, emergency department (ED) visits, and hospitalizations for asthma. This study failed to provide evidence that the influenza vaccine prevents pediatric asthma exacerbations. (Effectiveness of influenza vaccine for the prevention of asthma exacerbations. Christly, C. et al. Arch Dis Child. 2004 Aug; 89(8): 734-5). The American Thoracic Society's 105th International Conference, May 15-20, 2009, San Diego quotes: The inactivated flu vaccine does not prevent influenza-related hospitalizations in children, especially the ones with asthma. In fact, children who get the flu vaccine are three times more at risk for hospitalization than children who do not get the vaccine.

Vaccines are also minimally effective for adults and the elderly. In a review of 48 reports (more than 66,000 adults), titled: Vaccines for preventing influenza in healthy adults from The Cochrane Database of Systematic Reviews. 1 (2006), it quotes, Vaccination of healthy adults only reduced risk of influenza by 6% and reduced the number of missed work days by less than one day (0.16) days. It did not change the number of people needing to go to hospital or take time off work. In a review of 64 studies over 98 flu seasons of elderly living in nursing homes, flu shots were non-significant for preventing the flu. For elderly living in the community, vaccines were not (significantly) effective against influenza or pneumonia according to Vaccines for preventing influenza in the elderly: The Cochrane Database of Systematic Reviews. 3(2006).

Efficacy is a difficult word because it can simply mean the stimulation of antibody production, but we are defining it in terms of protecting you against the flu, which is a practical clinical approach. We have ample clinical evidence and hundreds of testimonies which show that adequate vitamin A, vitamin D, vitamin C, as well as the use of medicinal herbs and mushrooms, can significantly reduce the occurrence of colds and flus far more effectively than a vaccine without all the potential serious side effects these vaccines can cause including death, Guillain-Barre syndrome (a demyelization of the nervous system that can paralyze a person from the neck down), rheumatoid arthritis, a variety of autoimmune diseases, type 1 diabetes, and autism. In other words, the risk/benefit analysis, which is how we normally assess these kinds of medical decisions, is horrendous. The risks are very high and the benefits are minimal and we have several options that are more safe and effective.

FIRST DO NO HARM. HIPPOCRATES

If you feel the risks are high and the actual scientific proof of benefits are low and therefore do not want to take the risk and prefer others around you do not take the risk (and increase the likelihood of spreading the live virus to you) there is another obstacle in the path to sovereignty over our own body and mind:

8. Those who refuse the live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu and regular flu vaccinations may be jailed or held indefinitely in internment camps established by states or FEMA because the so-called swine flu pandemic has been, as far as we are concerned, unnecessarily classified as a Level 6 Pandemic, potentially allowing international law to override the United States Constitution to justify American martial law and detention for vaccine refusers.

The United States Emergency Medical Powers Acts and Federal legislation, including the Patriot Acts I, II and III, the Biomedical Advanced Research and Development Authority (BARDA) and others provide for mandatory vaccination or drugging.

Dear Friends of KCDN,

Yesterday, we hosted Mr Robert Mutuma from Eco Challenge [a division of Total Kenya] at KCDN. Today, I was invited by the Director of Environment at the City Council of Nairobi to liaise with Ms Pauline Kimondo, the lady in charge of Embakasi area for a logistical and ground support.

I met with her and she confirmed that City Council of Nairobi will be in full attendance.

We are still talking to more players and corporates to join us on the 5th September 2009 to clean the Komarock Canal and plant some trees along the Canal. We are also inviting all members of KCDN to step forward and help us move From Talking to Tasking.

This is our society and it is us who will help make a difference.

Lastly, we are very optimistic that the Minister for Environment and Mineral Resources will be our Guest of Honour. We at KCDN are very appreciative that it is only Hon Michuki who acts resolutely and Kenyans can always see the result of his resolve.

So far, these are the teams that have confirmed participation and support;

- Total Kenya Ltd/Eco Challenge
- Mr Otieno Sungu; 100 seedlings
- Bishop Dr Julius Mbagaya; Kshs 3,000.00
- Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite; seedlings
- Infill Academy [Dr Thitie]; seedlings
- Youth and residents and Friends of KCDN; labour
- City Council of Nairobi

We are looking forward to an eventful day.

We have also attached a tentative programme for the day. It will be amended as we make further confirmations.

Many thanks and blessings,

Odhiambo T Oketch

From Talking to Tasking

12th August 2009

Friends of KCDN,

If it could take you to fuel at Total, you would be fueling for a worthy cause.

Mr. Robert Mutuma from Eco Challenge, a division of Total Kenya Ltd was at KCDN today in the morning and we went with him to view the Komarock Canal to enable him determine how Total Kenya Ltd could be of technical support.

In the process, I learnt a lot.

Now, the challenge begins; our role as a community in encouraging and supporting environmental conservation. We also expect some positive response and support from the Ministry of Environment and Mineral Resources since the Minister will be our Guest of Honour for the day. We also expect the support of the City Council of Nairobi.

At KCDN, we are mobilizing the 1950 children in the KCDN Child Support Initiative, their parents and guardians, the youth and the residents into action. With the support from Total Kenya Ltd and Eco Challenge, and all those other players of goodwill, and of course with your support, we will all come out in large numbers on 5th September 2009 and swing into action.

We will all be moving From Talking to Tasking, and we invite all your collective support. We need 2000 T shirts, we need to print 10,000 mobilization fliers, and we need airtime. If you can join us in this process, we will be appreciative to receiving your support.

This is how we stand as at now;

- Total Kenya Ltd/Eco Challenge
- Mr Otieno Sungu; 100 seedlings
- Bishop Dr Julius Mbagaya; Kshs 3,000.00
- Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite; seedlings
- Infill Academy [Dr Thitie]; seedlings
- Youth and residents and Friends of KCDN; labour

We are looking forward to all soiling our hands on 5th September in support of our environment.

To enable us fuel environmental conservation, fuel Total.

Yes thanks Asar,I did receive the PDF on Osiris.

I've read the contents of the paper and learnt a great deal about Youraba religion. The connections you make between Osiris and Oduduwa are quite revealing. I liked the concept of destiny.

In fact I have come across the concept of destiny in the Ankh symbol but sadly could not tie it down or argue it out in meaningful terms. I shall have to go over your explanations and see whether the connections between the Ankh and destiny are worth exploring.

As I said I could not make connections, as destiny is a rather abstract concept. However as you said the ORI can be understood as the spirit of consciousness and associated with the head which determines one's destiny or fate. The Ankh has a head and tail, and it is this concept I shall be working on. The Ankh as a symbol of a strap could represent the symbol for the tie of human consciousness, the tie of destiny.

I hope you were able to get the document via the link to the yahoo groups.

As far as your rendering of BE + RE meaning breast milk, it should be noted that the general name for CHILD in the Niger-Congo languages is BI or BE. The word BE + RE would seem to indicate "to nurse a child" or "that which nurses a child" or something along those lines.

I haven't read Chimi's book, but I will be sure to put it on my immediate list of books to purchase.

Doing more research into Osiris, it is clear that he is associated with the pineal gland of the body. I am also researching to see if there is a connection between Lake Nyassa and the pineal gland or the mind, and the Nile river being a channel of the melanin secretions. There is evidence to support this and may be far fetched for some.

The key is understanding that in African spiritual traditions, the "ancestral realm" is not some underground place, but literally inside the mind. I will prove this linguistically and with texts from the Yoruba, Kongo-bantu, Zulu-bantu and Egyptian spiritual systems. This makes me reevaluate the whole "Ta-Netzer" thing. I am discovering that the "upper and lower" or "two lands" are not lands at all as I have suspected, but concepts that deal with the mind.

We have to do a new evaluation on what KMT is as KMT has nothing to do with the "land" of Egypt. This will be proven in the later work on Ancestors. The key is the majority of the time KMT is mentioned in Egyptian texts is stories that are "myths." That is a big key. Secondly, the name KMT doesn't appear in Egyptian texts until the 10th or 11th dynasty.

I remember a priest from Nigeria telling me that a lot of people who you read about in ancient Egyptian texts did not exist. I was skeptical at first but now I'm starting to see that that might be true. My old roommate Dr. Kmt Shockely who teaches out in Mason University told me when we first met that the first time he met Dr. Ben and introduced himself as KMT, he told me Dr. Ben said, "You don't exist." Meaning the name he is associating himself with is not what he think it is. Dr. Ben is an initiate in the Ethiopian traditions and he would have access to knowledge the public doesn't. I think I can prove Dr. Ben right in this area.

Hutuapo Asar!

I cannot open your Pdf file on Osiris. I keep getting an error message and the word saying 'from d.yimg.com' Do you know what this stands for. I've looked for it on Google but it did not make any sense... Trying to sort it.

Thanks for the input. I agree with your analysis, the concept of nurturing. Examining the Bantu word BERE, milk, breast, it does seem to have the concept of nurturing hidden in the ending of the word.

The Shona-Bantu word RERA means to nurse or bring up a child. This is similar to the Kiswahili-Bantu form LEA or REA. So the Bantu word could be a combination of BE+ RE?

However, good news, we don't need to prove ourselves any further. A few days ago after sending the article I was determined to find a Bantu word which matched the Meroitic word for milk. After all the Nilo-Saharan people, Nilotic people have always associated themselves with Bantu people. Oral traditions states that the Nilotic and Bantu people always existed together as a people (proof in Kenya) and came together from Egypt on foot or canoe. The Gi-Kuyu word for milk is IRIA. This follows closely the Meroitic word for milk YER. I'm so pleased to have discovered this word.

So Claude Rilly's table is now almost complete having found the Gi-Kuyu word IRIA, milk. The only other word is APEDE-MK, the Meroitic God which I am currently working on.

Have you read Felix Chami's book on 'The unity of African history'. He has a good chapter on page 61 - 76 analysing the words you mention and dealing with word etymologies. Perhaps it might give you a little more information for your book. Incidentally the Proto-Bantu word DIBA means milk and water. So here again the same concept exists. Somo

I've only had a scant review of it and it looks promising. I can't think of anything off hand deals with Mr. Rilly's reconstruction of the term SA or *SUN for milk or breast, but if your Bantu references are correct, we may need to broaden our scope to find the answer to a Bantu cognate (if it exist) for the term yer, era, or ira dealing with milk.

It would seem that the Bantu terms for milk, MA-SIWA or MA-ZIWA would actually refer to a container of life giving waters. I say that because I am drafting up a manuscript currently title The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani in which, in one section, I discuss the possible origin of the myth of the NU or NWN and the NILE river deriving from lake NYANZA in central east Africa.

I argue that the myth is speaking about the Egyptians origins in many respects. But anyway, the word NYANZA is two words: NYUA (water) and NZA (za) lake, pond, etc. It is usually translated as Great Waters. Among the Zulu they call it lake NYASSA, so SA would definitely refer to a lake or the body that holds the water. It may refer to a large, hollow "cup" that holds living giving waters.

I would argue you may have to look towards the nurturing aspect of the term (breast being the source of nurturing for the young) as I am connecting with lake NYANZA whose (milk) is the Nile river and of course the people are its children.

So we may have to look at it different and look for words that represent large containers of liquid or something like that. It may be fruitful.

Greetings all.

I've been looking into Meroitic and Bantu cognates for some time now. Here is a paper I wrote a while ago. I am including a PDF version for your perusal. The Bantu word KADI, a woman or wife is highly significant. There are two parts to the investigation. This is part 1. Part 2 in PDF will follow part 1. It is the latest findings.
Somo

As we can see, this image consist of the w3s scepter, djd pillar and the ankh symbol. I know the djd symbol is connected to rulership. It corresponds to the Yoruba ADE which is commonly referred to as "crown" but is symbolic of royalty.

The w3s symbol is usually rendered to mean "power." I think this is in line with how African cultures use similar symbols. I have a friend out in Tanzania and I showed him the w3s symbol and he told me that is a sign for the head owner of a kraal where he is from. The only difference is they do not have the animal head as you can see. I can't remember the name for what they call it in Tanzania. But it is definitely a sign of authority (power).

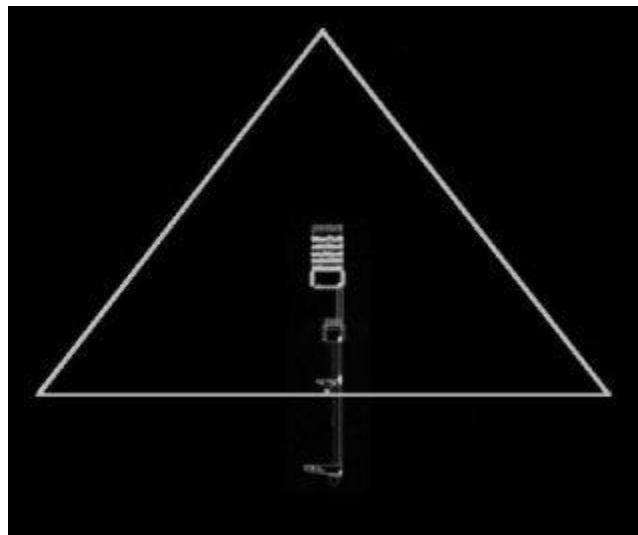

The ankh is always a kicker. But I am revising the paper and will demonstrate how these symbols all refer to the body. Let's examine the following image:

Knowing what we know about the "light" resting on the "crown" (top of the head) in Yoruba and Egyptian culture, one can only come to the conclusion that these are symbolic aspects of the body, in which the loop of the Ankh symbolizes the head. The djd is just as suspected is the spinal column.

In the revised paper I will demonstrate how the pyramids are symbolic of the mind, ancestors, spirits and the pineal gland. In African societies the pineal gland is given the shape of a triangle, although it is shaped more like a pinecone (thus pine-al gland). MR (pyramids) in Yoruba is called IMOLE which is another word for the ODU's in IFA. It means "house of light." It matches the same definition the Greeks called the pyramids when they said "House of Fire" and fire is light. Which lets me know that in the Bantu the word is actually UMURIRO or MRIO. Although you connected it with morning and wailing, the deeper symbolism of fire and ancestors seems to be the most dominant.

However, reviewing some literature from the Dagara people supports the notion of wailing to send off the dead to the ancestral realm and I will discuss that in full in the larger work The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

Shaft of the pyramids

1. "mummy" hieroglyph A53, (wi) "statue, likeness, form"

2. "djed" hieroglyph R11, (Dd) "be stable, enduring"

3. "pyramid" hieroglyph O24, (Mr) "pyramid, tomb"

I think you may have something. I have been trying to make sense of the following image:

The w3s symbol is usually rendered to mean "power." I think this is in line with how African cultures use similar symbols. I have a friend out in Tanzania and I showed him the w3s symbol and he told me that is a sign for the head owner of a kraal where he is from. The only difference is they do not have the animal head as you can see. I can't remember the name for what they call it in Tanzania. But it is definitely a sign of authority (power).

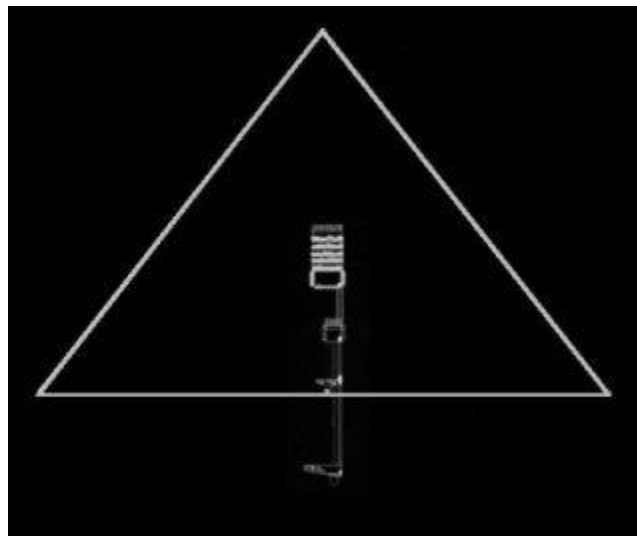

The ankh is always a kicker. But I am revising the paper and will demonstrate how these symbols all refer to the body. Let's examine the following image:

Knowing what we know about the "light" resting on the "crown" (top of the head) in Yoruba and Egyptian culture, one can only come to the conclusion that these are symbolic aspects of the body, in which the loop of the Ankh symbolizes the head. The djd is just as suspected is the spinal column.

In the revised paper I will demonstrate how the pyramids are symbolic of the mind, ancestors, spirits and the pineal gland. In African societies the pineal gland is given the shape of a triangle, although it is shaped more like a pinecone (thus pine-al gland). MR (pyramids) in Yoruba is called IMOLES which is another word for the ODU's in IFA. It means "house of light." It matches the same definition the Greeks called the pyramids when they said "House of Fire" and fire is light. Which lets me know that in the Bantu the word is actually UMURIRO or MRIO. Although you connected it with morning and wailing, the deeper symbolism of fire and ancestors seems to be the most dominant.

However, reviewing some literature from the Dagara people supports the notion of wailing to send off the dead to the ancestral realm and I will discuss that in full in the larger work The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

Shaft of the pyramids

1. "mummy" hieroglyph A53, (wi) "statue, likeness, form"

2. "djed" hieroglyph R11, (Dd) "be stable, enduring"

3. "pyramid" hieroglyph O24, (Mr) "pyramid, tomb"

Yes thanks Asar,I did receive the PDF on Osiris.

I've read the contents of the paper and learnt a great deal about Youraba religion. The connections you make between Osiris and Oduduwa are quite revealing. I liked the concept of destiny.

In fact I have come across the concept of destiny in the Ankh symbol but sadly could not tie it down or argue it out in meaningful terms. I shall have to go over your explanations and see whether the connections between the Ankh and destiny are worth exploring.

As I said I could not make connections, as destiny is a rather abstract concept. However as you said the ORI can be understood as the spirit of consciousness and associated with the head which determines one's destiny or fate. The Ankh has a head and tail, and it is this concept I shall be working on. The Ankh as a symbol of a strap could represent the symbol for the tie of human consciousness, the tie of destiny.

As far as your rendering of BE + RE meaning breast milk, it should be noted that name for CHILD in the Niger-Congo languages is BI or BE. The word BE + RE v indicate "to nurse a child" or "that which nurses a child" or something along those

Doing more research into Osiris, it is clear that he is associated with the pineal gland. I am also researching to see if there is a connection between Lake Nyassa and the mind, and the Nile river being a channel of the melanin secretions. There is evidence to support this and may be far fetched for some.

The key is understanding that in African spiritual traditions, the "ancestral realm" is an underground place, but literally inside the mind. I will prove this linguistically and archaeologically from the Yoruba, Kongo-bantu, Zulu-bantu and Egyptian spiritual systems. This requires me to reevaluate the whole "Ta-Netcher" thing. I am discovering that the "upper and lower lands" are not lands at all as I have suspected, but concepts that deal with the mind.

We have to do a new evaluation on what KMT is as KMT has nothing to do with Egypt. This will be proven in the later work on Ancestors. The key is the majority of KMT mentioned in Egyptian texts is stories that are "myths." That is a big key. The name KMT doesn't appear in Egyptian texts until the 10th or 11th dynasty.

I remember a priest from Nigeria telling me that a lot of people who you read about in Egyptian texts did not exist. I was skeptical at first but now I'm starting to see that is true. My old roommate Dr. Kmt Shockely who teaches out in Mason University told me we first met that the first time he met Dr. Ben and introduced himself as KMT, he Ben said, "You don't exist." Meaning the name he is associating himself with is not what he think it is. Dr. Ben is an initiate in the Ethiopian traditions and he would have access to knowledge the public doesn't. I think I can prove Dr. Ben right in this area.

Hutuapo Asar!

I cannot open your Pdf file on Osiris. I keep getting an error message and the word saying 'from d.yimg.com' Do you know what this stands for. I've looked for it on Google but it did not make any sense... Trying to sort it.

Thanks for the input. I agree with your analysis, the concept of nurturing. Examining the Bantu word BERE, milk, breast, it does seem to have the concept of nurturing hidden in the ending of the word.

The Shona-Bantu word RERA means to nurse or bring up a child. This is similar to the Kiswahili-Bantu form LEA or REA. So the Bantu word could be a combination of BE+ RE?

However, good news, we don't need to prove ourselves any further. A few days ago after sending the article I was determined to find a Bantu word which matched the Meroitic word for milk. After all the Nilo-Saharan people, Nilotic people have always associated themselves with Bantu people. Oral traditions states that the Nilotic and Bantu people always existed together as a people (proof in Kenya) and came together from Egypt on foot or canoe. The Gi-Kuyu word for milk is IRIA. This follows closely the Meroitic word for milk YER. I'm so pleased to have discovered this word.

So Claude Rilly's table is now almost complete having found the Gi-Kuyu word IRIA, milk. The only other word is APEDE-MK, the Meroitic God which I am currently working on.

Have you read Felix Chami's book on 'The unity of African history'. He has a good chapter on page 61 - 76 analysing the words you mention and dealing with word etymologies. Perhaps it might give you a little more information for your book. Incidentally the Proto-Bantu word DIBA means milk and water. So here again the same concept exists.

I've only had a scant review of it and it looks promising. I can't think of anything off hand that deals with Mr. Rilly's reconstruction of the term SA or *SUN for milk or breast, but if your Bantu references are correct, we may need to broaden our scope to find the answer to a B cognate (if it exist) for the term yer, era, or ira dealing with milk.

It would seem that the Bantu terms for milk, MA-SIWA or MA-ZIWA would actually refer to a container of life giving waters. I say that because I am drafting up a manuscript currently titled The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani in which, in one section, I discuss the possible origin of the myth of the NU or NWN and the NILE river deriving from lake NYANZA in central east Africa.

I argue that the myth is speaking about the Egyptians origins in many respects. But anyway, the word NYANZA is two words: NYUA (water) and NZA (za) lake, pond, etc. It is usually translated as Great Waters. Among the Zulu they call it lake NYASSA, so SA would definitely refer to a lake or the body that holds the water. It may refer to a large, hollow "cup" that holds living giving waters.

I would argue you may have to look towards the nurturing aspect of the term (breast being a source of nurturing for the young) as I am connecting with lake NYANZA whose (milk) feeds the Nile river and of course the people are its children.

So we may have to look at it different and look for words that represent large containers or something like that. It may be fruitful.

Officer Omar Edwards Accidentally Gunned Down By Fellow Officer In May After Pursuing Apparent Car Thief

There was no indictment Thursday in a racially charged police-involved shooting.

In May, a white police officer mistakenly shot and killed a black colleague, who was off duty at the time.

Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau announced that a grand jury decided not to indict Officer Andrew Dunton, who fired the shots that killed Officer Omar Edwards.

The case raised highly-charged racial questions, since Edwards was black and Dunton is white.

The Rev. Al Sharpton in a statement said he expected no indictment, adding, "We will continue to call on the governor to authorize a special prosecutor in this case. It remains questionable whether this grand jury examined the actions of Officer Dunton or merely the actions of the alleged thief in a confused mixed presentation."

It was May 28. The 25-year-old plainclothes Edwards, who'd just finished his shift in Harlem, chased a man he suspected of breaking into his car. The grand jury determined that Edwards, running with a silver gun in his hand, failed to stop when plainclothes officers, who witnessed the chase, yelled to him, "Police. Don't move. Drop the gun. Drop the gun."

The grand jury determined that Edwards made eye contact with Dunton, and pointed his gun at the officer, who fired six shots. The grand jury's decision: no criminal wrongdoing.

"Well, first and foremost, it disturbingly predictable," said Marquez Claxton of the Black Law Enforcement Alliance.

Claxton believes the probe should have been independent.

"Once again, we cannot have complete confidence in a process that relies so heavily on a relationship between the police department and the DA offices," Claxton said.

The upshot of the grand jury's decision is that critical mistakes were made on both sides, but Officer Dunton was not criminally liable.

The grand jury's decision enables the NYPD to now proceed with an administrative review of the case that for the first time will allow the police to interview Officer Dunton about what happened.

Dunton is a four-year veteran of the NYPD. Edwards was a newlywed who left behind a wife and two young children.

Indeed!

What we see in the compound picture of the Ankh signifies the concepts of:

(1) Life

(2) stability

(3) serenity..... peace, tranquility, rest.

These three conditions epitomise the path way of one's life leading to its final destination, its ending, or destiny.

It is the ending of the tail of the Ankh symbol, the strap, which ties the head with the three conceptual ideas.

Will be exploring this with proper words.

I think you may have something. I have been trying to make sense of the following image:

As we can see, this image consist of the w3s scepter, djd pillar and the ankh symbol. I know the djd symbol is connected to rulership. It corresponds to the Yoruba ADE which is commonly referred to as "crown" but is symbolic of royalty.

It's earliest evidence of extracting dye from plant to get pigment

By Randolph E. Schmid

updated 1:59 p.m. PT, Mon., Aug 10, 2009

WASHINGTON - Four thousand years ago Egyptians had mastered the process of making madder, a red dye, according to a researcher who uncovered the earliest known example of the color still used today.

Refining a technique that allows the study of microscopic bits of pigment, Marco Leona of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York was able to analyze the color of a fragment of leather from an ancient Egyptian quiver.

The discovery that the color was madder is the earliest evidence for the complex chemical knowledge needed to extract the dye from a plant and turn it into a pigment, Leona reports in Tuesday's edition of Proceedings of the National Academy of Science.

With the help of British Egyptologist Nigel Skinner-Simpson, Collins reconstructed Salt's exploration on the plateau, eventually locating the entrance to the lost catacombs in an apparently unrecorded tomb west of the Great Pyramid.

Indeed, the tomb featured a crack in the rock, which led into a massive natural cave.

"We explored the caves before the air became too thin to continue. They are highly dangerous, with unseen pits and hollows, colonies of bats and venomous spiders," said Collins.

According to Collins, the caves -- which are tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of years old -- may have both inspired the development of the pyramid field and the ancient Egyptian's belief in an underworld.

"Ancient funerary texts clearly allude to the existence of a subterranean world in the vicinity of the Giza pyramids," Collins told Discovery News.

Fascinating stuff ... I have always felt there were significant and profound new discoveries still to be made in Egypt. Can you imagine that A-hole, Hawass, saying "we know everything about the Plateau"? Thanks for posting, Paul.

Aug. 13, 2009 -- An enormous system of caves, chambers and tunnels lies hidden beneath the Pyramids of Giza, according to a British explorer who claims to have found the lost underworld of the pharaohs.

Populated by bats and venomous spiders, the underground complex was found in the limestone bedrock beneath the pyramid field at Giza.

"There is untouched archaeology down there, as well as a delicate ecosystem that includes colonies of bats and a species of spider which we have tentatively identified as the white widow," British explorer Andrew Collins said.

Collins, who will detail his findings in the book "Beneath the Pyramids" to be published in September, tracked down the entrance to the mysterious underworld after reading the forgotten memoirs of a 19th century diplomat and explorer.

"In his memoirs, British consul general Henry Salt recounts how he investigated an underground system of 'catacombs' at Giza in 1817 in the company of Italian explorer Giovanni Caviglia," Collins said.

Oromos language is considered part of an "Afro-Asiatic" Language group.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Afro-Asiatic\_languages

**Notice that the term Afro-Asiatic has replaced the term Hamito-Semitic by some authors:

"The term "Hamito-Semitic" remains in use in the academic traditions of some European countries, although some authors have now replaced it with "Afrasian", or, reflecting an opinion that it is more African than Asian, "Afrasan". Individual scholars have called the family "Erythraean" (Tucker 1966) and "Lisramic" (Hodge 1972)."

Notice also that, according to wikipedia the Semitic language group is also categorized as an Afro-Asiatic language group.

Vaccine Action: Cover Letter

DOZENS OF EXPERTS AND WORLD LEADERS REBUKE FEDERAL FLU VACCINATIONS AND QUARANTINE CAMPS CITING RISKS AND UNPROVEN BENEFITS

This letter delivers urgent notice that dozens of health experts, religious leaders, and world leading scientists are condemning governments worldwide for going along with pharmaceutical industry-influenced plans to inject people with poorly-tested toxic vaccines this flu season based on fears of pandemic swine flu.

1. The flu vaccines are questionably effective, dangerous, insufficiently tested, and potentially lethal.

Substantive research shows all flu vaccinations have little to no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.

Side effects from vaccine fillers and adjuvants especially squalene include a variety of debilitating auto-immune diseases and a significant percentage of deaths. Squalene, condemned congressional investigators in 2004, is indicated as the primary cause of tens of thousands of deaths, and hundreds of thousands of chronic cases of Gulf War-related illnesses.

Besides squalene, other vaccine ingredients include: animal tissues, viral proteins, foreign DNA and RNA, formaldehyde, live genetically-engineered viruses, and mercury that has been scientifically linked to skyrocketing rates of autism in children.

Significant evidence, including genetic sequencing analysis, proves the circulating swine flu sourced from man-made outbreaks, is from collaborating government and vaccine-industry laboratories.

2. Mandatory vaccinations and quarantines violate human rights and US Constitutional mandates including religious freedoms and compensation required when anyones property, including natural body immunity, is taken.

Those who refuse the live virus swine flu vaccination may be jailed or held indefinitely in private-industry administered internment camps directed by FEMA.

Government officials have increased demand for flu vaccines, and public compliance with vaccination policies using fear and propaganda consistent with military psychological operations. The U.S. Government classifies the avian flu as a biological weapon, and administers biodefense as a national security operation.

3. Alternative and complementary individual care options, including proven disease prevention strategies, are being grossly neglected by government health officials.

Through building a healthy immune system using vitamin supplements, herbs, immune-building medicinal mushrooms, nano-silvers, oxygenation therapies, a healthy diet, proper hydration, and adequate rest, people do not result to toxic vaccinations for any type of flu prevention. Scientific evidence has shown one to three Vitamin C IVs of 50,000 gm gives 100% relief from this or any flu.

GOOD NEWS: According to several constitutional legal authorities, the Federal Government and WHO cannot legally mandate vaccines for small town America at the state level, they can only recommend it. The US Constitution provides for each state to decide whether or not to allow religious, philosophical, and medical exemptions, or to allow self-quarantine at a location of personal choice. It is your responsibility to tell local county, township, and state officials what you choose.

ACT NOW: Use a template letter to write your local and state representatives, urging them to support your right to religious, philosophical, and medical exemptions as well as your right to self-quarantine in a location of your choice.

READ MORE: The following letter is a full scientifically documented article, which explains all of these points in detail and is available for you to share through the links below. This letter will empower you to speak at town meetings, county councils, and to local state representatives to protect your rights, your children, and your grandchildren by creating laws that will protect against what some people feel is genocidal abuse by agencies whom some believe are aligned with the attempt to create a One World Government, such as WHO, U.N., and the Federal Governors who are overstepping their powers.

Vaccine Action Letter: Summary

A HARD LOOK AT MANDATORY LIVE VIRUS VACCINATIONS

WHATS REALITY AND WHAT TO DO

11 POINT SUMMARY:

1. The proposed swine flu squalene adjuvant live virus vaccination is neither adequately or sufficiently tested, nor proven effective or safe; it is uninsurable, can stimulate the onset of a variety of debilitating auto-immune diseases, and is a serious assault on the immune system.
2. The swine flu vaccine contains dangerous & life-threatening fillers, including adjuvants such as squalene, animal tissues, which may include pig tissue, viral and bacterial proteins, and live viruses all of which contain pig DNA.
3. Live viruses have a history of lethal danger, disease, and are contagious. Secondary Spread of live viruses from those vaccinated with a live virus lasting up to three weeks is a well-known fact.
4. The swine flu appears to have been laboratory generated and designed to have its dangerous effects amplified by the use of all the available swine flu vaccines.
5. The United States government classifies the bird flu virus as a biological weapon.
6. If the government intent is to make the live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu vaccination mandatory for all Americans, it is a violation of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States.
7. Analysis from the British Medical Journal article titled, Influenza Vaccination: Policy Versus Evidence, presents evidence from a systematic review based on a meta-analysis of all the research that shows inactivated vaccines have little or no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.
8. Those who refuse the live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu and regular flu vaccinations may be jailed or held indefinitely in internment camps established by states or FEMA because the so called swine flu pandemic has been, as far as we are concerned, unnecessarily classified as a Level 6 Pandemic, potentially allowing international law to override the United States Constitution to justify American martial law and detention for vaccine refusers.

9. Attempts by the United States government to increase the demand for flu vaccinations through fear are explicitly revealed in a classified, private CDC (Center for Disease Control) sponsor conference for vaccine manufacturer executives entitled 7-step Recipes to Increase Demand for Flu Vaccination.

10. The best way to be protected from any flu including the H1N1 live virus swine flu is to have a healthy immune system by living a natural, earth-connected way of being, which includes: organic, plant-source- only foods, supplements including nano-silver, vitamin C, A, and D, medicinal immune-building mushrooms and herbs, and specific aromatherapy oils. Physicians of the State of Arizona Board of Homeopathic and Integrated Medicine Society have found that usually one to three Vitamin C IVs of 50,000 milligrams will give 100% relief from this or any flu in the instance one actually gets the flu. Other effective treatments include nano-silvers and Oxygen Treatment Therapy (OTT). This is a safe, less expensive, simple, and more effective treatment as compared to Tamiflu (Tamiflu, although supposedly designed for the antiviral effect, is a psychotropic drug that has significant brain and nervous system side effects, which are toxic and debilitating) . These healthy approaches have been historically proven to be far more safe and effective than generated vaccines, which have truly never been scientifically proven to be either safe or effective except for building the economic pockets of the vaccine companies. In other words, there are strong international and national vested interests on many levels backing these inadequately tested, dangerous, and ineffective vaccines. These vested interest groups are not exactly concerned about your health.

11. We have options and we can create more. It is important that we all take a stand while we are still healthy enough to be standing.

BRIEF SUMMARY:

There are two reasonable questions that must be asked: (1) Is the swine flu live virus squalene adjuvant vaccine safe and effective, and if so, (2) will vaccinating 95% or more of the general population provide any more protection for the whole population? If both of these questions were answered in the affirmative, then we would have a reasonable justification for mandatory vaccinations. However, the overwhelming scientific data suggests just the opposite. The live virus swine flu has not been adequately tested, proven safe or effective, is non-insurable, and because of the well-known phenomena of Secondary Transmission of live virus vaccines (meaning it can be contagious), it may actually increase the transmission of the virus.

This live virus vaccine has 2.3 times more genetic mutability, and added adjuvant toxicity than a natural virus because it includes squalene. Squalene has significant autoimmune inflammatory effects, and general severe autoimmune effects, which are a significant potential threat to the health of the individual. According to congressional hearings in 2004, squalene was considered the main cause of 300,000 GIs with Gulf War Syndrome who are now applying for complete disability. Aside from the horrendous, misery and ill health created by the Gulf War Syndrome, based on our understanding of the 1918 flu pandemic (which some significant scientific work has suggested was precipitated by the water-oil adjuvant that was part of the typhus vaccine and unknowingly given to the soldiers to protect against typhus), it appears that the water-oil adjuvant in combination with the Spanish Flu was the main precipitator of the millions of deaths that occurred. Research at that time, which was limited because they didn't even know about viruses, suggests that the high percentage of deaths in soldiers (healthy young men) was connected to the adjuvant, which gave them a hyper-immune, auto-immune response and cytokine storm (strong inflammatory reaction) 3 to 6 months after receiving the vaccine. This explains why so many of them died from hemorrhagic pneumonia, activated by the viral flu. The use of squalene as an adjuvant in the vaccine, which causes severe health symptoms on its own, could actually mirror the whole 1918 scenario. The interaction of the flu and the hyperimmune auto-immune imbalance response to the squalene (a water-oil adjuvant) could theoretically pre-dispose people who receive the vaccine with this live virus in it to mimic the actual pandemic called the Spanish Flu of 1918. Please understand that this deadly synergy of squalene and the live virus in a vaccine is theoretical and there is no proof that this is the potential case, except the research on the actual cause of the 1918 Spanish Flu. However, this just adds to the potential risk of a squalene-based live virus swine flu vaccination.

According to the British Medical Journal article titled, Influenza Vaccination: Policy Versus Evidence, evidence from a systematic review based on a meta-analysis of all the research shows vaccines have little or no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.

In other words, the benefit to risk ratio is extremely poor from a scientific point of view. In answering the second part of the question, all the vaccine studies to date show that vaccinating 95% or more of a population does not make a difference in stopping outbreaks of the particular disease people were vaccinated for. In fact, based on the scientific evidence, mass mandatory vaccinations with a highly mutable live virus could actually activate a real and lethal pandemic rather than prevent it. Therefore, from a purely scientific perspective, there is no valid reason for mandatory vaccinations. For this reason we believe that all people have a constitutional, religious, philosophical, and medical right to the freedom of choice of whether or not to be vaccinated.

In essence, as confirmed by veteran US Constitutional attorney Larry Becraft, there is no basis in statutory law for state official mandates, county cooperation, or public compliance, in-so-far-as forced vaccinations and/or quarantines, even during officially declared epidemics or pandemics. Presidential executive orders lack the legal power to force or enforce vaccination and/or quarantine mandates on the American people. Likewise, state statutes and administrative rules and regulations pertaining to compulsory vaccinations and quarantines advanced by health departments shall be prohibited as violations of fundamental human rights, religious freedoms, and just compensation for personal property secured by the US Constitution. Given these conclusions, it is official malfeasance for state and federal health officials to advance such unconstitutional policies and engage such procedures. Furthermore, health officials may be held accountable for gross criminal negligence: engaging in broadcasting flu warnings, using the news media to relay deadly predictions of pandemic morbidity and mortality, or otherwise sensitizing people to promote compliance with vaccination or forced quarantines while grossly neglecting their mental health and quality of life; increasing anxiety, phobia, and depression, and causing severe economic damages from the medical, psychosocial, and behavioral impacts of these public health malpractices. In other words no one has any constitutional authority at the Federal or State level to enforce mandatory vaccinations. However, waiting until legal suits are filed afterwards is not an option because irreversible damage may be done by then to our global family. The State officials are more vulnerable to official malfeasance. In other words, lawsuits on one level also have the immediate power to veto Federal mandates of forced vaccinations. At the state level we have protection from Federal mandates...and in practical reality we have more personal access to state politicians to get them to vote against any Federal mandates, as they are more directly accountable to the public. For further information, please see: <http://www.blogger.com/www.PandemicFluOnline.com>.

ONE SENTENCE SUMMARY:

The overwhelming scientific studies and research do not in any way support the action of mandatory flu, squalene adjuvant, live virus vaccination; to do so might result in the desecration of a significant amount of Gods creation of humanity on planet earth; the science strongly suggests that mandatory vaccinations are both immoral and ethically illegal (ethics that are core in the Judaic-Christian system) and this mandatory vaccination violates the basic Ten Commandments in at least 6 ways: Thou shall not murder, steal, lie, bear false witness, engage in idol worship (money and power), envy or covet.

We also recommend reading Vaccine Safety Manual by Neil Miller for additional scientific information on the subject as well as Cochrane collaboration/ influenza studies, which show virtually no benefit to the flu vaccines. Also check Oct. 6 BMJ, Dec 2006 New England Journal of Medicine, and Feb. 2005 Archives of Internal Medicine. <http://thinktwice.com/>

Potential Vaccination Risks

Dear Parents and Grandparents, We are writing this letter as concerned parents, grandparents, physicians, health professionals, and clergy for the health and well-being of our children, grandchildren, and also ourselves. Everything reported here, either from direct scientific papers or explicit written reports by reputable leaders, is based on fact not rumor or myth. The scientific research below, which suggests the upcoming live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu vaccination may be compromising to the health and well-being of you and your loved ones, is overwhelming. The costs including life-threatening, life-crippling side effects and death are high; the theoretical benefits are questionable at best. Our interest is that you have enough valid scientific data to make an informed choice in the best interest of the health of yourself and your children. The decision of whether or not to vaccinate is a personal one. Every parent should be allowed full freedom to accept or reject vaccines for their children and themselves. We should be allowed the privilege of informed consent, the same as with any medical procedure that includes the possibility of adverse reactions. Parents are ultimately responsible for their own health and the health of their children.

At issue is what we consider to be the serious deception and general misinformation about the safety of the impending live virus swine flu vaccine, which is neither adequately tested nor safe, although the so-called researchers have publicly declared it safer than the regular flu vaccine before even beginning the testing process. They may be right in that the regular flu vaccine was anything but safe. There were an average of 8,364 adverse reactions to the flu vaccine reported to the federal government in 2007 and 2008. The Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS) is a passive reporting system, notorious for under-representing true reaction rates. Passive reporting systems may capture just 1 percent or less of true damage to recipients of pharmaceutical drugs (as noted by David Kessler, former head of the FDA). Based on the VAERS data, calculations suggest an average of 850,000 life threatening, life crippling side effects, or deaths associated with all vaccinations given per year based on an extrapolation of the CDC data. Dr. Marie-Paule Kieny, Director of the Initiative for Vaccine Research at the World Health Organization (WHO) Headquarters, even stated herself that vaccines do induce adverse reactions and this can be the case as well for adjuvanted vaccines and non-adjuvanted vaccines. She also said the vaccine safety data is, for certain populations, significantly lacking; and for quite a few populations, there is no data at all to verify the safety of vaccines including children, those over 65, pregnant mothers, and asthmatics.

Dr. Kieny actually says that she doesn't even know what the proportions of the ingredients are in the 4.9 billion vaccines they are about to inject into people. There have been no complete clinical trials for a medical product that is about to be administered on mass to pregnant women and children. There literally is no data for this vaccine as per its use in children, pregnant women, and asthmatics. There is a considerable amount of data with squalene in Gulf War vets receiving both an experimental anthrax vaccine and experimental HIV vaccine. It is highly associated with at least 300,000 vets who have made permanent claims for total disability. Animal research also supports these findings.

As reported in the Irish Times, the Lancet recently stated: Countries need to assess carefully the risks and benefits of the rapid approval of a human swine flu vaccine to avoid repeat of past problems with mass-vaccination. According to the London Evening Standard, WHO officials have warned that H1N1 vaccines may be unsafe. The Institute of Science and Society has said that the vaccines will be far more deadly than the swine flu, and that mass vaccinations are a recipe for disaster.

The new swine flu live virus vaccine could be more dangerous than "seasonal" flu vaccines because some of them are using new technologies, and all of them are being fast-tracked, reducing testing periods and safety requirements before licensing occurs. As mentioned earlier, the doctor responsible for overseeing the trials has already claimed the shot is "really as safe, actually if not safer," than previous flu vaccines. That's a curious statement considering he is still recruiting test subjects and the trials have not yet begun. This is anything but a scientific attitude and certainly does not inspire confidence in the found results especially if they are already predetermined.

2. The swine flu vaccine contains dangerous & life-threatening fillers, including adjuvants such as squalene, animal tissues, which may include pig tissue, viral and bacterial proteins, and live viruses all of which contain pig DNA.

down), or an assortment of autoimmune disorders including type 1 diabetes. In one study of over 100,000 vaccinated children in Finland, there was a 147% increase in the rate of type 1 diabetes in those vaccinated. The lack of sufficient testing on this experimental live virus vaccine raises many concerns. There are no criteria on its efficacy or valid statistics to speak of. During the 1976 swine flu scare, the swine flu vaccine itself killed hundreds & sickened countless others, and had an unusually high rate of Guillain-Barre Syndrome associated with it.

Dr. Leonard Horowitz, author of Emerging Viruses: AIDS And Ebola: Nature, Accident or Intentional? says the swine-bird-human flu strain, reported to be found first in Mexico in late-March 2009, most likely came from Dr. James S. Robertson and his colleagues in association with the US Center for Disease Control (CDC) and vaccine manufacturer Novavax, Inc., which was ready to profit from the release. Nobody else takes H5N1 Asian-flu infected chickens, takes them to Europe, extracts their DNA, combines their proteins with H1N1 viruses from the 1918 Spanish flu isolate, additionally mixes in some swine-flu genes from pigs, then reverse engineers them to infect humans, he said. True Ott, PhD., N.D. also gives evidence of this being a laboratory generated virus, and associates the origin of this lab-generated flu with Novartis International AG, which happens to be the worlds largest multinational pharmaceutical company. He feels the key figure in making this lab-generated virus is Dr. Jeffrey Taubenberger. What is key to this understanding is that two researchers have made a very strong case for this being a laboratory-created virus.

Some of the new H1N1 (swine flu) vaccines are going to be made by Novartis. These shots will probably be made in PER.C6 cells (human retina cells) and contain MF59, a potentially debilitating adjuvant. MF-59 is an oil-based adjuvant primarily composed of squalene. All rats injected with squalene (oil) adjuvants developed a disease that left them crippled, dragging their paralyzed hindquarters across their cages. Injected squalene can cause severe arthritis and severe immune responses, such as autoimmune arthritis and lupus.

LIST OF VACCINE FILLERS & ADJUVENTS: This list, officially administered by design with every vaccine provided to the public, in addition to the squalene that appears to be in this upcoming swine flu vaccine, is of great concern to many parents and grandparents, with the announcement that they will start vaccinating children and pregnant women first and then wait to see if there are too many adverse events (including seizures, neurological problems, and death).

In addition to the viral and bacterial RNA or DNA that is part of the vaccines, here are the fillers:

Aluminum hydroxide - directly linked to causing Alzheimer's disease

Aluminum phosphate - directly linked to causing Alzheimer's disease

Ammonium sulfate - an inorganic chemical compound used as fertilizer and "protein purifier"; known to cause kidney & liver damage, gastrointestinal dysfunctions

Amphotericin B - an "antifungal disinfectant" and anti-biotic, which damages the urinary tract, bowels, and heart functions

Animal tissues (a causal element for all the various auto-immune diseases associated with vaccination) : horse blood, rabbit brain, dog kidney, monkey kidney, chick embryo, chicken egg, duck egg, pig blood, Porcine (pig) pancreatic hydrolysate of casein (the pig protein/tissue is an additional objectionable issue for Jewish and Muslim people)

Calf (bovine) serum & fetal bovine serum (cow blood is recognized as a significant transmitter of Mad Cow Disease)

Betapropiolactone

Formaldehyde - used as "a preservative & disinfectant" , known to cause cancer, chronic bronchitis, eye irritation when exposed to the body's immune system

Formalin

Gelatin

Glycerol

Human diploid cells (originating from human aborted fetal tissue)

Hydrolyzed gelatin

Monosodium glutamate (MSG) - now known to cause cancer in humans, also linked to obesity

Neomycin (anti-biotic)

Neomycin sulfate (anti-biotic)

Phenol red indicator - a highly toxic disinfectant dye, attributed to liver, kidney, heart & respiratory damage

Phenoxyethanol (antifreeze) - proven to have extreme neurotoxic side effects

Potassium diphosphate

Potassium monophosphate

Polymyxin B

Polysorbate 20

Polysorbate 80 associated with infertility when injected

Residual MRC5 proteins

Sorbitol

Sucrose

Thimerosal (mercury) - a neurotoxin linked to psychological, neurological, & immunological problems especially autism. Nervous system damage (such as sub-acute sclerosing panencephalitis (SSPE), brachial plexitis, post-vaccinal encephalitis, transverse myelitis and peripheral neuropathies) , kidney disease, birth defects, dental problems, mood swings, mental changes, hallucinations, memory loss, and inability to concentrate can occur. Symptoms also include tremors, loss of dermal sensitivity, slurred speech, and in rare cases even death and paralysis. This additive alone was the catalyst for another recent Class Action Lawsuit organized by mothers of children born with autism & the many related behavioral disorders associated with it. Autism is now occurring at levels never seen before in history; depending on the state, its rate is now 1 in 67 to 1 in 150. The autism rates used to be 1 in 20,000. Mercury may also be associated with the significantly increased rates of senility and Alzheimers, which is associated with five or more successive flu vaccinations. Although most mercury (thimerosal) has been removed from childrens vaccines, it is still in all flu vaccines at toxic doses.

Tri(n)butylphosphate,

VERO cells, a continuous line of monkey kidney cells - linked to the SV-40 virus known to cause leukemia

Washed sheep red blood cells

THESE ADDITIVES ARE GIVEN TO OUR CHILDREN WITHOUT PUBLIC KNOWLEDGE OR CONSENT.

Whats the problem with this horrendous looking list? The problem is two-fold: (1) the adjuvants are added to increase inflammation and immune response in the system, and (2) the adjuvants are significantly detrimental to the overall welfare of the organisms, according to the neurosurgeon Russell Blaylock, M.D., an expert in this field. His research suggests the vaccinations may cause brain swelling and inflammation for up to two years. This alone would be enough to significantly disrupt the immune and endocrine systems, as well as increase senility, activate Alzheimers, and other brain dysfunctions. For example, Hugh Fudenberg, MD, Founder and Director of the Neuro Immuno Therapeutic Research Foundation, reported at the NVIC International Vaccine Conference in Arlington, Virginia in September 1997, that five consecutive seasonal (yearly) flu shots increases the risk of Alzheimers disease ten fold. Other devastating side effects of vaccines involve neurological damage, including encephalitis, transverse myelitis, peripheral nerve damage, autism, seizures, mental retardation, language delays, behavioral problems, multiple sclerosis, and SSPE (sub-acute sclerosing panencephalitis) . There is also significant animal research that supports Blaylocks findings.

The veterinary research has shown that vaccines can cause a wide range of brain and nervous system damage. In the Merck Manual it states, in regard to its own product, that vaccines can cause encephalitis: brain inflammation and damage. Merck states, Examples are the encephalitis following measles, chicken pox, rubella, small pox, vaccinia, and many other less well-defined viral infections.

Although dog and cat research doesn't necessarily mean it will be the same for humans, it is highly probable this animal research is revealing what is really happening with human vaccines. Because of this, there is much to learn by looking at the animal vaccine research. The following is a summary of some of this research.

In the Canine Health Concerns (CHC) study, reports show that 73.1% of the dogs developed short attention spans within three months of being vaccinated. 72% of the dogs were considered to be nervous and worrying within three months post vaccination. It is interesting that dogs can develop paralyzed rear legs and death shortly after a vaccine shot and that paresis is listed as a symptom of encephalitis in the Merck Manual. The Science of Vaccine Damage by Catherine O'Driscoll outlines results from several animal studies regarding the effects of vaccinations on dogs and cats as collaborated by a team at Purdue University School of Veterinary Medicine.

Vaccinated dogs in the produced study developed autoantibodies to their own biochemical protein structures, which included antibodies against fibronectin, laminin, DNA, albumin, cytochrome C, cardiolipin, and collagen. The fibronectin is involved in tissue repair, cell multiplication and growth, and the differentiation between tissues and organs. The vaccinated dogs also developed autoantibodies to laminin affecting adhesion, differentiation, spreading, and proliferation and moving of cells. What the vaccines are doing is disrupting the natural intelligence of the cells. The vaccinated dogs also developed autoantibodies to their own collagen, which is about one quarter of all the protein in the body and thus, in the CHC 1997 study of 4,000 dogs there was a much higher number of dogs developing mobility problems shortly after they were vaccinated. The dogs also developed autoantibodies to their own DNA.

The AVMA (American Veterinary Medical Association) Vaccine-Associated Feline Sarcoma Task Force conducted several studies to determine why 160,000 cats each year in the USA developed terminal cancer at their injection sites. Veterinarians around the world, as well as the British Government, have acknowledged the fact that cats do get vaccine-induced cancer. In August 2003 the Journal of Veterinary Medicine reported an Italian study that showed dogs also developed vaccine-induced cancer at their injection sites. It is no coincidence that vaccine-site cancer is a possible sequel to human vaccines. For example, Dr. Berniece Eddy, a microbiologist at the National Institutes of Health (NIH), has proven that both dead and live vaccines carry a monkey retrovirus (SV-40) that produces an inheritable cancer in experimental animals. It is unfortunate to note that this monkey retrovirus (SV-40), which is spread from human to human and from mother to child, also appears frequently in human cancer sites. In 1987, Dr. Hilleman, head of all vaccine production of Merck Pharmaceuticals, stunned the world with his public admissions that mass vaccination campaigns of the 1950s and 60s likely caused thousands of cancer deaths each year. This was due to the presence of SV-40. Doctors estimate that the virus was injected into tens of millions during the vaccination campaigns, including several million in Canada. It is also widely acknowledged that vaccines can cause a fast acting, usually fatal, disease called autoimmune haemolytic anaemia (AIHA). People may die from this in days. In the Merck Manual of Diagnosis and Therapy, even though Merck is a multinational vaccine manufacturer, it states that AIHA may be caused by modified live virus vaccines (MLV). The British Governments Working Group also acknowledged this.

The veterinary research also showed a connection between vaccine events and arthritis. Again, it is no accident that the New England Journal of Medicine reported it is possible to isolate the rubella virus from affected joints in children vaccinated against rubella. It also reported isolating viruses from the blood of women with prolonged arthritis following vaccination. In 2000, the CHCs 1997 findings indicated that polyarthritis and other diseases like amyloidosis, which affects organs in dogs, were linked to the combined vaccines given to dogs. The dog research also confirms our explanation of human autoimmune responses to vaccination because they also found that dogs produced antibodies against their own DNA and their own tissues, such as found in heart cells. When we look at this picture from a broader perspective, it is not too hard to show scientifically that vaccines can put people into an allergic state, which may range from mild to anaphylactic shock and death. There are also some individuals who have an inherited faulty B and T cell functioning and therefore are very susceptible to abnormal immune reactions to vaccinations. The Merck Manual warns that patients with or from families with genetically altered B and or T cell immune cell deficiency history should not receive live virus vaccines due to the severe rate and risk of infection. How is this going to work when vaccinations are mandated with no medical or religious exceptions? In other words, some of these B and T cells will manifest as food allergies, neurological deterioration, eczema and heart disease. A deranged immune response may lead to inflammatory conditions such as arthritis, colitis, pancreatitis, and a number of autoimmune diseases as well as cancer and leukemia. The more serious meaning of this is that people with these conditions can die if they receive these live virus vaccinations because their immune systems are not strong enough to handle viral assault from modified live virus vaccinations. Some veterinarians have actually said, I think that vaccines are leading killers of dogs and cats in America today.

A major mechanism, which is the explanation for these life-threatening autoimmune and inflammatory diseases, such as type 1 diabetes, severe rheumatism, Guillain-Barre, SIDS (sudden infant death syndrome), other autoimmune diseases, and death, is that all the foreign animal tissues in a vaccine can set off an autoimmune response, which is the cause of all of these diseases, which attack various organs and tissues according to ones genetic pre-disposition toward a particular inflammatory disease. What that means is these animal tissues are foreign antigens that the body responds to as antigens in an attempt to eliminate the foreign invaders. In essence, the immune system in essence creates an attack against these unhealthy invaders with its own antibodies. However, in the case of an autoimmune response, these foreign tissues create a cross reaction that ends up attacking our own organ tissues, which are similar to the animal tissues that were injected, such as attacking the beta cells of the pancreas, the brain cells, and the myelin sheaths. These two factors combined with the danger of a live virus create a potentially lethal effect.

SO WHAT IS THE PROBLEM WITH LIVE VIRUSES?

3. Live viruses have a history of lethal danger, disease, and are contagious. Secondary Spread of live viruses from those vaccinated with a live virus lasting up to three weeks is a well-known fact.

We have to understand that live virus vaccines have a history of danger and disease, especially of the disease that is targeted. For example, the live polio flu vaccine virus that was used from 1979 2000 was pulled off the market because the vaccine itself was considered to be the major cause of polio and as such, Dr. Salk, the inventor of the vaccine, admitted this to be the case.

The contagious power of a live virus vaccine is no longer new information. It is scientifically recognized that an attenuated live virus vaccine can be contagious. The scientific term for this is called Secondary Transmission. Translated into common language, it means if all the children are vaccinated with a live virus, the adults who haven't been vaccinated are significantly more likely to pick up the live virus from being in contact with children. The current science has found those who are injected with a live virus vaccine are releasing the live virus from their bodies for up to three weeks, contrary to the inaccurate theory that everyone needs to be vaccinated to stop an epidemic, which is a false and unproven justification. The real danger is the opposite. The live virus vaccinated people can infect everyone else.

There is also significant research to show that in populations that are 95% fully vaccinated, viral infection outbreaks still occur. This is extremely well documented with major communicable diseases such as measles and pertussis. For further information please see:

<http://thinktwice.com/7reasons.pdf> or <http://www.opposingviews.com/questions/should-schoolsrequire-that-children-be-vaccinated>.

Another piece of important information regarding the danger of live viruses was an informal clinical trial of the avian flu live virus vaccine on about 200 Polish vagrants, which resulted in 11 immediate deaths and 20 subsequent deaths. This amounted to about 15% of the test population that died. The doctors and nurses involved were charged with murder. This happened in 2008. It obviously makes the point that it is not an exaggeration to say that live virus vaccinations may be extremely dangerous and lethal.

We also saw this lethal effect in the 1960s and 1970s when Australian Aborigine infants began to mysteriously die at astonishing rates<sup>1</sup> of every 2 babies after being vaccinated. Archie Kalokerinos, M.D. eventually made the connection when he realized the babies were dying after being vaccinated against pertussis and other diseases. Heath officials had recently initiated a mass vaccination program to protect Aborigine babies; their deaths corresponded with the program. He wrote a book called Every Other One documenting this tragic and preventable event in detail.

Although this is not an analysis of vaccinations in general, it obviously leaks over into this discussion. This however, is a specific exploration of the potential dangers versus the minimal health benefits of live virus vaccines.

Although there are some valid humanitarian concerns, based on the pattern of the 1918 swine flu in which the flu came lightly in spring/summer and came back heavily in the fall, which may be fueling this push to vaccinate or go to prison consciousness, there are some very incriminating and questionable facts regarding the intentions behind this massive push. For example, Baxter International Incorporated was in the application process for supplying avian flu vaccinations to European countries in the event of an epidemic when they accidentally shipped live avian flu vaccines to 18 countries in Europe. A laboratory technician tested the Baxter Seasonal Flu vaccines sent to the Czech Republic and discovered that they were contaminated with a highly pathogenic version of the avian flu, which could have launched a global pandemic. The total amount of the pathogenic avian flu virus sent to these 18 countries was 72 kilograms (over 150 pounds), which is a lot. Because Level 3 precautions were in place, such contamination could not have happened accidentally according to experts in the field. In spite of this so-called accident, Baxter was rewarded with a lead role in developing, producing, and disseminating the swine flu vaccine for the labeled Level 6 pandemic.

It normally takes a minimum of 12-18 months to create a vaccine after a virus has been identified. How is it that Baxter Laboratories, after receiving the seed culture of the swine flu virus that was provided in May 2009, announced that they would have the vaccine ready by July of 2009. One can't help but question how they were able to do this in 2 months rather than the usual 12-18 months until we understand the reality of the situation. True Ott, PhD, ND points out that the patent for the Swine Flu vaccine on November 4th, 2005 by Novartis International AG was granted on February 19, 2009 before the Swine Flu pandemic even began. The US patent office granted US patent number 20090047353A for a Split Influenza Vaccine with Adjuvants. The so-called Swine Flu grabbing headlines today is actually a recombinant, or splitinfluenza virus consisting of A-strain Bird-Flu

According to True Ott, PhD, N.D., Dr. Jeffrey Taubenberger was quite likely the primary author of the Novartis Nov. 6, 2005 provisional patent application. On page 2, paragraph 32 of the patent publication it says, The influenza virus [that the invention vaccine is designed to protect against] may be a reassortant strain, and may have been obtained by reverse genetics techniques. Reverse genetics techniques allow influenza viruses with desired genome segments to be prepared in vitro using plasmids. The remnant of the paragraph then goes into very specific detail as to the actual mechanics of how the pandemic virus was actually created by Taubenberger's Ft. Detrick team. At the very least, the author of the patent application had to have studied Taubenberger's various published reports on his work at Detrick, for the wording and science is virtually verbatim. As Dr. True Ott points out, this paragraph is even more incriminating by the words may have been obtained. Who obtained this virus and for what reason was it obtained? With this detailed information as it's explained here, it appears that Novartis then sold the vaccine prototype to its subsidiary Baxter Laboratories and possibly other vaccine companies so they could have it ready for the fall. Great timing and a great financial move create a lab-generated virus and have the vaccines ready to go for phase 2 demands for a vaccine. The more serious issue for the health of the public may be, as Dr. Ott's evidence shows (<http://www.pandemicfluonline.com/>) that the Novartis vaccine material with the live virus and squalene adjuvant is designed to facilitate the further mutation of the pandemic into more lethal waves of increasingly virulent and deadly diseases, rather than curtail and limit the existing outbreak.

Other virus experts are aware that this Swine Flu is a laboratory-generated virus. This current swine flu is at best between 4-8% a match in terms of genetic material to its closest genetic relatives and there is no remotely close match in the public NIH databases. This implies that between 92-96% of the viral genetic code is from spliced laboratory genetic material from previous swine, avian, and 1918 human flu viruses. Aware of these insider facts, a significant number of virologists and other health professionals and scientists stated that this had to be produced in a laboratory and could not occur naturally. This includes Adrian Gibbs, the inventor of Tamiflu who has gone on record stating that the very metrics (nucleic acid ratios) as well as genetic history indicates that this virus is passed through eggs, i.e.: it was created in a laboratory situation. Other whistle blowers include world famous virologist, author, and masters in public health, Dr. Leonard Horowitz who has actually identified the highly probable laboratory location and the highly likely scientists who created it. Former NIH employee Alexander S. Jones has done a genetic analysis using data from Andrew Rambaut at the University of Edinburgh, which indicates that this virus is mutating approximately 2.3 times faster than any natural swine or avian flu virus has ever done. Although we do not have 100% evidence, for obvious reasons, the overwhelming proof is that this was a laboratory created virus. It is important to note that once a virus undergoes a significant mutation, the vaccine that was made for it is no longer designed for the mutated virus, assuming any clinical effect from the vaccine.

5. The United States government classifies the bird flu virus as a biological weapon.

According to the United States government, in its own export regulations, the bird flu virus has been classified as a biological weapon. Given the evidence, this so called swine flu is a bioengineered virus and therefore a component of a biological weapons system as defined by Section 175(a) of the BWATA (Biological Weapons Anti-Terrorism Act of 1989). It is designed like the bird flu to deliver toxins and microorganisms so to deliberately inflict disease and death on people, while being disguised as injections for prophylactic, protective, or other peaceful purposes. In other words, by their own definition the US accurately views live virus vaccines as potential tools for biological warfare, and in this context, restricts the export of untested, untried, and potentially lethal experimental vaccines as biological weapons to rogue nations. The obvious question is why would we attempt to force the same untested and untried potentially lethal live vaccine onto American citizens and particularly our children?

6. If the government intent is to make the live virus squalene adjuvant swine flu vaccination mandatory for all Americans, it is a violation of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States.

The push behind mandatory vaccinations for the live virus swine flu has reached the highest level in our nation. Although this plan did not start with President Obama, for whatever good or bad intentions, he announced to the public that every man, woman and child should receive the vaccine this fall along with seasonal flu shots. For the record, Obama said he believes vaccinations should be mandatory. Upping this pressure to recklessly vaccinate with an untested live virus vaccine is at best irresponsible as even the statistical scientific evaluation of the effectiveness of flu vaccines suggests all flu vaccinations have had negligible success up until this time. In a scientific review of the data titled: Are US Flu Death Figures More PR Than Science?, it says: CDC states that the historic 1968-9 Hong Kong Flu pandemic killed 34,000 Americans. At the same time, the CDC claims 36,000 Americans annually die from flu. As of August 2009, the swine flu has killed approximately 1,000 people worldwide, according to CNN, which is a lot less than 36,000. This is hardly a traditionally defined pandemic in terms of numbers, yet there has been a major media fear/panic, which preps the people to take this untested and potentially lethal flu vaccine without even a freedom of choice. An uninformed public without adequate compensation for damages, loss of property, life, liberty, or the pursuit of happiness required under the US Constitution, is not really acting with choice.

The U.S. Constitutional Amendment I states: Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. Amendment IV secures the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures; Amendment V states that No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law and Amendment VIII states, cruel and unusual punishment [shall not be] inflicted. In context of the U.S. Constitution, the health and natural immunological adequacy of the human body represents private property and is not to be taken or compromised for public use, without just compensation.

At this point live virus flu vaccinations are seen to be mandatory for children and most likely will become mandatory for all Americans with refusal possibly resulting in being put in internment camps. Federal health officials are starting to recommend that most Americans get three flu shots this fall: one regular flu shot and two doses of the live vaccine made against the new swine flu strain. School children who have never had a flu shot are targeted for four shots in the fall twice for seasonal flu, twice for pandemic swine flu. (July 15, 2009 news). This unprecedented Department of Health's 2009 flu response plan calls for people especially children to receive three or four different live flu virus vaccines simultaneously, which is especially dangerous considering the combining of laboratory-engineered live flu viruses in these vaccines with other viruses resident in the human body (such as seasonal influenza) have the potential be lethal, undermine natural immunity, and/or produce more auto-immune and other diseases in people locally and globally.

The question when considering any medical treatment is what are the risks versus the benefits? We need to look at potential benefits to this or any other flu vaccine to make a reasonable risk/benefit analysis. It is already clear the risks are too high are they balanced, or a secondary concern as compared to the benefits?

7. Analysis from the British Medical Journal article titled, Influenza Vaccination: Policy Versus Evidence, presents evidence from a systematic review based on a meta-analysis of all the research that shows inactivated vaccines have little or no effect on preventing or minimizing the flu.

The science by our own CDC (Center of Disease Control) shows that flu vaccines are somewhere between 0-14% effective. Research in Israel shows they are 1% effective with a general lowering of the immune system. In general, the most thorough analysis on all the flu vaccine data was reported in the British Medical Journal article entitled Influenza Vaccination: Policy Versus Evidence, which gives evidence from a systematic review based on a metaanalysis of all the research showing that, inactivated vaccines have little or no effect on the effects measured. The paper states most studies are of poor methodological quality and little comparative evidence exists on the safety of these vaccines. It shows that in children under 2 years, inactivated vaccines had the same field efficacy as placebo. Similar results were found in an article from The Cochrane Database of Systematic Reviews. 2 (2008), titled, Vaccines for Preventing Influenza in Healthy Children where review of 51 studies involving more than 294,000 children, found there was no evidence that injecting children 6-24 months of age with a flu shot was any more effective than placebo. In children over 2 yrs, it was effective 33% of the time in preventing the flu.

In a study of 800 children with asthma, half were vaccinated and the other half did not receive the influenza vaccine. The two groups were compared with respect to clinic visits, emergency department (ED) visits, and hospitalizations for asthma. This study failed to provide evidence that the influenza vaccine prevents pediatric asthma exacerbations. (Effectiveness of influenza vaccine for the prevention of asthma exacerbations. Christly, C. et al. Arch Dis Child. 2004 Aug; 89(8): 734-5). The American Thoracic Society's 105th International Conference, May 15-20, 2009, San Diego quotes: The inactivated flu vaccine does not prevent influenza-related hospitalizations in children, especially the ones with asthma. In fact, children who get the flu vaccine are three times more at risk for hospitalization than children who do not get the vaccine.

Vaccines are also minimally effective for adults and the elderly. In a review of 48 reports (more than 66,000 adults), titled: Vaccines for preventing influenza in healthy adults from The Cochrane Database of Systematic Reviews. 1 (2006), it quotes, Vaccination of healthy adults only reduced risk of influenza by 6% and reduced the number of missed work days by less than one day (0.16) days. It did not change the number of people needing to go to hospital or take time off work. In a review of 64 studies over 98 flu seasons of elderly living in nursing homes, flu shots were non-significant for preventing the flu. For elderly living in the community, vaccines were not (significantly) effective against influenza or pneumonia according to Vaccines for preventing influenza in the elderly: The Cochrane Database of Systematic Reviews. 3(2006).

Efficacy is a difficult word because it can simply mean the stimulation of antibody production, but we are defining it in terms of protecting you against the flu, which is a practical clinical approach. We have ample clinical evidence and hundreds of testimonies which show that adequate vitamin A, vitamin D, vitamin C, as well as the use of medicinal herbs and mushrooms, can significantly reduce the occurrence of colds and flus far more effectively than a vaccine without all the potential serious side effects these vaccines can cause including death, Guillain-Barre syndrome (a demyelization of the nervous system that can paralyze a person from the neck down), rheumatoid arthritis, a variety of autoimmune diseases, type 1 diabetes, and autism. In other words, the risk/benefit analysis, which is how we normally assess these kinds of medical decisions, is horrendous. The risks are ve

The key question to ask is "what is life" according to the Egyptian sages? Are we talking about life in the sense that I'm alive and I get up and go to work? Or is it something deeper that we're missing?

When I think of how African sages discuss what it means to live, this Dagara proverb usually comes to mind:

"When death comes knocking at your door, let him find you living!"

Another one states, "If you move forward, you're going to die. If you move backwards, you're going to die. You might as well move forward and die!"

This is in the same spirit as Imhotep's quote, "Eat, drink and be merry for tomorrow you will die!"

So life is something more than just being able to get up and walk. It's connected to purpose, unveiling life's mysteries and making life more beautiful on earth.

As far as the djd, I think I can connect it to the Yoruba word dide which means "to rise" used in the sense of stability. This will all be in the revised paper.

Indeed!

What we see in the compound picture of the Ankh signifies the concepts of:

(1) Life

(2) stability

(3) serenity.... . peace, tranquility, rest.

These three conditions epitomise the path way of one's life leading to its final destination, its ending, or destiny.

It is the ending of the tail of the Ank symbol, the strap, which ties the head with the three conceptual ideas.

Will be exploring this with proper words.

I think you may have something. I have been trying to make sense of the following

As we can see, this image consist of the w3s scepter, djd pillar and the ankh symbol. I know the djd symbol is connected to rulership. It corresponds to the Yoruba ADE which is commonly referred to as "crown" but is symbolic of royalty.

The w3s symbol is usually rendered to mean "power." I think this is in line with how African cultures use similar symbols. I have a friend out in Tanzania and I showed him the w3s symbol and he told me that is a sign for the head owner of a kraal where he is from. The only difference is they do not have the animal head as you can see. I can't remember the name for what they call it in Tanzania. But it is definitely a sign of authority (power).

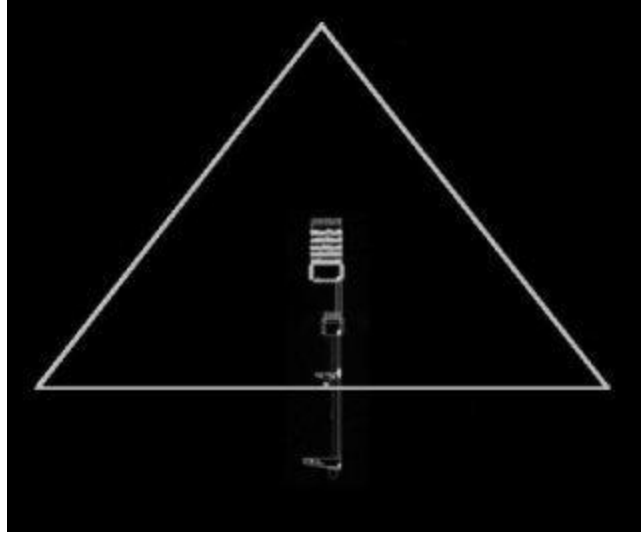

The ankh is always a kicker. But I am revising the paper and will demonstrate how these symbols all refer to the body. Let's examine the following image:

Knowing what we know about the "light" resting on the "crown" (top of the head) in Yoruba and Egyptian culture, one can only come to the conclusion that these are symbolic aspects of the body, in which the loop of the Ankh symbolizes the head. The djd is just as suspected is the spinal column.

In the revised paper I will demonstrate how the pyramids are symbolic of the mind, ancestors, spirits and the pineal gland. In African societies the pineal gland is given the shape of a triangle, although it is shaped more like a pinecone (thus pine-al gland). MR (pyramids) in Yoruba is called IMOLES which is another word for the ODU's in IFA. It means "house of light." It matches the same definition the Greeks called the pyramids when they said "House of Fire" and fire is light. Which lets me know that in the Bantu the word is actually UMURIRO or MRIO. Although you connected it with morning and wailing, the deeper symbolism of fire and ancestors seems to be the most dominant.

However, reviewing some literature from the Dagara people supports the notion of wailing to send off the dead to the ancestral realm and I will discuss that in full in the larger work The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

Shaft of the pyramids

1. "mummy" hieroglyph A53, (wi) "statue, likeness, form"

2. "djed" hieroglyph R11, (Dd) "be stable, enduring"

3. "pyramid" hieroglyph O24, (Mr) "pyramid, tomb"

Yes thanks Asar,I did receive the PDF on Osiris.
I've read the contents of the paper and learnt a great deal about Youraba religion.
The connections you make between Osiris and Oduduwa are quite revealing. I liked the concept of destiny.
In fact I have come across the concept of destiny in the Ankh symbol but sadly could not tie it down or argue it out in meaningful terms. I shall have to go over your explanations and see whether the connections between the Ankh and destiny are worth exploring.
As I said I could not make connections, as destiny is a rather abstract concept. However as you said the ORI can be understood as the spirit of consciousness and associated with the head which determines one's destiny or fate. The Ankh has a head and tail, and it is this concept I shall be working on. The Ankh as a symbol of a strap could represent the symbol for the tie of human consciousness, the tie of destiny.

Peace Ferg

I hope you were able to get the document via the link to the yahoo groups.

As far as your rendering of BE + RE meaning breast milk, it should be noted that the name for CHILD in the Niger-Congo languages is BI or BE. The word BE + RE would indicate "to nurse a child" or "that which nurses a child" or something along those lines.

I haven't read Chimi's book, but I will be sure to put it on my immediate list of books to purchase.

Doing more research into Osiris, it is clear that he is associated with the pineal gland. I am also researching to see if there is a connection between Lake Nyassa and the p the mind, and the Nile river being a channel of the melanin secretions. There is evidence to support this and may be far fetched for some.

The key is understanding that in African spiritual traditions, the "ancestral realm" is not an underground place, but literally inside the mind. I will prove this linguistically and from the Yoruba, Kongo-bantu, Zulu-bantu and Egyptian spiritual systems. This may help me reevaluate the whole "Ta-Netcher" thing. I am discovering that the "upper and lower lands" are not lands at all as I have suspected, but concepts that deal with the mind.

We have to do a new evaluation on what KMT is as KMT has nothing to do with the Nile or Egypt. This will be proven in the later work on Ancestors. The key is the majority of the KMT is mentioned in Egyptian texts is stories that are "myths." That is a big key. Since the name KMT doesn't appear in Egyptian texts until the 10th or 11th dynasty.

I remember a priest from Nigeria telling me that a lot of people who you read about in Egyptian texts did not exist. I was skeptical at first but now I'm starting to see that to be true. My old roommate Dr. Kmt Shockely who teaches out in Mason University told us we first met that the first time he met Dr. Ben and introduced himself as KMT, he said, "Ben said, 'You don't exist.'" Meaning the name he is associating himself with is not what he thinks it is. Dr. Ben is an initiate in the Ethiopian traditions and he would have access to knowledge the public doesn't. I think I can prove Dr. Ben right in this area.

Hutuapo Asar!

I cannot open your Pdf file on Osiris. I keep getting an error message and the word saying 'from d.y' I know what this stands for. I've looked for it on Google but it did not make any sense... Trying to solve it. Thanks for the input. I agree with your analysis, the concept of nurturing. Examining the Bantu word for breast, it does seem to have the concept of nurturing hidden in the ending of the word.

The Shona-Bantu word RERA means to nurse or bring up a child. This is similar to the Kiswahili word REA or REA. So the Bantu word could be a combination of BE + RE?

However, good news, we don't need to prove ourselves any further. A few days ago after sending the word, I determined to find a Bantu word which matched the Meroitic word for milk. After all the Nilo-Saharan people have always associated themselves with Bantu people. Oral traditions state that the Nilo-Saharan people always existed together as a people (proof in Kenya) and came together from Egypt on foot or by boat.

Kuyu word for milk is IRIA. This follows closely the Meroitic word for milk YER. I'm so pleased I discovered this word.

So Claude Rilly's table is now almost complete having found the Gi-Kuyu word IRIA, milk. The one I found was APEDE-MK, the Meroitic God which I am currently working on.

Have you read Felix Chami's book on 'The unity of African history'. He has a good chapter on page 100 dealing with the words you mention and dealing with word etymologies. Perhaps it might give you a little more. I'm working on your book. Incidentally the Proto-Bantu word DIBA means milk and water. So here again the same cognate. Somo

I've only had a scant review of it and it looks promising. I can't think of any other word that deals with Mr. Rilly's reconstruction of the term SA or *SUN for milk or butter. If the Bantu references are correct, we may need to broaden our scope to find the cognate (if it exists) for the term yer, era, or ira dealing with milk.

It would seem that the Bantu terms for milk, MA-SIWA or MA-ZIWA would be a container of life giving waters. I say that because I am drafting up a manuscript titled The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani in which, in one section, I deal with the origin of the myth of the NU or NWN and the NILE river deriving from lake Chad in central east Africa.

I argue that the myth is speaking about the Egyptians origins in many respects. The word NYANZA is two words: NYUA (water) and NZA (za) lake, pond, etc. It is translated as Great Waters. Among the Zulu they call it lake NYASSA, so they may refer to a lake or the body that holds the water. It may refer to a large, hollowed out living giving waters.

I would argue you may have to look towards the nurturing aspect of the term (the source of nurturing for the young) as I am connecting with lake NYANZA and the Nile river and of course the people are its children.

So we may have to look at it differently and look for words that represent large waters or something like that. It may be fruitful.

Greetings all.
I've been looking into Meroitic and Bantu cognates for some time now. Here is a part of the investigation. I am including a PDF version for your perusal. The Bantu word KADI, a woman or a significant. There are two parts to the investigation. This is part 1
Part 2 in PDF will follow part 1. It is the latest findings.

Also,

You may want to look at WATER in relation to the Ankh symbol. If you've ever been to Egypt, there are some "Nubians" who will tell you that the "ankh" is the KEY to LIFE. To open locked doors in Egypt one would have a key that was in the shape of an Ankh. If anyone has Dr. Yosef Ben Jochannan's book Ramesis II, at the very end of the book you will see an indigenous person of Egypt holding a large key in the shape of the Ankh.

The KEY of LIFE is WATER and that's what the indigenous will tell you. There are markings on certain temples and pyramids that indicate that this is so. The pyramids itself is supposed to have been a place that used the science of acoustics to aid in energy development. Paul recently posted an article about a cave complex under the pyramids of Giza. Also, one has to wonder, why did the majority of the pyramid underground chambers have thousands of gallons of water to be pumped out before they could go in. They were underground channels that lead into the "west."

The exact cause of the 11-hour riot that broke out Aug. 8 at the California Institution for Men in Chino, Calif., won't be known until an official investigation by the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) is completed. However, to some criminal-justice experts the violence that erupted at the facility, located about 40 miles east of Los Angeles, was an inevitable consequence of a state prison system long hobbled by massive overcrowding, program cuts and understaffed facilities. And given the state's ongoing budget woes with $1.2 billion in cuts mandated to the prison budget the situation is likely to only get worse.

"The overcrowding is the first issue," says Barry Krisberg, president of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency in Oakland, Calif. "You're talking about hundreds of men moved into triple bunks in what used to be gyms and cafeterias. They're not even cells. They're just empty places where we're shoving people." According to the most recent statistics from the CDCR, California's 33 state prisons house 154,649 prisoners in facilities designed to hold just 84,271 prisoners. The Chino prison is among the worst, with 5,877 prisoners in a facility designed to hold 2,976.

Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger and state political officials have been well aware of the issue of overcrowding, and the deplorable conditions that go along with it, for some time. In 2006 Schwarzenegger declared a state of emergency because of "severe overcrowding" in California's prisons, saying it had caused "substantial risk to the health and safety of the men and women who work inside these prisons and the inmates housed in them." In response, legislators passed AB 900, which earmarked $1.2 billion in jail-construction funding through state lease-revenue bonds. However, more than two years later, construction is still on hold as lawmakers quibble about the details. But it's not just a lack of buildings that is the problem. Says Krisberg: "Without programs and without services, the tensions that exist to begin with are going to be greatly exacerbated. The elected officials of California have been playing Russian roulette with the lives of the guards and the inmates in these prisons." (Read about California's growing prison crisis.)

"You can't build yourself out of this mess," says Jeanne Woodford, former warden at San Quentin and former head of the CDCR. "The state can't afford it." Apparently, California only accounted for the construction costs and never included the operating expenses.

"So even if those places are built," says Woodford, "where will California get the money to staff them? We're broke. How the heck are we going to operate these prisons? Most prisons cost from $150 to $200 million a year to operate. There's just no money for it."

In addition to overcrowding, the state's corrections efforts are the nation's most expensive and one of the least effective. The state spends $10 billion annually, or $49,000 per inmate for a year in custody, according to statistics from the nonpartisan policy-advising group Legislative Analyst's Office. Yet, California's recidivism rate is 70%, one of the worst in the country.

Given the state's lack of traction on prison reform, a federal three-judge panel recently ordered California to come up with a plan in the next 45 days that reduces the inmate population by nearly 43,000 prisoners. Seth Unger, press secretary for the CDCR, says they will appeal any final ruling to the U.S. Supreme Court. "Congress passed the Prison Litigation Reform Act to limit the power of the federal courts to take control of state prison systems and to order population caps or early release of inmates and we certainly believe the court has overstepped its bounds in this case," says Unger.

He says his department recently introduced a proposal, yet to be deliberated on by legislators, that would reduce the average daily prison population by 27,300. Of course, politicians, particularly state Republicans, are loath to endorse any measure that smacks of releasing prisoners early or that could be viewed as being soft on crime which has been a roadblock to reforming the system in the past. Prison-reform advocates are hoping the ruling by the federal court will inspire political will for their cause.

Even if California avoids federal intervention and the CDCR's current proposal is adopted, mandated state budget cuts will force the department to cut half of the already depleted programs for rehabilitation, substance abuse and vocational training. That would spell disaster, according to Woodford. "We release 10,000 [prisoners] a month now and in that 10,000 very few have been involved in anything to improve who they are as human beings. That should scare us. And in that 10,000 are some very violent people that left a lockup unit like Pelican Bay [to go] right back to the streets that should scare us. What should scare us is our broken policy and not the fact that 40,000 more are going to come out because we should be scared already."

Earthquake Activity Ramps Up at Puerto Rico Subduction Zone

by Mitch Battros - Earth Changes Media

A significant escalation is occurring at the Puerto Rico Subduction Zone. A swarm of quakes continue with close to one hundred quakes in just the last three days. What is most alarming is the increase in magnitudes. When a swarm starts to hit a series of high 3's and into 4's magnitude, it trips a geological/seismological switch often elevating an 'observation' into a 'watch'. (see EQ links below)

If the earthquake swarm maintains magnitude 4's, it is likely that a "warning" will be issued. In what might be considered a 'unique' situation, it would be rare to call for evacuation of an area based on earthquake foreshocks. However, with current technology and a better understanding of earthquake patterns, I would not be surprised if Puerto Rico and Caribbean Islands are put on alert.

What is being outlined above very much resembles the procedures of volcanic escalation which uses color codes and levels describing each position of elevation. If this occurs, it will be the first time measuring seismic escalation was used to foretell a large/mega earthquake event.

Volcanic Color Codes/Levels: http://www.earthchangesmedia.com/images/volcanic\_color\_code.jpg

It is not typical to witness an earthquake 'swarm' with high-moderate magnitude events. They are usually in the magnitude 1, 2, 3 range. Take a look below at what is happening right now on the Puerto Rico Subduction Zone. I will present two links. The World EQ' - Past 7 days and the Puerto Rico Region.

A few times this forum has received posts from scientists and engineers who have good ideas but perhaps don't have a place to promote them.

Perhaps, I am being presumptuous but if this new site helps just one individuals - that's one, at least.

http://tech.groups.yahoo.com/group/BLACKSCIENCE\_INVENTORS/

The purpose of this forum is simple: to be a place for black scientists, inventors, engineers and the like to meet and HOPEFULLY get things happening for the black world community. It is created to enable those who wish to place their resumes, ideas, concepts, scientific objectives, etc. so that others of like minds or interests can see them, exchange ideas and work together. Ideally, participants could form partnerships, sponsor projects and mutually enable each other by providing support and/or leads to reach each others' goals.

We have been mobilizing for the Greening of Nairobi East; A KCDN Initiative in the last of days.

We had set 5th of September 2009 as the day we will all converge at Komarock and help the Komarock Canal and plant trees along the same Canal. On this day, we want to help r From Talking to Tasking by rolling our sleeves and getting into the trenches.

We are very happy with the kind of responses we have received from the Government, th Council of Nairobi, Total Kenya Ltd through Eco Challenge, Infill Academy and Friends KCDN.

A lot has been said about Environmental Conservation and degradation and I want to beli time has indeed come that we must move From Talking to Tasking. It does Kenya proud we all take issues of environment personal. It is us who degrade and abuse our environme it is us who can help stem the tide.

If you took a look at the Nairobi River, the one that Hon Mutula Kilonzo wanted to have a swim at, you will see the kind of difference that has made us adopt the rally call; From Talking to Tasking.

Under the able hands of Hon John N Michuki, we are hearing no talks, but we are seeing plenty of action. Unlike other ministers who keep Talking, Hon Michuli is Tasking, and to the best relief to many of us.

We have also heard enough Talk about the Mau Forest and the need for the same to be protected and conserved. I bet, action should have been heard louder. There is no way the destruction of Mau is being played with. Is it not time the Rt Hon Prime Minister stopped Talking and started Tasking?

As we rally behind the Rt Hon Prime Minister and the Hon John Michuki, we must delink politics and political gains out of all efforts at saving Mau. We must be sober enough to appreciate the effects of the mismanagement of Mau on our lives. We must appreciate that Mau Destruction is hitting us very hard in our homes;

The rivers have dried and with this, we now have power rationing.

The rivers have dried and with this, our cattle are being affected.

The rivers have dried and with this, our world acclaimed tea will come to ruin.

The rivers have dried and with this, Nairobi does not have enough and sure water supply.

Yet, when we talk about Mau being saved, others are busy playing politics and engaging in brinkmanship.

Time has come for all Kenyans and people of good will to rise up and be counted. Are you on the side of destruction; destroying our ecosystem just for political and material gains? Or, are you on the side of Kenyans who want water to flow along, so that their cattle can breed in peace and plenty; so that water can once more run in our taps; so that power can light our houses again; so that our families can stop bathing in shifts.

That must be our call.

We need a clear resolve on this. And time has come to move From Talking to Tasking. And the Rt Hon Prime Minister must move From Talking to Tasking. It is for the good of all humanity and we are firmly behind you on this.

At KCDN, we will be doing the little we can to make a difference. Kindly join us on 5th September 2009 as we help clean the Komarock Canal and plant trees along the same and in our compounds.

The Democratic Party

Walter --

In the last few months, we've made more progress on health insurance reform than we made in the previous 60 years. You can tell from the reaction of reform opponents that we're doing something right.

Special interests who profit from the status quo are spreading brazen lies that stir up anger, and Republican leaders are chiming in with over-the-top rhetoric that detracts from the public debate. Just last week, Rush Limbaugh insinuated that President Obama was comparable to Adolf Hitler.

It's a perfect example of "the old politics of fear and division" that President Obama talked about during his campaign. But there is too much at stake, too many Americans facing rising health care costs and shrinking paychecks, for us to let the politics of yesterday prevail.

The last thing opponents of reform want is a positive, civil debate. They know they'll lose on the merits, so they're turning to lies and division. It's up to us to expose each distortion for what it is: a lie, plain and simple. If we do that, we'll better our politics -- and bring badly-needed reform.

Monday, the White House launched a new online resource that could help -- a "Reality Check" site to help Americans clear up health care lies and misinformation. Visit the site today -- and then send it to your friends so that everyone you know learns the truth.

We face too many challenges together -- we can't afford to continue the slash and burn politics of yesterday. Please stand with me and fight for the truth.

Thank you,

I would say - why not change both the names of Hamito-Semitic (there are no Hamites) and Afro-Asiatic (why give equal weight to the Semitic component, when 8 of the 9 Afro-Asiatic languages are found exclusively in Africa).

Why not change it to: East African.

It is in East Africa that the highest concentration of Afro-Asiatic languages are found - Omotic, Beja, South- Central- and East Kushitic, etc (Ancient Egyptian).

(Berber is found in Northwest Africa, and Chadic (Hausa) is found in West Africa).

Perhaps AA should be East African, and Bantu is West African.

And it makes sense from standard language theory, to presume that the point of origin of a language group is where there is the greatest linguistic diversity within that language group, which for 'Afro-Asiatic' is in the Somalia/Ethiopia region.

Also, non-Arabic Semitic is spoken in that region, and I wonder what the origin of that is - is it a back-migration of Semitic from Saudi-Arabia to Africa, or is it the oldest Semitic still spoken?

Congo: Three Cheers for Eve Ensler?
Written by keith harmon snow
Monday, 24 December 2007

A major propaganda front has swept the Western media decrying the unprecedented sexual violence in the Eastern Democratic Republic of Congo. As this story goes to press the war in Congo-claiming 1000 lives a day in the East and more than 7 million people since 1996-is escalating yet again. More than 1.2 million were reported displaced in June, with at least 8000 additional displaced persons on October 22 after fighting escalated-as Western-backed forces perpetrate genocide and terrorism to depopulate and secure the land for multinational mining interests.

Needing to explain away the failure of the 2006 "elections process" and the "peace" that never was, the propaganda system has embraced the theme of femicide. As always, the white champions of human rights and humanitarian concern in the end blame the black victims for their own suffering. While raising much needed awareness, the propaganda front serves a selective and expedient agenda, a tool used to pressure certain political groups and provide cover for the real terrorists.

On a visit to Eastern Congo in May 2007, Eve Ensler-the playwright and producer of the Vagina Monologues-was witness to the profound human suffering and unprecedented sexual violence.

"I have just returned from hell," Ensler wrote, in Glamour Magazine in August. "I am trying for the life of me to figure out how to communicate what I have seen and heard in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. How do I convey these stories of atrocities without your shutting down, quickly turning the page or feeling too disturbed?"

Ensler came to see what those whose eyes are open cannot deny: the sexual violence and predation in Central Africa is unacceptable, unfathomable, and stoppable. And she has the courage and audacity to write and speak about it.

Three cheers for Eve Ensler!!

Or not?

Through her global campaign to end violence against women, called "V-Day," and with a nine-page feature article in Glamour magazine in August, Ensler launched a campaign calling for an end to rape and sexual torture against women and girls in eastern Democratic Republic of Congo. One of the voices she uses to tell the story is that of Christine Schuler Deschryver, described as a human rights activist in Congo. Ensler, Deschryver and the campaign have received a lot of press, with stories in Glamour, interviews on the BBC, PBS and Al Jazeera. The New York Times picked up the issue of rape in Eastern Congo in early October, and the Times story was followed the next day with a Democracy Now! interview with Christine Schuler Deschryver.

"Stop Raping Our Greatest Resource, Power To The Women And Girls Of The Democratic Republic Of Congo," Ensler's web site explains, "is being initiated by the women of Eastern DRC, V-Day and UNICEF on behalf of United Nations Action Against Sexual Violence in Conflict. The campaign calls for an end to the violence and to impunity for those who commit these atrocities." [1]

An end to impunity for those who commit these atrocities?

Ensler's Glamour article is an apt documentary of human suffering and courage. The doctors working to save and heal the survivors of sexual brutality are heroes. The women and girls who have survived are themselves portraits of courage and human dignity. The issue demands international condemnation and action. However, in her nine-page portrait of heroism and suffering, there is a single half paragraph that ostensibly addresses the roots of the problem.

"The perpetrators include the Interahamwe," Ensler writes, "the Hutu fighters who fled neighboring Rwanda in 1994 after committing genocide there; the Congolese army; a loose assortment of armed civilians; even U.N. peacekeepers." [2]

THE GLAMOUROUS GENOCIDE

Who is responsible for the brutality?

According to Glamour and Vanity Fair, it is always those rag-tag Rwandan genocidaires who fled justice in Rwanda, or those ruthless Congolese soldiers from the heart of darkness, and the loose assortments of obviously "loose" civilians, and even the U.N. peacekeepers who, in the United Nations Observers Mission in Congo (MONUC), are men from India, Uruguay, Nepal, Pakistan. and in Darfur, Sudan, it is those damned Janjaweed-Arabs on horseback, you know, the usual dark-skinned subjects.

And there is no mention whatsoever of the deeper realities and responsibilities of white people and predatory capitalism. Where is the discussion of the backers behind this warfare? Who sells the weaponry? Who produces it? Who photographs the UNICEF poster children and peddles the images of suffering in the Western press for billion dollar profit-driven campaigns that do not in the end uplift the people who they claim to care about?

Why are there gala UNICEF "fundraising" benefits-the Annual Snowflake Ball-in New York hotels with white-tie U.S. Presidents as honorary ambassadors and state department officials from the National Security Council-and $10,000 tickets-held by and for officials who remain silent about genocide in Ethiopia or northern Uganda or the U.S.-backed coup d'etat that occurred in Rwanda in 1994 or Zaire (Congo) in 1996? [3]

What we know to be true is that Eve Ensler was lucky to get this article in Glamour at all. The magazine is a travesty of violence against women-cosmetics, luxury aids, "health" and "beauty" products, liposuction, breast implants and sexually seductive advertising peddling the "perfect" female body and great American culture of sexual violence-and yet Glamour offers a platform for Ensler's message about sexual brutality of unprecedented human proportions.

What's going on here? There is a reason these stories proliferate and it is not about life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Glamour's publishers do not care about the suffering of black people. It is pure Western white supremacist propaganda serving to underscore the accepted narratives of Central Africa and assist in the consolidation of power over the region, but this is neither seen nor appreciated by white "news" consumers.

What Eve Ensler and Glamour have not addressed are the warlords behind the warlords, the corporations and white collar crime which is never-or selectively, now and then expeditiously, if ever-reported on the pages of Glamour, Vanity Fair, the New Yorker, or the other promoters of popular propaganda brought to us by the Conde Naste corporate empire.

Behind the warfare always blamed on Africans, behind the warlords' deadly battles, are other warlords and corporations from Western countries. The reason people-U.S. and Canadian citizens-are unaware of the issues involved is because of publications like Glamour and the corporations that control them. Ensler's article begins to look like an advertisement for UNICEF and the so-called "humanitarian" AID industry, which is itself part of the problem, because it remains silent about corporate plunder, "humanitarian" organizations partnering with the corporate exploiters, shared directorships with mining, defense, petroleum and other multinational interests. UNICEF and "not-for-profit" organizations like it are in the business of perpetuating their own survival, the vanguard of transnational capital.

Asked what to do, Ensler points to UNICEF: "Right now, [the best thing to do is] to give to the V-Day UNICEF campaign at vday.org/congo."

In the end Ensler's article-like the few racialized articles about rape in Rwanda, Congo and Darfur that have appeared in Ms. Magazine [4]-is a compelling portrait that serves a narrow political agenda of which Ensler appears not to be conscious. Such articles-appearing in gendered white spaces of privilege like Glamour or Ms. or Cosmopolitan-blame the very (African) victims of an international system of oppression that revolves around permanent warfare economies-U.S., Canada, Britain, Belgium, Israel, France, Canada, Australia-and they serve to promote the interests of these by never challenging the perpetrators of chaos and terrorism that are directly aligned with the predominant military-intelligence establishment.

When reporting on rape in Central Africa, articles in Conde Nast group publications-as with almost all publications-have never challenged the governments of either Rwanda or Uganda, soldiers of which have committed massive sexual atrocities, crimes against humanity and other war crimes. [5]

How does it happen that a notorious "dictator" and "cannibal" like Uganda's legendary dictator Idi Amin could live out his life in splendor in Saudi Arabia? Far more people have suffered terrorism under President Yoweri Museveni in Uganda, than under Idi Amin, yet Museveni remains the West's golden boy in the old Pearl of Africa. It was Paul Kagame-"the Butcher of Kigali"-who in the early years-circa 1981 to 1988-wielded the iron fist of terror in Uganda. Kagame was Museveni's director of Military Intelligence and is now President of Rwanda. Taban Amin, Idi Amin's eldest son, is today in charge of the Uganda's dreaded Internal Security Organization, the private terror instrument of President Yoweri Museveni. While Ugandan troops are perpetrating atrocities in Eastern Congo at this writing, no one says anything about them. Uganda remains near the top of the list for AID to ARMS scandals, even as Museveni visits with George W. Bush at the White House (October 30). Similarly, the Kagame government always gets away with murder because Kagame has friends in high places.

An end to impunity for those who commit these atrocities?

Indeed, it turns out that Eve Ensler is collaborating with certain powerful interests whose involvement in Central Africa has never come under scrutiny. In a September 17, 2007 interview with Ms. Magazine journalist Michele Kort, broadcast by PBS, Ensler was joined in a dialog about sexual violence in Eastern Congo by Christine Schuler Deschryver, described by PBS as "from Bukavu in the Congo, who is an activist against the sexual violence." [6] This is the same "human rights activist from Congo" interviewed by Amy Goodman on Democracy Now!

Who is Christine Schuler Deschryver?

THE POLITICAL ECONOMY OF RAPE REPORTING

Jumping on the bandwagon, on October 8, 2007, Democracy Now! ran an interview between Amy Goodman and Christine Schuler Deschryver about sexual violence in Congo. [7] Deschryver claimed that studies were done that show that sixty percent of the sexual violence in Eastern Congo is committed by "these people who did the genocide in Rwanda, by Hutu's who made the genocide in their country."

Christine Schuler Deschryver describes the process where militias enter a village, kill all the men, and sexually assault and brutalize the women. [8]

This is "femicide" says Deschryver, a charge repeated by Eve Ensler and echoed by Amy Goodman. "People can help me first of all being an Ambassador and talking about the problem going on in Congo because it's a silent war. They are killing, they are raping babies. It's like Darfur: Darfur started four years ago. But Congo started almost eleven years ago and nobody's talking about this femicide, this holocaust. It's a femicide because they are just destroying the female species."

Femicide? Congolese women sexually traumatized, Congolese men killed? It is a process of depopulation and ethnic cleansing.

Speaking from the Democracy Now! studios in New York City, Christine Schuler Deschryver describes a war involving African countries outside Congo, but she does not name Western interests involved.

Christine Schuler Deschryver describes her personal sacrifice to help the victims of Congo's wars. She states that she works in "administration, in her office." Until 2002, at least, Christine Schuler Deschryver was known for gorilla conservation, not human rights, in Congo.

Christine Schuler Deschryver is married to Carlos Schuler, a Swiss German working for decades in the Kahuzi-Biega National Park in South Kivu. Carlos Schuler and Christine Schuler Deschryver both work for GTZ- Deutsche Gesellschaft für technische Zusammenarbeit-a "German technological cooperation agency." Carlos negotiates with warlords for "conservation." Because of his gorilla conservation interests, Schuler has been described as "Dian Fossey's successor." Schuler has maintained very private relations with all military forces in the region, and there are questions about mineral plunder and military collaboration and GTZ's role in structural violence and warfare in Congo.

GTZ is a German government institution with a corporate structure. The GTZ Supervisory Board has representatives of four Federal [German] Ministries: the Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation and Development (BMZ), Federal Foreign Office, Federal Ministry of Finance, and Federal Ministry of Economics and Labour. Since 1998 the Supervisory Board Chairman has been State Secretary Erich Stather from the BMZ.

GTZ's involvement in Eastern Congo is notable, given the German links to the Lueshe mine in North Kivu, and the German embassy's role in exploitation, depopulation and genocide in Congo. One top GTZ executive appears to be linked to German corporate interests seeking to control the Lueshe mine, now controlled by their U.S./German competitors (see below). The German government has been understandably mute about plunder in Congo, and the presentation of Christine Schuler Deschryver's-a GTZ agent in Bukavu-as a champion of human rights is a perfect example of the twisted "charity" and "philanthropy" dumped on the Congolese people.

Like the rest of Congo, Kahuzi-Biega is rich in minerals coveted by corporations and governments that include German multinationals like Bayer-subsidiary H.C. Starck-involved in coltan in Congo.

But the interests of Carlos Schuler and Christine Deschryver run much deeper than "gorilla conservation" and "human rights" activism in Eastern Congo. The Deschryver family is one of the elite families in Belgium. Christine's father, Adrian Deschryver, was one of the first "rangers" of the Kahuzi-Biega National Park. [9] The Deschryver family worked with the Mobutu dictatorship. The great patriarch was August Deschryver, Belgium's Minister to the Congo at transition, in 1960, a likely candidate involved in undermining and destroying the Patrice Lumumba government, and assassinating the man, in the twilight of Congo's Independence.

The Kahuzi-Biega National Park began as a Zoological and Forest Reserve gazetted in 1937 after over-hunting threatened to wipe Congo's big game off the map. Adrien Deschryver helped found the Kahuzi-Biega Park in 1970. [10] One of the first actions was to forcibly displace the huge pygmy population from the park. The pygmies were consulted only to find locations of elephants and gorillas, and then they were removed: they were lured, tricked, forcibly driven out, and some died refusing to leave. This is exactly what is happening in other parts of Congo today, involving USAID, GTZ, and big "conservation" and "humanitarian" interests like CARE International. [11]

Five pygmy groupements-groups of villages spread over large geographical areas-were destroyed. GTZ and UNESCO, the United Nations Scientific and Cultural Organization, got involved in the 1980s, after UNESCO designated Kahuzi-Biega a "World Heritage Site"-clearly another mechanism designed by Western interests to establish cultural and geographic control over people and landscapes. When the GTZ sought to implement "community development" they did not consult with the pygmies to determine their true needs, or wants. The result was armed violence and death. There was no compensation, and the pygmies-forced out of their universe of knowing, the forest-were left homeless and destitute in a world they did not understand. In 2000 era discussions involving some "440 stakeholders" under the new mantra of participatory involvement, there were only two people of pygmy origin, but these were lauded as representation of all the pygmy peoples.

As one Congolese consultant wrote, "Over the two-month period of research into the situation of the Bambuti Pygmies and the protected areas in North and South Kivu-the Kahuzi-Biega National Park-none of the indigenous Bambuti, Barwa, Batwa and Babuluko [people] displayed any enthusiasm for or awareness of the Kahuzi-Biega National Park conservation project. This project has left them worse off than before it was introduced and implemented. The Pygmies have been expelled and driven out with neither indemnity nor other compensation. They have been cast aside. They belong nowhere." [12]

This is genocide.

Genocide is the congregation of femicide and homicide, the destruction of an entire people, and that is what is happening to people in Central Africa, regardless of their ethnicity.

The human rights of the pygmies in Eastern Congo are the most violated of the most violated on earth, thanks to the Belgian family Deschryver, UNESCO and the GTZ.

The Amy Goodman report ends with a plea by Christine Schuler Deschryver for funds to put a roof on a house for survivors of sexual violence. How to help? Give to UNICEF, she says, or to Eve Ensler's international organization "V-Day".

The Democracy Now! report about rape in Congo followed in rather interesting coincidence with a New York Times feature. Goodman opens her report noting that she interviewed Deschryver "last month" [September] in New York. But the Democracy Now! report appeared on October 8, 2007.

On October 7, 2007, in "Rape Epidemic Raises Trauma of Congo War," Jeffrey Gettleman reported on rape in Congo for the New York Times.

If Amy Goodman was shocked and horrified about Christine Schuler Deschryver's descriptions of the scale and nature of sexual violence in Congo, why did she wait so long to run the interview? Why did the Democracy Now! report follow one day after the New York Times feature? Coincidence? Or is the Democracy Now! report just another expedient piece of a coordinated propaganda strategy?

The Gettleman report was a travesty of deception in classic New York Times form. "Eastern Congo is going through another one of its convulsions of violence," Gettleman writes, "and this time it seems that women are being systematically attacked on a scale never before seen here."

In fact, the situation in Central Africa has been one steady "convulsion of violence" since, at least, the Rwandan Patriotic Front invasion of Rwanda from Uganda in 1990. Zaire exploded in 1996, and the killing and raping has never stopped. This author has consistently and repeatedly reported on massive rape, sexual mutilation, and slavery as weapons of war and depopulation in Central Africa since at least 2001, and these were widely reported by others before that. Now, barely a year after the "historic national elections" that brought President Joseph Kabila to power in October 2006, The New York Times is doing damage control.

"The days of chaos in Congo were supposed to be over," wrote Gettleman. "Last year, this country of 66 million people held a historic election that cost $500 million and was intended to end Congo's various wars and rebellions and its tradition of epically bad government."

Things don't just fall apart in Congo. "Epically bad government" and "chaos" are typically manufactured to serve powerful interests-the "shock doctrine" defined by Naomi Klein [13]-and are the result of epically bad reporting and the impunity that is insured by Western disinformation and propaganda campaigns. Hundreds of millions of dollars pumped into the 2006 electoral process, and much was stolen. But the elections exercise was not even a band-aid on the festering war in Congo. To describe the ongoing warfare in Eastern DRC as the most recent convulsion of violence is to feed the Western stereotype of the hopeless African condition and run cover for multinational plunder and depopulation, backing warlords, on and on.

Gettleman's choice of sources and experts is very interesting. One of these, also referenced by Amy Goodman, is Sir John Holmes, a British diplomat with a long history of support for predatory imperialism.

"The sexual violence in Congo is the worst in the world," said John Holmes, the United Nations under secretary general for humanitarian affairs, to the New York Times.

Holmes provides a tidy commentary about African savagery. What we don't learn from the New York Times is that Holmes previously worked for the British security firm Thomas De La Rue, one of the top companies in the world that prints money, security documents (e.g. passports) and postage stamps for 150 countries; currency instruments are used to entrench and maintain structural violence. Thomas De La Rue prints money for the Isle of Man, an offshore tax haven connected to money laundering and mercenaries Tony Buckingham and Simon Mann, and they have printed special currency notes for war-torn Sierra Leone. More significantly perhaps, Holmes was the British Ambassador in Lisbon, Portugal from 1999 to 2001, the period of war in Congo where Congolese warlord Jean-Pierre Bemba, partnered with Uganda, a close British ally, launched the Movement for the Liberation of Congo (MLC) rebellion.

Bemba has a villa in Portugal, and his criminal syndicate involves his brother-in-law, blood diamonds and mercenary partner Antony Teixeira, a Portuguese tycoon living in South Africa. Bemba's troops committed massive rape and sexual violence in DRC, and the Effacer Le Tableau campaign was a genocide campaign against pygmies, but Bemba has never been held to account.[14] U.N. Under Secretary General John Holmes is selectively used by the New York Times to legitimize their propaganda, but Holmes himself should be deposed about his role as an economic hit-man supporting plunder and money laundering.

"The sheer numbers, the wholesale brutality, the culture of impunity - it's appalling," says John Holmes, in empty platitudes.

A PORNOGRAPHY OF VIOLENCE

Jeffrey Gettleman goes on to attribute violence to "one of the newest groups to emerge" called "the Rastas, a mysterious gang of dreadlocked fugitives who live deep in the forest, wear shiny tracksuits and Los Angeles Lakers jerseys and are notorious for burning babies, kidnapping women and literally chopping up anybody who gets in their way." In fact, the Rastas have been operating in Eastern Congo for at least three years, have previously committed atrocities, and are not a "new group to emerge."

Gettleman has to explain away the violence in African terms, never the white multinational corporations, arms dealers, criminal Western syndicates or "conservation" organizations (they fund) occupying the soils of North or South Kivu provinces on vast tracts of land.

Further, these feature articles express some very white supremacist thinking about rape in Congo. "Because there has been no justice," Eve Ensler states, "because so few perpetrators have been held accountable for the crimes that they're committing, it's becoming as Christine [Schuler Deschryver] said to me when we were there, like a country sport: rape."

So, according to this description, Congolese men are universally castigated for "rape as sport," no matter that this is committed by armed forces backed, armed, and licensed by the West to commit massive sexual atrocities, or that Congolese men are killed outright when militias enter villages. As shown below, the Congolese militias and National Army serve a deeper, hidden, Western corporate agenda: organized white-collar crime. They are paid in kind for services provided to maintain and insure natural resource plunder and the acquisition and control of vast tracts of Congolese territory.

Eve Ensler's privilege and white supremacy here is illuminated by her feminist perspective, her feminist crusade, and it becomes acceptable for Eve Ensler-and Ms., Glamour, PBS, The Washington Post, Newsweek, etc.-to label all Congolese men as sexual predators. This, of course, is the chorus of the Western media to begin with-Africans are sexually licentious, they copulate like monkeys-only it transcends boundaries and becomes an African condition. Isn't that why they [those savages] are all HIV/AIDS positive?

Jeffrey Gentleman took it a step further with a direct quote by a Congolese doctor that describes men in Congo as primates. "There used to be a lot of gorillas in there," he said. "But now they've been replaced by much more savage beasts." Such language would not be tolerated by the New York Times to describe rape elsewhere. Rape as a weapon of war is happening in Afghanistan and Iraq, committed by US soldiers, but the depiction of savagery would never be applied. But here the propaganda system knowingly reduces the issue to sub-human animal behavior by black savages.

There are extensive case studies analyzing and exploring the systematization of sexual violence and the wounds it inflicts in warfare in Eastern Congo. [15] Institutions like Columbia and University of Denver have studied rape and war in eastern Congo for years-funded by private foundations and the euphemistically named United States Institute for Peace.

The United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, UNIFEM and other UN agencies have huge budgets dedicated to "humanitarian" reporting and research. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), alone, has a 2007 budget of $US 686,591,107, "roughly the same level as in 2006," with an additional $40,000,000 infusion announced by MONUC on October 22, 2007. OCHA merely coordinates 126 organizations, including 10 United Nations agencies and 50 international agencies.

The "humanitarian" misery industry is part of a system perpetuating, supporting, and facilitating a permanent state of emergency in Eastern Congo.

People know about sexual atrocities in Congo and they have known about it at the highest levels for years. The New York Times shares culpability in the proliferation of war in Central Africa; the Western media merely generates war propaganda.

WHERE IS ANDERSON COOPER (360)?

It is well known that orders come from military officers. The orders given call for mass rape and sexual violence as a means of terrorizing and destroying communities, with permanent psychological and physical effects on survivors. The chain of command determines what soldiers do and don't do. There are hierarchies, and soldiers include young boys and men conscripted into terror networks. To disobey orders is certain death in these militias, and escape is a deadly proposition. For thousands of men and boys in Central Africa the "least dangerous place to be" is in the military-be it a militia or national army. For thousands of women and girls in Central Africa the "least dangerous place to be" is wedded to a soldier or taken "captive" by him. Becoming a soldier, or "marrying" one, is a necessary and positive choice for many people. [16] The agency of Congolese men and boys and women and girls is therefore rendered invisible and neutralized by such generalizations and stereotypes pronounced by western elites both in and out of the "humanitarian" business sector. Further, by castigating all Congolese men, or all soldiers, the blame and responsibility are shifted away from officers and civil authorities who run these criminal networks, and who give orders to rape and plunder as policy. All of the rape stories in the recent propaganda front characterize rape as wanton sexual chaos, rather than weapons and instruments of warfare and social disintegration.

It is the standard message: African chaos, savagery, sexual licentiousness, and primitive, sub-human brutalization. This is the heart of darkness, after all, a place in the "middle of nowhere, a primeval jungle landscape where it is every man for himself, every woman for any man.

Eve Ensler further demonstrates the arrogance of whiteness and ignorance of events by effectively stating that the United States has said nothing about rape in Congo, because we are allies with Rwanda and Uganda, who suffered genocide and saw the so-called genocidaires flood into Congo, who graciously accepted them. In fact, the U.S. overthrew the government of Rwanda in 1994, and the when Rwandan and Ugandan forces shelled refugee camps in Eastern Congo (1996) they followed this with a campaign of extermination where hundreds of thousands of women and children were hunted, raped, and massacred.

This genocide has not been named. Howard French, New York Times bureau chief in Nairobi in the 1990's, tried to name it, and he comes close in his lukewarm treatise on Western plunder-Africa: A Continent for the Taking-but his efforts were too little. French moved on to become bureau chief in China, leaving Africa behind, with no commitment to act on what he learned. Everyone has tried to bury the truth with the skeletons. The recent thrusts by the Clinton Foundation in Rwanda-dumping millions of dollars into "humanitarian" programs-are a perfect example.

The U.S. factions-the Rwanda Patriotic Front and Uganda People's Defense Forces that backed their invasion of Rwanda-committed massive rapes in Rwanda as well. From 1990 to 1994 the Ugandan/RPF invaders in Rwanda raped as policy, and Human Rights Watch covered it with their reports of mass rape attributed, universally and solely, to the Hutu genocidaires. This is the political economy of rape and genocide.

Eve Ensler and Christine Schuler Deschryver regurgitate the accepted narratives and blame the victims of corporate and military plunder aligned with Anglo-American-Israeli interests. To her credit, Eve Ensler mentions SONY Playstation and cellphones as culprits, and she suggests action should be taken against corporations, but she blames the illegal mineral trade on the genocidal murderers from Rwanda, the Interahamwe (just as all violence in Darfur is blamed on Janjaweed, and all violence in Afghanistan is blamed on Taliban). But she states that "we don't know who" is involved behind or beside these. This cultural reductionism feeds the mainstream media discourses that perpetuate oppressions and consolidate Western power.

Many of the criminals involved were named in the United Nations Panel of Experts reports on illegal extraction of natural resources from Congo. Countless others have been named by numerous independent journalists, including this author, over, and over and over.

John Bredenkamp. Billy Rautenbach. George Forrest. Louis Michel. Paul Kagame. Yoweri Museveni. Salim Saleh. James Kabarebe. Walter Kansteiner. Maurice Tempelsman. Philippe de Moerloose. Dan Gertler. Nienne Viscount Davignon. Bill Clinton. Simon Village. Ramnik Kotecha. Jean-Pierre Bemba. Romeo Dallaire.

Nothing is ever done. After the production of the United Nations Panel of Experts reports on the plunder of Congo's natural resources, nothing was done. Criminal syndicates lobbied to have their names cleared and the United Nations bucked under. Emboldened by toothless international legal instruments and spineless international leaders, the corporations and their criminal syndicates stepped up their operations. Plunder, depopulation, rape, sexual slavery-anything goes.

And the media provided its smokescreens: Anderson Cooper "360".

Eve Ensler has no idea what she is talking about and, on a certain level, like all the rest of us, Eve Ensler is another Mazungu whitey who has no business being in Central Africa at all, because she has no idea what has happened, or is happening, or why. Her white skin and feminist crusade act as a badge of credibility and insures her privileged access to Western media corporations that benefit from "chaos" and depopulation. When "peace" is discussed it revolves around Western "charity" and "goodwill," yet more than 100 years of Western involvement in Africa have culminated in permanent slaughter and depopulation across the continent. The raw materials continue to leave.

Christine Schuler Deschryver represents another face of privilege. When times got hard in 1996 she packed her suitcase and left with her two children for Belgium. She flies to New York and is interviewed on Democracy Now! Listeners in the U.S. believe she is a Congolese native, but she is a Belgian expatriate whose family is a mainstay of colonialism and neocolonialism in Congo. And the Congolese women are never allowed to fly to New York or to tell the deeper story of deracination in "the middle of nowhere," in Congo. What is the Deschryver family relationship to Philippe De Moerloose or Louis Michel or nienne Viscount Davignon or the other principal interlocutors in the Belgian money and power syndicates involved behind the scenes in Congo today?

To get a sense of what Glamour does not report-what the New York Times, Ms., Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, Newsweek, The Nation, BBC, National Public Radio and CNN's Anderson Cooper "360" will not tell us-take a look behind the scenes in eastern Congo and juxtapose the unreported realities with the personal stories of trauma and recovery told by Eve Ensler in Glamour magazine. While the mainstream corporate media always reduces these stories to a few simple facts, and a panoply of supposedly unfathomable black-on-black violence, there are always some skeletons to be found lurking in the shadows of white society.

THERE'S GOLD IN THEM (BLOODY) HILLS

The North and South Kivu provinces of the Democratic Republic of Congo remain awash in blood. Over the past decade hundreds of thousands of women have suffered sexual violence in these provinces as a weapon of war meant to terrorize local populations and gain control of natural resources. Sexual violence includes mutilations, rape and other forms of torture.

Rwandan-backed General Laurent Nkunda has occupied eastern DRC for several years, and was involved in atrocities, war crimes and crimes against humanity in Congo during the first (1996-1997) and second (1998-2004) Congo occupations by Uganda and Rwanda.

The United Nations Observers Mission in DRC (MONUC) makes possible the occupation of Congo by General Laurent Nkunda today. Nkunda is backed by the military regime of President Paul Kagame in Rwanda and by the baby-faced Jean-Pierre Bemba, the rebel warlord from DRC's Equateur province whose interests and ties in DRC go back to his dark alliance with the dictator Joseph Mobutu and his Western backers.

The U.S. and European interests backing General Laurent Nkunda run deeper than the blood in the fields and rivers of eastern Congo. The German Embassy in the Democratic Republic of Congo is involved in shady business deals, backing militias and plundering raw materials from Congo, and behind them is U.S. involvement. This has partially occurred through the military control of a mine called Lueshe, located in a village called Lueshe, in North Kivu, some 170 kilometers northwest of Goma. But it also involves coltan, cassiterite, diamonds and gold, and the economic benefits that accrue to those who control land and taxes.

One gold mining firm with vast landholdings in South Kivu province is Canada

's Banro Corporation. Banro has control of four major properties, 27 exploration permits and 5730 square kilometers of gold mining concessions. [17] Banro operates only in the Democratic Republic of Congo, in the blood-drenched South Kivu province. Look at the size of their landholdings: . When we talk about International Criminal Tribunals, who are the real war criminals? What about Simon Village, Peter Cowley, Arnold Kondrat, John Clarke, Bernard van Rooyen, Piers Cumberlege and Richard Lachcik-the directors of Banro Corporation? [18] What is the definition of "white collar" crime? How does a company of white executives like Banro from Canada gain control of such vast concessions? Through bloodshed and depopulation with black people pulling the triggers.

What has changed since King Leopold's era?

NIOBIUM & THE POLITICS OF SCARCITY

In North Kivu province the Lueshe mine provides a well-documented example of the kinds of nefarious activities that all Western governments are involved with in Congo, and in Africa more generally, and these activities certainly apply to Banro and other corporations-this is how the system works, and who works it. The Lueshe Niobium mining scandal merely provides an excellent case study where the thief has been caught red-handed with his hands in the illegal minerals pot.

The Lueshe Niobium mine has been under the control of pro-Rwandan forces for the past eight to ten years, first under the Congolese Rally for Democracy (RCD) rebels allied with Rwanda and Uganda and Jean-Pierre Bemba, and now under the "protection" of General Laurent Nkunda. But Lueshe's history is deeply rooted in the controlling interests of the German government and its U.S. and European partners.

The rare earth metal, niobium or "niob" for short, formerly also known as Columbium, is found there, together with tantalum, in the mineral Pyrochlore. Niobium became extremely important within the last twenty years because of its enlarged range of application for aerospace and defense purposes. Niobium is mainly used as an alloying addition in the production of high quality steel used in the aircraft and space industries, as well as in medicine. It is also widely used in basic applications of machinery and construction and in quite large quantities in the production of stainless steel. Niob, like tantalum and columbium-tantalite or "coltan," is also coveted for the emerging and secretive "nanotechnology" sector-also pivotal to state-of-the-art and futuristic aerospace, defense, communications and biotechnology applications.

There are three principal niobium deposits in the world, all controlled by a company named Arraxa: one in Brazil, one in Canada and the Lueshe mine in

DRC. The owner of Arraxa is the U.S. based company Metallurg Inc., N.Y. Metallurg Inc. is itself a subsidiary of Metallurg Holdings of Wayne, Pennsylvania, and Metallurg Holdings is one of many companies in the investment portfolio of Safeguard International Investment Fund of (Philadelphia) Pennsylvania, Frankfurt and Paris. [19]

In 1982 Metallurg signed a mining convention with the Republic of Zaire, enabling them to exclusively extract all Pyrochlore at the Lueshe niobium deposit for the next twenty years. A company named SOMIKIVU (Société minière du Kivu) was established. Metallurg's 100% subsidiary, the German company GfE Nuremberg (Gesellschaft fuer Elektrometallurgie GmbH), became a 70 % shareholder.

By 1990, SOMIKIVU stopped all production, which was never much at all, because it was apparently insured by HERMES AG, backed by the German Government, to prevent production from the Lueshe mine in order to drive up and control the price of niobium mined and processed at the other sites outside of Congo/Zaire. It was also important to prevent any competitive venture from acquiring the mining rights and subsequently from actually operating the Lueshe mine.

According to available documents, employees of the German Embassy have personally benefiting from, and are involved in, the business of GfE/Metallurg. This involvement has included complicity in extortion, assault, murder, war crimes and crimes against humanity. This involvement includes complicity in sexual atrocities committed by the paid agents of white, Western corporations.

In 1999, after years of inactivity and lost incomes to the Congolese state-a very minority partner manipulated into a position of exploitation as usual-the Lueshe niobium mine was expropriated from its owners by Congo's new president Laurent Kabila and turned over to the firm E. Krall Investment Uganda (Edith Krall), under a Congolese subsidiary company E. Krall Metal Congo. Nonetheless, with the military backing of Rwanda, RCD rebels operated the mine from 1999-2005 with the help of German Embassy (Kinshasa) affiliate Karl Heinz Albers, also a close business partner of the Rwandan Patriotic Front Government of Paul Kagame. It is also alleged that mercenaries have been involved in securing the mine.

The new owners of E. Krall Metal Congo reportedly tried to visit their new mine in 2000, amidst some of the most serious and brutal fighting in the entire war. The officials were arrested by RCD military who immediately called Karl Heinz Albers, then a permanent resident in Kigali, Rwanda. According to documents provided by Krall, Albers explained that the RCD should not ask questions but "eliminate" the Krall group-kill them on the spot. The RCD Goma secret service chief apparently refused to execute this order and released the people of the Krall group. This action helped the Krall delegation to escape to Uganda but made the RCD secret service chief in Congo subject to assassination attempts by killers from Kigali. The RCD chief only saved his life by immediate emigration to Uganda, where he was nonetheless also subject to several assassination attempts reportedly ordered by Karl Heinz Albers.

Albers was reportedly selling coltan from the Krall concessions to the German firm H.G. Starck. From August 2000 to October 2001 Somikivu shipped some 669 tons of Pyrochlore concentrate to Rotterdam harbor in Amsterdam. After October 2001 shipments went to A&M Minerals in London, a company on the U.N. Panel of Experts blacklist who are alleged to have purchased illegally some 2,246 tons of Pyrochlore concentrate before 2004.

Dr. Johannes Wontka, German citizen and technical director of SOMIKIVU, informed the members of Krall M鵒l that while Krall may have the legal titles from Kinshasa to operate Lueshe, the SOMIKIVU (Karl Heintz Albers) gang had the power to do so, therefore they should in their own physical interest "disappear". Dr. Wontka reportedly requested a Major of the RCD army to kill the chief of the "Syndicate Global" the labor union leader of the workers in Lueshe who were on strike due to months of non-payment of salaries. Dr. Wontka reportedly requested that the RCD Major shoot the "whites" that would come soon to Lueshe-the technical delegation of Krall M鵒l who were on their way-and promised money for the job. By chance the RCD Major was the brother-in-law of the trade union leader whom he was tasked to shoot and therefore he neither shot him nor the "whites" he was meant to kill, but reported the case to the police.

The general prosecutor of North Kivu eventually confiscated the passport of Dr. Wontka, and Wontka, who tried to flee Congo with his family, was arrested at the border and brought to Goma, DRC. And then the German Embassy in Kinshasa cranked into gear.

THE POLITICAL ECONOMY OF AMBASSADORSHIPS

The German Ambassador to Kinshasa, Mrs. Doretta Loschelder, informed the public by giving press statements that German investors will not invest in Congo projects and that economic support by Germany will not be transferred to Congo if the authorities in the Democratic Republic of Congo are going to treat investors in the way authorities in Goma were treating the SOMIKIVU agent Dr. Wontka. Under this pressure, Dr. Wontka was released from prison and within 30 minutes fled Congo against orders of the police and immigration officials.

Mrs. Johanna K□□, employed at the ministry of foreign affairs of Germany until 2001, and serving at the German embassy in Kigali as Ambassador of Germany in Kigali, was until February 2004 a member of the board of KHA International AG, the holding parent company of the Karl Heinz Albers companies. Konig apparently visited the Lueshe mine with Rwandan military protection. The RCD were also operating the Lueshe mine under forced labor conditions, at one time reportedly involving prisoners from Rwanda accused of genocide by the Kagame regime.

The Krall complaints-well documented-have been brought to officials in Holland, Germany, Switzerland, England and the U.S., all of which have some financial interest or some link in the chain of exploitation. No action has been taken anywhere, and officials of the German Embassy in Kinshasa reportedly continue to benefit from the illegal exploitation of the Lueshe mine. The multinational firm PricewaterhouseCoopers is also invested in the companies exploiting Lueshe and profiting from war, slavery and depopulation in Congo.

At this time, the Karl Heinz Albers may have transferred his "rights" to Lueshe to one Julien Boilloit, a businessman in Kigali who has a big office in Goma and operates behind militias in the Kivus. Julien Boillot's partners reportedly include Mode Makabuza-a Congolese businessman with multiple interests in Goma. The governor of North Kivu has certainly been paid off.

The recent spate of "news" reports and broadcasts on sexual violence in Eastern Congo are part of a coordinated campaign. It is interesting that sexual violence became an issue when it did. Sexual violence is off the charts, but the appearance, slant, framing and timing of reportage suggests is being used to manipulate public sentiment to serve the interests of certain powerful actors at the expense of others. It is certainly a lever used against the Congolese government of President Joseph Kabila, and it may be that it is coordinated in response to Kabila's recent deals with China. After all, it has now been reported by the BBC that the Kabila government is working with the Hutu genocidaires, the FDLR-Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda-the ultimate evildoers. It doesn't matter that the Paul Kagame government's military and corporate machine has dealt with FDLR all along, when it serves their interests, to import terror and export raw materials. This is all very well-documented.

The Western public is unaware of these greater readings, and merely gobble up the news reports as examples of an equitable and humane Western media system that is attuned to tragedies, even if they were late to decry and report them. Western feminists are all over the rape story, but where should the outrage be directed?

Rape was off the agenda at the International Criminal Tribunal on Rwanda (ICTR) until Hillary Clinton showed up in Arusha, Tanzania-the city that became the economic beneficiary of the lucrative ICTR boondoggle-and pledged

$600,000 to be paid after the first ICTR rape conviction. And then they had to find someone to pin rape charges on-but the RPF who committed the rapes were never at risk. It was Bill and Hillary's blood money, and another financial incentive used to whitewash the Clinton's role in genocide and covert operations in Central Africa. The Rwandan Patriotic Front led by Paul Kagame committed massive sexual atrocities from 1990 to 1994 in Rwanda, and throughout the RPF campaign in Congo, but these were covered up by Western reporters at the time and later blamed, universally, on the Hutus. [20] The establishment narrative on rape in Rwanda was dictated from the start by Human Rights Watch with their pro-RPF treatise Shattered Lives: Sexual Violence During the Rwanda Genocide, published in 1996. [21]

Who should help the victims of sexual violence in Congo? How about the German multinational corporation Bayer AG-whose subsidiary H.C. Starck was directly involved in the coltan plunder by the RPF. How about GTZ, involved in Congo (Zaire) since 1980 and the expropriation and exclusion of the pygmy's way of life. How about Nokia. Intel. Sony. Barrick Gold Corporation. Anglo-American Corp. Banro. Moto Gold. Belgian Philippe de Moerloose and his Damavia Airlines. Bill and Hillary Clinton and their diamond buddy, Maurice Tempelsman, and De Beers. Tempelsman and DeBeers have plundered Congo for more than fifty years. And how about Royal/Dutch Shell, another backer of the Kagame regime.

Add sexual violence to the list, sure, but Eve Ensler and the Western media propaganda campaign for "an end to sexual violence in Congo" must be placed in its proper context: white supremacy and the shock doctrine of global corporate plunder. In this context rape and depopulation are permanent conditions, the real killers get away with murder, and there is endless, brutal revenge by the victors. The victims get all the blame, and their suffering never ends. ~

A few times this forum has received posts from scientists and engineers who have good ideas but perhaps don't have a place to promote them.

Perhaps, I am being presumptuous but if this new site helps just one individuals - that's one, at least.

http://tech.groups.yahoo.com/group/BLACKSCIENCE\_INVENTORS/

The purpose of this forum is simple: to be a place for black scientists, inventors, engineers and the like to meet and HOPEFULLY get things happening for the black world community. It is created to enable those who wish to place their resumes, ideas, concepts, scientific objectives, etc. so that others of like minds or interests can see them, exchange ideas and work together.

Ideally, participants could form partnerships, sponsor projects and mutually enable each other by providing support and/or leads to reach each others' goals.

Tafari-sudra, Khumbaka,

Please check out this article by Keith Harmon Snow, on the racist narrative that takes the place of actually laying blame where it really lies.

And please investigate and publish the following names, who are the people who keep the genocide in the DRC going, and who directly profit from the stealing of raw materials from the people of the DRC, which is at the core of all of this:

Written by keith harmon snow
Monday, 24 December 2007

A major propaganda front has swept the Western media decrying the unprecedented sexual violence in the Eastern Democratic Republic of Congo. As this story goes to press the war in Congo-claiming 1000 lives a day in the East and more than 7 million people since 1996-is escalating yet again.

More than 1.2 million were reported displaced in June, with at least 8000 additional displaced persons on October 22 after fighting escalated-as Western-backed forces perpetrate genocide and terrorism to depopulate and secure the land for multinational mining interests.

Needing to explain away the failure of the 2006 "elections process" and the "peace" that never was, the propaganda system has embraced the theme of femicide. As always, the white champions of human rights and humanitarian concern in the end blame the black victims for their own suffering. While raising much needed awareness, the propaganda front serves a selective and expedient agenda, a tool used to pressure certain political groups and provide cover for the real terrorists.

On a visit to Eastern Congo in May 2007, Eve Ensler-the playwright and producer of the Vagina Monologues-was witness to the profound human suffering and unprecedented sexual violence.

"I have just returned from hell," Ensler wrote, in Glamour Magazine in August. "I am trying for the life of me to figure out how to communicate what I have seen and heard in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. How do I convey these stories of atrocities without your shutting down, quickly turning the page or feeling too disturbed?"

Ensler came to see what those whose eyes are open cannot deny: the sexual violence and predation in Central Africa is unacceptable, unfathomable, and stoppable. And she has the courage and audacity to write and speak about it.

Three cheers for Eve Ensler!!

Or not?

Through her global campaign to end violence against women, called "V-Day," and with a nine-page feature article in Glamour magazine in August, Ensler launched a campaign calling for an end to rape and sexual torture against women and girls in eastern Democratic Republic of Congo. One of the voices she uses to tell the story is that of Christine Schuler Deschryver, described as a human rights activist in Congo. Ensler, Deschryver and the campaign have received a lot of press, with stories in Glamour, interviews on the BBC, PBS and Al Jazeera. The New York Times picked up the issue of rape in Eastern Congo in early October, and the Times story was followed the next day with a Democracy Now! interview with Christine Schuler Deschryver.

"Stop Raping Our Greatest Resource, Power To The Women And Girls Of The Democratic Republic Of Congo," Ensler's web site explains, "is being initiated by the women of Eastern DRC, V-Day and UNICEF on behalf of United Nations Action Against Sexual Violence in Conflict. The campaign calls for an end to the violence and to impunity for those who commit these atrocities." [1]

An end to impunity for those who commit these atrocities?

Ensler's Glamour article is an apt documentary of human suffering and courage. The doctors working to save and heal the survivors of sexual brutality are heroes. The women and girls who have survived are themselves portraits of courage and human dignity. The issue demands international condemnation and action. However, in her nine-page portrait of heroism and suffering, there is a single half paragraph that ostensibly addresses the roots of the problem.

"The perpetrators include the Interahamwe, " Ensler writes, "the Hutu fighters who fled neighboring Rwanda in 1994 after committing genocide there; the Congolese army; a loose assortment of armed civilians; even U.N. peacekeepers. " [2]

THE GLAMOUROUS GENOCIDE

Who is responsible for the brutality?

According to Glamour and Vanity Fair, it is always those rag-tag Rwandan genocidaires who fled justice in Rwanda, or those ruthless Congolese soldiers from the heart of darkness, and the loose assortments of obviously "loose" civilians, and even the U.N. peacekeepers who, in the United Nations Observers Mission in Congo (MONUC), are men from India, Uruguay, Nepal, Pakistan. and in Darfur, Sudan, it is those damned Janjaweed-Arabs on horseback, you know, the usual dark-skinned subjects.

And there is no mention whatsoever of the deeper realities and responsibilities of white people and predatory capitalism. Where is the discussion of the backers behind this warfare? Who sells the weaponry? Who produces it? Who photographs the UNICEF poster children and peddles the images of suffering in the Western press for billion dollar profit-driven campaigns that do not in the end uplift the people who they claim to care about?

Why are there gala UNICEF "fundraising" benefits-the Annual Snowflake Ball-in New York hotels with white-tie U.S. Presidents as honorary ambassadors and state department officials from the National Security Council-and $10,000 tickets-held by and for officials who remain silent about genocide in Ethiopia or northern Uganda or the U.S.-backed coup d'etat that occurred in Rwanda in 1994 or Zaire (Congo) in 1996? [3]

What we know to be true is that Eve Ensler was lucky to get this article in Glamour at all. The magazine is a travesty of violence against women-cosmetics, luxury aids, "health" and "beauty" products, liposuction, breast implants and sexually seductive advertising peddling the "perfect" female body and great American culture of sexual violence-and yet Glamour offers a platform for Ensler's message about sexual brutality of unprecedented human proportions.

What's going on here? There is a reason these stories proliferate and it is not about life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Glamour's publishers do not care about the suffering of black people. It is pure Western white supremacist propaganda serving to underscore the accepted narratives of Central Africa and assist in the consolidation of power over the region, but this is neither seen nor appreciated by white "news" consumers.

What Eve Ensler and Glamour have not addressed are the warlords behind the warlords, the corporations and white collar crime which is never-or selectively, now and then expeditiously, if ever-reported on the pages of Glamour, Vanity Fair, the New Yorker, or the other promoters of popular propaganda brought to us by the Conde Naste corporate empire.

Behind the warfare always blamed on Africans, behind the warlords' deadly battles, are other warlords and corporations from Western countries. The reason people-U.S. and Canadian citizens-are unaware of the issues involved is because of publications like Glamour and the corporations that control them. Ensler's article begins to look like an advertisement for UNICEF and the so-called "humanitarian" AID industry, which is itself part of the problem, because it remains silent about corporate plunder, "humanitarian" organizations partnering with the corporate exploiters, shared directorships with mining, defense, petroleum and other multinational interests. UNICEF and "not-for-profit" organizations like it are in the business of perpetuating their own survival, the vanguard of transnational capital.

Asked what to do, Ensler points to UNICEF: "Right now, [the best thing to do is] to give to the V-Day UNICEF campaign at vday.org/congo. "

In the end Ensler's article-like the few racialized articles about rape in Rwanda, Congo and Darfur that have appeared in Ms. Magazine [4]-is a compelling portrait that serves a narrow political agenda of which Ensler appears not to be conscious. Such articles-appearing in gendered white spaces of privilege like Glamour or Ms. or Cosmopolitan- blame the very (African) victims of an international system of oppression that revolves around permanent warfare economies-U. S., Canada, Britain, Belgium, Israel, France, Canada, Australia-and they serve to promote the interests of these by never challenging the perpetrators of chaos and terrorism that are directly aligned with the predominant military-intelligence establishment. When reporting on rape in Central Africa, articles in Conde Nast group publications- as with almost all publications- have never challenged the governments of either Rwanda or Uganda, soldiers of which have committed massive sexual atrocities, crimes against humanity and other war crimes. [5]

How does it happen that a notorious "dictator" and "cannibal" like Uganda's legendary dictator Idi Amin could live out his life in splendor in Saudi Arabia? Far more people have suffered terrorism under President Yoweri Museveni in Uganda, than under Idi Amin, yet Museveni remains the West's golden boy in the old Pearl of Africa. It was Paul Kagame-"the Butcher of Kigali"-who in the early years-circa 1981 to 1988-wielded the iron fist of terror in Uganda. Kagame was Museveni's director of Military Intelligence and is now President of Rwanda. Taban Amin, Idi Amin's eldest son, is today in charge of the Uganda's dreaded Internal Security Organization, the private terror instrument of President Yoweri Museveni. While Ugandan troops are perpetrating atrocities in Eastern Congo at this writing, no one says anything about them. Uganda remains near the top of the list for AID to ARMS scandals, even as Museveni visits with George W. Bush at the White House (October 30). Similarly, the Kagame government always gets away with murder because Kagame has friends in high places.

An end to impunity for those who commit these atrocities?

Indeed, it turns out that Eve Ensler is collaborating with certain powerful interests whose involvement in Central Africa has never come under scrutiny. In a September 17, 2007 interview with Ms. Magazine journalist Michele Kort, broadcast by PBS, Ensler was joined in a dialog about sexual violence in Eastern Congo by Christine Schuler Deschryver, described by PBS as "from Bukavu in the Congo, who is an activist against the sexual violence." [6] This is the same "human rights activist from Congo" interviewed by Amy Goodman on Democracy Now!

Who is Christine Schuler Deschryver?

THE POLITICAL ECONOMY OF RAPE REPORTING

Jumping on the bandwagon, on October 8, 2007, Democracy Now! ran an interview between Amy Goodman and Christine Schuler Deschryver about sexual violence in Congo. [7] Deschryver claimed that studies were done that show that sixty percent of the sexual violence in Eastern Congo is committed by "these people who did the genocide in Rwanda, by Hutu's who made the genocide in their country."

Christine Schuler Deschryver describes the process where militias enter a village, kill all the men, and sexually assault and brutalize the women. [8]

This is "femicide" says Deschryver, a charge repeated by Eve Ensler and echoed by Amy Goodman. "People can help me first of all being an Ambassador and talking about the problem going on in Congo because it's a silent war. They are killing, they are raping babies. It's like Darfur: Darfur started four years ago. But Congo started almost eleven years ago and nobody's talking about this femicide, this holocaust. It's a femicide because they are just destroying the female species."

Femicide? Congolese women sexually traumatized, Congolese men killed? It is a process of depopulation and ethnic cleansing.

Speaking from the Democracy Now! studios in New York City, Christine Schuler Deschryver describes a war involving African countries outside Congo, but she does not name Western interests involved.

Christine Schuler Deschryver describes her personal sacrifice to help the victims of Congo's wars. She states that she works in "administration, in her office." Until 2002, at least, Christine Schuler Deschryver was known for gorilla conservation, not human rights, in Congo.

Christine Schuler Deschryver is married to Carlos Schuler, a Swiss German working for decades in the Kahuzi-Biega National Park in South Kivu. Carlos Schuler and Christine Schuler Deschryver both work for GTZ- Deutsche Gesellschaft für technische Zusammenarbeit- a "German technological cooperation agency." Carlos negotiates with warlords for "conservation." Because of his gorilla conservation interests, Schuler has been described as "Dian Fossey's successor." Schuler has maintained very private relations with all military forces in the region, and there are questions about mineral plunder and military collaboration and GTZ's role in structural violence and warfare in Congo.

GTZ is a German government institution with a corporate structure. The GTZ Supervisory Board has representatives of four Federal [German] Ministries: the Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation and Development (BMZ), Federal Foreign Office, Federal Ministry of Finance, and Federal Ministry of Economics and Labour. Since 1998 the Supervisory Board Chairman has been State Secretary Erich Stather from the BMZ.

GTZ's involvement in Eastern Congo is notable, given the German links to the Lueshe mine in North Kivu, and the German embassy's role in exploitation, depopulation and genocide in Congo. One top GTZ executive appears to be linked to German corporate interests seeking to control the Lueshe mine, now controlled by their U.S./German competitors (see below). The German government has been understandably mute about plunder in Congo, and the presentation of Christine Schuler Deschryver's- a GTZ agent in Bukavu-as a champion of human rights is a perfect example of the twisted "charity" and "philanthropy" dumped on the Congolese people.

Like the rest of Congo, Kahuzi-Biega is rich in minerals coveted by corporations and governments that include German multinationals like Bayer-subsiidiary H.C. Starck-involved in coltan in Congo.

But the interests of Carlos Schuler and Christine Deschryver run much deeper than "gorilla conservation" and "human rights" activism in Eastern Congo. The Deschryver family is one of the elite families in Belgium. Christine's father, Adrian Deschryver, was one of the first "rangers" of the Kahuzi-Biega National Park. [9] The Deschryver family worked with the Mobutu dictatorship. The great patriarch was August Deschryver, Belgium's Minister to the Congo at transition, in 1960, a likely candidate involved in undermining and destroying the Patrice Lumumba government, and assassinating the man, in the twilight of Congo's Independence.

The Kahuzi-Biega National Park began as a Zoological and Forest Reserve gazetted in 1937 after over-hunting threatened to wipe Congo's big game off the map. Adrien Deschryver helped found the Kahuzi-Biega Park in 1970. [10] One of the first actions was to forcibly displace the huge pygmy population from the park. The pygmies were consulted only to find locations of elephants and gorillas, and then they were removed: they were lured, tricked, forcibly driven out, and some died refusing to leave. This is exactly what is happening in other parts of Congo today, involving USAID, GTZ, and big "conservation" and "humanitarian" interests like CARE International. [11]

Five pygmy groupements- groups of villages spread over large geographical areas-were destroyed. GTZ and UNESCO, the United Nations Scientific and Cultural Organization, got involved in the 1980s, after UNESCO designated Kahuzi-Biega a "World Heritage Site"-clearly another mechanism designed by Western interests to establish cultural and geographic control over people and landscapes. When the GTZ sought to implement "community development" they did not consult with the pygmies to determine their true needs, or wants. The result was armed violence and death. There was no compensation, and the pygmies-forced out of their universe of knowing, the forest-were left homeless and destitute in a world they did not understand. In 2000 era discussions involving some "440 stakeholders" under the new mantra of participatory involvement, there were only two people of pygmy origin, but these were lauded as representation of all the pygmy peoples.

As one Congolese consultant wrote, "Over the two-month period of research into the situation of the Bambuti Pygmies and the protected areas in North and South Kivu-the Kahuzi-Biega National Park-none of the indigenous Bambuti, Barwa, Batwa and Babuluko [people] displayed any enthusiasm for or awareness of the Kahuzi-Biega National Park conservation project. This project has left them worse off than before it was introduced and implemented. The Pygmies have been expelled and driven out with neither indemnity nor other compensation. They have been cast aside. They belong nowhere." [12]

This is genocide.

Genocide is the congregation of femicide and homicide, the destruction of an entire people, and that is what is happening to people in Central Africa, regardless of their ethnicity.

The human rights of the pygmies in Eastern Congo are the most violated of the most violated on earth, thanks to the Belgian family Deschryver, UNESCO and the GTZ.

The Amy Goodman report ends with a plea by Christine Schuler Deschryver for funds to put a roof on a house for survivors of sexual violence. How to help? Give to UNICEF, she says, or to Eve Ensler's international organization "V-Day".

The Democracy Now! report about rape in Congo followed in rather interesting coincidence with a New York Times feature. Goodman opens her report noting that she interviewed Deschryver "last month" [September] in New York. But the Democracy Now! report appeared on October 8, 2007.

On October 7, 2007, in "Rape Epidemic Raises Trauma of Congo War," Jeffrey Gettleman reported on rape in Congo for the New York Times.

If Amy Goodman was shocked and horrified about Christine Schuler Deschryver's descriptions of the scale and nature of sexual violence in Congo, why did she wait so long to run the interview? Why did the Democracy Now! report follow one day after the New York Times feature? Coincidence? Or is the Democracy Now! report just another expedient piece of a coordinated propaganda strategy?

The Gettleman report was a travesty of deception in classic New York Times form. "Eastern Congo is going through another one of its convulsions of violence," Gettleman writes, "and this time it seems that women are being systematically attacked on a scale never before seen here."

In fact, the situation in Central Africa has been one steady "convulsion of violence" since, at least, the Rwandan Patriotic Front invasion of Rwanda from Uganda in 1990. Zaire exploded in 1996, and the killing and raping has never stopped. This author has consistently and repeatedly reported on massive rape, sexual mutilation, and slavery as weapons of war and depopulation in Central Africa since at least 2001, and these were widely reported by others before that. Now, barely a year after the "historic national elections" that brought President Joseph Kabila to power in October 2006, The New York Times is doing damage control.

"The days of chaos in Congo were supposed to be over," wrote Gettleman. "Last year, this country of 66 million people held a historic election that cost $500 million and was intended to end Congo's various wars and rebellions and its tradition of epically bad government."

Things don't just fall apart in Congo. "Epically bad government" and "chaos" are typically manufactured to serve powerful interests-the "shock doctrine" defined by Naomi Klein [13]-and are the result of epically bad reporting and the impunity that is insured by Western disinformation and propaganda campaigns. Hundreds of millions of dollars pumped into the 2006 electoral process, and much was stolen. But the elections exercise was not even a band-aid on the festering war in Congo. To describe the ongoing warfare in Eastern DRC as the most recent convulsion of violence is to feed the Western stereotype of the hopeless African condition and run cover for multinational plunder and depopulation, backing warlords, on and on.

Gettleman's choice of sources and experts is very interesting. One of these, also referenced by Amy Goodman, is Sir John Holmes, a British diplomat with a long history of support for predatory imperialism.

"The sexual violence in Congo is the worst in the world," said John Holmes, the United Nations under secretary general for humanitarian affairs, to the New York Times.

Holmes provides a tidy commentary about African savagery. What we don't learn from the New York Times is that Holmes previously worked for the British security firm Thomas De La Rue, one of the top companies in the world that prints money, security documents (e.g. passports) and postage stamps for 150 countries; currency instruments are used to entrench and maintain structural violence. Thomas De La Rue prints money for the Isle of Man, an offshore tax haven connected to money laundering and mercenaries Tony Buckingham and Simon Mann, and they have printed special currency notes for war-torn Sierra Leone. More significantly perhaps, Holmes was the British Ambassador in Lisbon, Portugal from 1999 to 2001, the period of war in Congo where Congolese warlord Jean-Pierre Bemba, partnered with Uganda, a close British ally, launched the Movement for the Liberation of Congo (MLC) rebellion.

Bemba has a villa in Portugal, and his criminal syndicate involves his brother-in-law, blood diamonds and mercenary partner Antony Teixeira, a Portuguese tycoon living in South Africa. Bemba's troops committed massive rape and sexual violence in DRC, and the Effacer Le Tableau campaign was a genocide campaign against pygmies, but Bemba has never been held to account.[14] U.N. Under Secretary General John Holmes is selectively used by the New York Times to legitimize their propaganda, but Holmes himself should be deposed about his role as an economic hit-man supporting plunder and money laundering.

"The sheer numbers, the wholesale brutality, the culture of impunity - it's appalling," says John Holmes, in empty platitudes.

A PORNOGRAPHY OF VIOLENCE

Jeffrey Gettleman goes on to attribute violence to "one of the newest groups to emerge" called "the Rastas, a mysterious gang of dreadlocked fugitives who live deep in the forest, wear shiny tracksuits and Los Angeles Lakers jerseys and are notorious for burning babies, kidnapping women and literally chopping up anybody who gets in their way." In fact, the Rastas have been operating in Eastern Congo for at least three years, have previously committed atrocities, and are not a "new group to emerge."

Gettleman has to explain away the violence in African terms, never the white multinational corporations, arms dealers, criminal Western syndicates or "conservation" organizations (they fund) occupying the soils of North or South Kivu provinces on vast tracts of land.

Further, these feature articles express some very white supremacist thinking about rape in Congo. "Because there has been no justice," Eve Ensler states, "because so few perpetrators have been held accountable for the crimes that they're committing, it's becoming as Christine [Schuler Deschryver] said to me when we were there, like a country sport: rape."

So, according to this description, Congolese men are universally castigated for "rape as sport," no matter that this is committed by armed forces backed, armed, and licensed by the West to commit massive sexual atrocities, or that Congolese men are killed outright when militias enter villages. As shown below, the Congolese militias and National Army serve a deeper, hidden, Western corporate agenda: organized white-collar crime. They are paid in kind for services provided to maintain and insure natural resource plunder and the acquisition and control of vast tracts of Congolese territory.

Eve Ensler's privilege and white supremacy here is illuminated by her feminist perspective, her feminist crusade, and it becomes acceptable for Eve Ensler-and Ms., Glamour, PBS, The Washington Post, Newsweek, etc.-to label all Congolese men as sexual predators. This, of course, is the chorus of the Western media to begin with-Africans are sexually licentious, they copulate like monkeys-only it transcends boundaries and becomes an African condition. Isn't that why they [those savages] are all HIV/AIDS positive?

Jeffrey Gentleman took it a step further with a direct quote by a Congolese doctor that describes men in Congo as primates. "There used to be a lot of gorillas in there," he said. "But now they've been replaced by much more savage beasts." Such language would not be tolerated by the New York Times to describe rape elsewhere. Rape as a weapon of war is happening in Afghanistan and Iraq, committed by US soldiers, but the depiction of savagery would never be applied. But here the propaganda system knowingly reduces the issue to sub-human animal behavior by black savages.

There are extensive case studies analyzing and exploring the systematization of sexual violence and the wounds it inflicts in warfare in Eastern Congo. [15] Institutions like Columbia and University of Denver have studied rape and war in eastern Congo for years-funded by private foundations and the euphemistically named United States Institute for Peace.

The United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, UNIFEM and other UN agencies have huge budgets dedicated to "humanitarian" reporting and research. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), alone, has a 2007 budget of $US 686,591,107, "roughly the same level as in 2006," with an additional $40,000,000 infusion announced by MONUC on October 22, 2007. OCHA merely coordinates 126 organizations, including 10 United Nations agencies and 50 international agencies.

The "humanitarian" misery industry is part of a system perpetuating, supporting, and facilitating a permanent state of emergency in Eastern Congo.

People know about sexual atrocities in Congo and they have known about it at the highest levels for years. The New York Times shares culpability in the proliferation of war in Central Africa; the Western media merely generates war propaganda.

WHERE IS ANDERSON COOPER (360)?

It is well known that orders come from military officers. The orders given call for mass rape and sexual violence as a means of terrorizing and destroying communities, with permanent psychological and physical effects on survivors. The chain of command determines what soldiers do and don't do. There are hierarchies, and soldiers include young boys and men conscripted into terror networks. To disobey orders is certain death in these militias, and escape is a deadly proposition. For thousands of men and boys in Central Africa the "least dangerous place to be" is in the military-be it a militia or national army. For thousands of women and girls in Central Africa the "least dangerous place to be" is wedded to a soldier or taken "captive" by him. Becoming a soldier, or "marrying" one, is a necessary and positive choice for many people. [16] The agency of Congolese men and boys and women and girls is therefore rendered invisible and neutralized by such generalizations and stereotypes pronounced by western elites both in and out of the "humanitarian" business sector. Further, by castigating all Congolese men, or all soldiers, the blame and responsibility are shifted away from officers and civil authorities who run these criminal networks, and who give orders to rape and plunder as policy. All of the rape stories in the recent propaganda front characterize rape as wanton sexual chaos, rather than weapons and instruments of warfare and social disintegration.

It is the standard message: African chaos, savagery, sexual licentiousness, and primitive, sub-human brutalization. This is the heart of darkness, after all, a place in the "middle of nowhere, a primeval jungle landscape where it is every man for himself, every woman for any man.

Eve Ensler further demonstrates the arrogance of whiteness and ignorance of events by effectively stating that the United States has said nothing about rape in Congo, because we are allies with Rwanda and Uganda, who suffered genocide and saw the so-called genocidaires flood into Congo, who graciously accepted them. In fact, the U.S. overthrew the government of Rwanda in 1994, and when Rwandan and Ugandan forces shelled refugee camps in Eastern Congo (1996) they followed this with a campaign of extermination where hundreds of thousands of women and children were hunted, raped, and massacred.

This genocide has not been named. Howard French, New York Times bureau chief in Nairobi in the 1990's, tried to name it, and he comes close in his lukewarm treatise on Western plunder-Africa: A Continent for the Taking-but his efforts were too little. French moved on to become bureau chief in China, leaving Africa behind, with no commitment to act on what he learned. Everyone has tried to bury the truth with the skeletons. The recent thrusts by the Clinton Foundation in Rwanda-dumping millions of dollars into "humanitarian" programs-are a perfect example.

The U.S. factions-the Rwanda Patriotic Front and Uganda People's Defense Forces that backed their invasion of Rwanda-committed massive rapes in Rwanda as well. From 1990 to 1994 the Ugandan/RPF invaders in Rwanda raped as policy, and Human Rights Watch covered it with their reports of mass rape attributed, universally and solely, to the Hutu genocidaires. This is the political economy of rape and genocide.

Eve Ensler and Christine Schuler Deschryver regurgitate the accepted narratives and blame the victims of corporate and military plunder aligned with Anglo-American- Israeli interests. To her credit, Eve Ensler mentions SONY Playstation and cellphones as culprits, and she suggests action should be taken against corporations, but she blames the illegal mineral trade on the genocidal murderers from Rwanda, the Interahamwe (just as all violence in Darfur is blamed on Janjaweed, and all violence in Afghanistan is blamed on Taliban). But she states that "we don't know who" is involved behind or beside these. This cultural reductionism feeds the mainstream media discourses that perpetuate oppressions and consolidate Western power.

Many of the criminals involved were named in the United Nations Panel of Experts reports on illegal extraction of natural resources from Congo. Countless others have been named by numerous independent journalists, including this author, over, and over and over.

John Bredenkamp. Billy Rautenbach. George Forrest. Louis Michel. Paul Kagame. Yoweri Museveni. Salim Saleh. James Kabarebe. Walter Kansteiner. Maurice Tempelsman. Philippe de Moerloose. Dan Gertler. nienne Viscount Davignon. Bill Clinton. Simon Village. Ramnik Kotecha. Jean-Pierre Bemba. Romeo Dallaire.

Nothing is ever done. After the production of the United Nations Panel of Experts reports on the plunder of Congo's natural resources, nothing was done. Criminal syndicates lobbied to have their names cleared and the United Nations bucked under. Emboldened by toothless international legal instruments and spineless international leaders, the corporations and their criminal syndicates stepped up their operations. Plunder, depopulation, rape, sexual slavery-anything goes.

And the media provided its smokescreens: Anderson Cooper "360".

Eve Ensler has no idea what she is talking about and, on a certain level, like all the rest of us, Eve Ensler is another Mazungu whitey who has no business being in Central Africa at all, because she has no idea what has happened, or is happening, or why. Her white skin and feminist crusade act as a badge of credibility and insures her privileged access to Western media corporations that benefit from "chaos" and depopulation. When "peace" is discussed it revolves around Western "charity" and "goodwill," yet more than 100 years of Western involvement in Africa have culminated in permanent slaughter and depopulation across the continent. The raw materials continue to leave.

Christine Schuler Deschryver represents another face of privilege. When times got hard in 1996 she packed her suitcase and left with her two children for Belgium. She flies to New York and is interviewed on Democracy Now! Listeners in the U.S. believe she is a Congolese native, but she is a Belgian expatriate whose family is a mainstay of colonialism and neocolonialism in Congo. And the Congolese women are never allowed to fly to New York or to tell the deeper story of deracination in "the middle of nowhere," in Congo. What is the Deschryver family relationship to Philippe De Moerloose or Louis Michel or nienne Viscount Davignon or the other principal interlocutors in the Belgian money and power syndicates involved behind the scenes in Congo today?

To get a sense of what Glamour does not report-what the New York Times, Ms., Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, Newsweek, The Nation, BBC, National Public Radio and CNN's Anderson Cooper "360" will not tell us-take a look behind the scenes in eastern Congo and juxtapose the unreported realities with the personal stories of trauma and recovery told by Eve Ensler in Glamour magazine. While the mainstream corporate media always reduces these stories to a few simple facts, and a panoply of supposedly unfathomable black-on-black violence, there are always some skeletons to be found lurking in the shadows of white society.

THERE'S GOLD IN THEM (BLOODY) HILLS

The North and South Kivu provinces of the Democratic Republic of Congo remain awash in blood. Over the past decade hundreds of thousands of women have suffered sexual violence in these provinces as a weapon of war meant to terrorize local populations and gain control of natural resources. Sexual violence includes mutilations, rape and other forms of torture.

Rwandan-backed General Laurent Nkunda has occupied eastern DRC for several years, and was involved in atrocities, war crimes and crimes against humanity in Congo during the first (1996-1997) and second (1998-2004) Congo occupations by Uganda and Rwanda.

The United Nations Observers Mission in DRC (MONUC) makes possible the occupation of Congo by General Laurent Nkunda today. Nkunda is backed by the military regime of President Paul Kagame in Rwanda and by the baby-faced Jean-Pierre Bemba, the rebel warlord from DRC's Equateur province whose interests and ties in DRC go back to his dark alliance with the dictator Joseph Mobutu and his Western backers.

The U.S. and European interests backing General Laurent Nkunda run deeper than the blood in the fields and rivers of eastern Congo. The German Embassy in the Democratic Republic of Congo is involved in shady business deals, backing militias and plundering raw materials from Congo, and behind them is U.S. involvement. This has partially occurred through the military control of a mine called Lueshe, located in a village called Lueshe, in North Kivu, some 170 kilometers northwest of Goma. But it also involves coltan, cassiterite, diamonds and gold, and the economic benefits that accrue to those who control land and taxes.

One gold mining firm with vast landholdings in South Kivu province is Canada's Banro Corporation. Banro has control of four major properties, 27 exploration permits and 5730 square kilometers of gold mining concessions. [17] Banro operates only in the Democratic Republic of Congo, in the blood-drenched South Kivu province. Look at the size of their landholdings: . When we talk about International Criminal Tribunals, who are the real war criminals? What about Simon Village, Peter Cowley, Arnold Kondrat, John Clarke, Bernard van Rooyen, Piers Cumberlege and Richard Lachcik-the directors of Banro Corporation? [18] What is the definition of "white collar" crime? How does a company of white executives like Banro from Canada gain control of such vast concessions? Through bloodshed and depopulation with black people pulling the triggers.

What has changed since King Leopold's era?

NIOBIUM & THE POLITICS OF SCARCITY

In North Kivu province the Lueshe mine provides a well-documented example of the kinds of nefarious activities that all Western governments are involved with in Congo, and in Africa more generally, and these activities certainly apply to Banro and other corporations- this is how the system works, and who works it. The Lueshe Niobium mining scandal merely provides an excellent case study where the thief has been caught red-handed with his hands in the illegal minerals pot.

The Lueshe Niobium mine has been under the control of pro-Rwandan forces for the past eight to ten years, first under the Congolese Rally for Democracy (RCD) rebels allied with Rwanda and Uganda and Jean-Pierre Bemba, and now under the "protection" of General Laurent Nkunda. But Lueshe's history is deeply rooted in the controlling interests of the German government and its U.S. and European partners.

The rare earth metal, niobium or "niob" for short, formerly also known as Columbium, is found there, together with tantalum, in the mineral Pyrochlore. Niobium became extremely important within the last twenty years because of its enlarged range of application for aerospace and defense purposes. Niobium is mainly used as an alloying addition in the production of high quality steel used in the aircraft and space industries, as well as in medicine. It is also widely used in basic applications of machinery and construction and in quite large quantities in the production of stainless steel. Niob, like tantalum and columbium-tantalite or "coltan," is also coveted for the emerging and secretive "nanotechnology" sector-also pivotal to state-of-the- art and futuristic aerospace, defense, communications and biotechnology applications.

There are three principal niobium deposits in the world, all controlled by a company named Arraxa: one in Brazil, one in Canada and the Lueshe mine in DRC. The owner of Arraxa is the U.S. based company Metallurg Inc., N.Y. Metallurg Inc. is itself a subsidiary of Metallurg Holdings of Wayne, Pennsylvania, and Metallurg Holdings is one of many companies in the investment portfolio of Safegaurd International Investment Fund of (Philadelphia) Pennsylvania, Frankfurt and Paris. [19]

In 1982 Metallurg signed a mining convention with the Republic of Zaire, enabling them to exclusively extract all Pyrochlore at the Lueshe niobium deposit for the next twenty years. A company named SOMIKIVU (Société minière du Kivu) was established. Metallurg's 100% subsidiary, the German company GfE Nuremberg (Gesellschaft fuer Elektrometallurgie GmbH), became a 70 % shareholder.

By 1990, SOMIKIVU stopped all production, which was never much at all, because it was apparently insured by HERMES AG, backed by the German Government, to prevent production from the Lueshe mine in order to drive up and control the price of niobium mined and processed at the other sites outside of Congo/Zaire. It was also important to prevent any competitive venture from acquiring the mining rights and subsequently from actually operating the Lueshe mine.

According to available documents, employees of the German Embassy have personally benefiting from, and are involved in, the business of GfE/Metallurg. This involvement has included complicity in extortion, assault, murder, war crimes and crimes against humanity. This involvement includes complicity in sexual atrocities committed by the paid agents of white, Western corporations.

In 1999, after years of inactivity and lost incomes to the Congolese state-a very minority partner manipulated into a position of exploitation as usual-the Lueshe niobium mine was expropriated from its owners by Congo's new president Laurent Kabila and turned over to the firm E. Krall Investment Uganda (Edith Krall), under a Congolese subsidiary company E. Krall Metal Congo. Nonetheless, with the military backing of Rwanda, RCD rebels operated the mine from 1999-2005 with the help of German Embassy (Kinshasa) affiliate Karl Heinz Albers, also a close business partner of the Rwandan Patriotic Front Government of Paul Kagame. It is also alleged that mercenaries have been involved in securing the mine.

The new owners of E. Krall Metal Congo reportedly tried to visit their new mine in 2000, amidst some of the most serious and brutal fighting in the entire war. The officials were arrested by RCD military who immediately called Karl Heinz Albers, then a permanent resident in Kigali, Rwanda. According to documents provided by Krall, Albers explained that the RCD should not ask questions but "eliminate" the Krall group-kill them on the spot. The RCD Goma secret service chief apparently refused to execute this order and released the people of the Krall group. This action helped the Krall delegation to escape to Uganda but made the RCD secret service chief in Congo subject to assassination attempts by killers from Kigali. The RCD chief only saved his life by immediate emigration to Uganda, where he was nonetheless also subject to several assassination attempts reportedly ordered by Karl Heinz Albers.

Albers was reportedly selling coltan from the Krall concessions to the German firm H.G. Starck. From August 2000 to October 2001 Somikivu shipped some 669 tons of Pyrochlore concentrate to Rotterdam harbor in Amsterdam. After October 2001 shipments went to A&M Minerals in London, a company on the U.N. Panel of Experts blacklist who are alleged to have purchased illegally some 2,246 tons of Pyrochlore concentrate before 2004.

Dr. Johannes Wontka, German citizen and technical director of SOMIKIVU, informed the members of Krall M鴦l that while Krall may have the legal titles from Kinshasa to operate Lueshe, the SOMIKIVU (Karl Heintz Albers) gang had the power to do so, therefore they should in their own physical interest "disappear". Dr. Wontka reportedly requested a Major of the RCD army to kill the chief of the "Syndicate Global" the labor union leader of the workers in Lueshe who were on strike due to months of non-payment of salaries. Dr. Wontka reportedly requested that the RCD Major shoot the "whites" that would come soon to Lueshe-the technical delegation of Krall M鴦l who were on their way-and promised money for the job. By chance the RCD Major was the brother-in-law of the trade union leader whom he was tasked to shoot and therefore he neither shot him nor the "whites" he was meant to kill, but reported the case to the police.

The general prosecutor of North Kivu eventually confiscated the passport of Dr. Wontka, and Wontka, who tried to flee Congo with his family, was arrested at the border and brought to Goma, DRC. And then the German Embassy in Kinshasa cranked into gear.

THE POLITICAL ECONOMY OF AMBASSADORSHIPS

The German Ambassador to Kinshasa, Mrs. Doretta Loschelder, informed the public by giving press statements that German investors will not invest in Congo projects and that economic support by Germany will not be transferred to Congo if the authorities in the Democratic Republic of Congo are going to treat investors in the way authorities in Goma were treating the SOMIKIVU agent Dr. Wontka. Under this pressure, Dr. Wontka was released from prison and within 30 minutes fled Congo against orders of the police and immigration officials.

Mrs. Johanna König, employed at the ministry of foreign affairs of Germany until 2001, and serving at the German embassy in Kigali as Ambassador of Germany in Kigali, was until February 2004 a member of the board of KHA International AG, the holding parent company of the Karl Heinz Albers companies. König apparently visited the Lueshe mine with Rwandan military protection. The RCD were also operating the Lueshe mine under forced labor conditions, at one time reportedly involving prisoners from Rwanda accused of genocide by the Kagame regime.

The Krall complaints-well documented-have been brought to officials in Holland, Germany, Switzerland, England and the U.S., all of which have some financial interest or some link in the chain of exploitation. No action has been taken anywhere, and officials of the German Embassy in Kinshasa reportedly continue to benefit from the illegal exploitation of the Lueshe mine. The multinational firm PricewaterhouseCoopers is also invested in the companies exploiting Lueshe and profiting from war, slavery and depopulation in Congo.

At this time, the Karl Heinz Albers may have transferred his "rights" to Lueshe to one Julien Boilloit, a businessman in Kigali who has a big office in Goma and operates behind militias in the Kivus. Julien Boillot's partners reportedly include Mode Makabuza-a Congolese businessman with multiple interests in Goma. The governor of North Kivu has certainly been paid off.

The recent spate of "news" reports and broadcasts on sexual violence in Eastern Congo are part of a coordinated campaign. It is interesting that sexual violence became an issue when it did. Sexual violence is off the charts, but the appearance, slant, framing and timing of reportage suggests is being used to manipulate public sentiment to serve the interests of certain powerful actors at the expense of others. It is certainly a lever used against the Congolese government of President Joseph Kabila, and it may be that it is coordinated in response to Kabila's recent deals with China. After all, it has now been reported by the BBC that the Kabila government is working with the Hutu genocidaires, the FDLR-Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda-the ultimate evildoers. It doesn't matter that the Paul Kagame government's military and corporate machine has dealt with FDLR all along, when it serves their interests, to import terror and export raw materials. This is all very well-documented.

The Western public is unaware of these greater readings, and merely gobble up the news reports as examples of an equitable and humane Western media system that is attuned to tragedies, even if they were late to decry and report them. Western feminists are all over the rape story, but where should the outrage be directed?

(ICTR) until Hillary Clinton showed up in Arusha, Tanzania-the city that became the economic beneficiary of the lucrative ICTR boondoggle-and pledged $600,000 to be paid after the first ICTR rape conviction. And then they had to find someone to pin rape charges on-but the RPF who committed the rapes were never at risk. It was Bill and Hillary's blood money, and another financial incentive used to whitewash the Clinton's role in genocide and covert operations in Central Africa. The Rwandan Patriotic Front led by Paul Kagame committed massive sexual atrocities from 1990 to 1994 in Rwanda, and throughout the RPF campaign in Congo, but these were covered up by Western reporters at the time and later blamed, universally, on the Hutus. [20] The establishment narrative on rape in Rwanda was dictated from the start by Human Rights Watch with their pro-RPF treatise Shattered Lives: Sexual Violence During the Rwanda Genocide, published in 1996. [21]

Who should help the victims of sexual violence in Congo? How about the German multinational corporation Bayer AG-whose subsidiary H.C. Starck was directly involved in the coltan plunder by the RPF. How about GTZ, involved in Congo (Zaire) since 1980 and the expropriation and exclusion of the pygmy's way of life. How about Nokia. Intel. Sony. Barrick Gold Corporation. Anglo-American Corp. Banro. Moto Gold. Belgian Philippe de Moerloose and his Damavia Airlines. Bill and Hillary Clinton and their diamond buddy, Maurice Tempelsman, and De Beers. Tempelsman and DeBeers have plundered Congo for more than fifty years. And how about Royal/Dutch Shell, another backer of the Kagame regime.

Add sexual violence to the list, sure, but Eve Ensler and the Western media propaganda campaign for "an end to sexual violence in Congo" must be placed in its proper context: white supremacy and the shock doctrine of global corporate plunder. In this context rape and depopulation are permanent conditions, the real killers get away with murder, and there is endless, brutal revenge by the victors. The victims get all the blame, and their suffering never ends. ~

And it makes sense from standard language theory,
to presume that the point of origin of a language group is where there is the greatest linguistic diversity within that language group, which for 'Afro-Asiatic' is in the Somalia/Ethiopia region.

Also, non-Arabic Semitic is spoken in that region, and I wonder what the origin of that is - is it a back-migration of Semitic from Saudi-Arabia to Africa, or is it the oldest
Semitic still spoken?

I call these languages Puntite, since they were spoken by the people who formerly lived in Punt. Diop made it clear that these languages were African languages.

The earliest language spoken in Mesopotamia was Sumerian. The non-African people there--the Gutians--adopted this language until the Akkadians migrated to the area from Africa.

The historical evidence makes it clear that the Gutians, like there contemporary descendants="Arabs" have spoken whatever language was dominate in the region. Thus we see the following:

Sumerian

Akkadian

Aramaic

Arabic

Call the languages Puntite--not Semitic. Since Punt was the area where these languages were popularized and spread through Arabia to Mesopotamia.

And it makes sense from standard language theory,
to presume that the point of origin of a language group is where there is the greatest linguistic diversity within that language group, which
for 'Afro-Asiatic' is in the Somalia/Ethiopia region.

Also, non-Arabic Semitic is spoken in that region, and I wonder what the origin of that is - is it a back-migration of Semitic from Saudi-Arabia to Africa, or is it the oldest
Semitic still spoken?

Funny how he slides past the masons and the number 13.

Funny how he makes no mention of the pyramid and the connection to Egypt.

Funny how he forgot to mention that John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Jefferson were all masons... Why would their symbolism be on the dollar bill?

Symbolism and the \$1 Bill

by Ethan Trex

Crack open your wallet, pull out everyones favorite portrait of George Washington, and be prepared to learn about some odd symbolism that probably seemed perfectly normal in the 18th century. Here are the explanations behind some of the more baffling parts of our nations smallest bills.

Whats that weird pyramid drawing on the reverse of the bill?

The two circular drawings on the reverse of the bill are actually parts of the two-sided Great Seal of the United States. Although we dont see the entire seal outside of our wallets too often, the notion of having a great seal is actually as old as the country itself. The Continental Congress passed a resolution on July 4, 1776, to create a committee to design a great seal for the fledgling nation, and heavy hitters John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Jefferson got the first crack at creating the seal.

Congress wasn't so keen on the design these big names brought back, though, and it took nearly six years and several drafts to finally find a suitable seal. Congress finally approved of a design on June 20, 1782.

Whats the story behind the Great Seal of the United States?

According to the State Department, which has been the official trustee of the seal since 1789, both the obverse (front) and reverse (back) of the seal are rich with symbolism. The obverse picturing the eagle is a bit easier to explain. The bird holds 13 arrows to show the nations strength in war, but it also grasps an olive branch with 13 leaves and 13 olives that symbolize the importance of peace. (The recurring number 13, which also appears in the stripes on the eagles shield and the constellation of stars over its head, is a nod to the original 13 states.) The shield floats unsupported over the eagle as a reminder that Americans should rely on their own virtue and strength.

The symbolism of the pyramid on the seals reverse is trickier. The pyramid has 13 steps the designers apparently never got tired of the 13 motif and the Roman numeral for 1776 is emblazoned across the bottom. The all-seeing Eye of Providence at the top of the pyramid symbolizes the divine help the early Americans needed in establishing the new country. The pyramid itself symbolizes strength and durability.

The divine overtones dont stop with the unblinking eye, though. The Latin motto Annuit Ceptis appears over the pyramid; it translates into He [God] has favored our undertaking. The scroll underneath the pyramid reads Novus Ordo Seclorum, or A new order of the ages, which was meant to signify the dawn of the new American era.

How did the seal end up on our dollar bill?

We can thank former Secretary of State Cordell Hulls busy schedule for that one. Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace had to wait for a meeting with Hull in 1934 and decided to kill time by thumbing through a State Department pamphlet on the Great Seal. The pamphlet contained an illustration of the reverse side of the seal with the pyramid, and Wallace was quite taken with the drawing. He took the seal to President Franklin Roosevelt and suggested the country mint a coin using the two sides of the seal.

FDR liked the seal, too. (Roosevelt and Wallace were both Masons and loved the all-seeing eye part of the reverse design, which echoed the concept of the Great Architect of the Universe.) He thought the seal should be on the reverse of the dollar bill rather than a coin, but he was worried the mystical imagery would offend Catholics. After Postmaster General James Farley assured FDR he didnt think his fellow Catholics would have any problem with the design, Roosevelt approved a new dollar bill design that first appeared in 1935.

Did the Founding Fathers swipe any ideas from a magazine?

Possibly. The familiar E Pluribus Unum motto that the eagle holds in its beak underscores the union and togetherness of the 13 colonies. It might also underscore early Americans love of periodicals.

According to the State Department, recent historical research has indicated that this Latin motto may have been borrowed from Gentlemens Magazine, a London publication that ran from 1732 to 1922.

The magazine was popular in the colonies, and its title page always carried the E Pluribus Unum motto.

Why dont the dates on the front of the bills change that often?

At the lower right of the portrait on the bills obverse youll see the word Series and a year. You might notice that these dont change each year the way the numbers on minted coins do. Why not?

According to the Treasury, the series date only changes when theres a new design for a bill, a new Treasurer of the United States, or a new Secretary of the Treasury. (These are the two officials whose signatures appear on either side of the portrait.) The series year itself changes when the Secretary of the Treasury changes, while a change in the Treasurer of the United States means that the series year remains the same, but a suffix letter gets tacked onto the end of the year.

What are the various other numbers on the obverse of the bill?

The bills serial number is the most prominently displayed set of digits on the dollar, but theyre not alone. If you take out a dollar, youll notice there are four large numbers in the corners of the bills open space. Like the encircled letter to the left of Washingtons portrait, these numbers tell which Federal Reserve Bank issued the note. (Each Feds number corresponds the letter of the alphabet assigned to the bank, with A=1, B=2, and so on.)

The tiny letters and numbers that appear on the top left and bottom right of the bills obverse indicate the position of the note on the Treasurys printing plates. If your dollar bill has a tiny FW before this code, those letters indicate that it was printed at the Treasurys facility in Fort Worth, Texas, rather than in Washington, D.C.

In the last couple of days, His Excellency the President and the Rt Hon Prime Minister have intensified their efforts at moving From Talking to Tasking.

The other day they went buying cattle and all that they could from an area severely ravaged by drought and hunger. And we must compliment them for timely intervention.

For the last couple of years, the rains have failed Kenya and nothing has been done to ensure we are water secure as a nation. But when the Big 2 move to the country side and come face to face with hunger, then, their hearts might be softened.

If this happens, we can start lobbying for executive cuts in expenditure.

I want to look at the cost of hosting the kind of rallies they have been holding across the country. The kind of money associated with this, can ensure that Ahero is irrigated for the benefit of the Kenyans.

At this time of pain and hunger, can the Big 2 lead in demanding salary cuts for all political and civil servants at the higher echelons. The President, the Prime Minister, the VP, the Ministers, their Assistants and MPs can lead the way here. If they can accept a pay cut by example, we will be convinced that they mean well for Kenya and that they are truly feeling our pain and hunger.

Having done this, they can move to the higher echelons in the Civil Service, the Judiciary, the Military, the Police, the State Corporations and effect drastic pay cuts. Such savings will then be channeled into productive ventures like the improvement of the Infrastructure as is ongoing currently.

They must then move to housing and address our needs for secure and spacious housing. There must then be instilled in the construction industry and all must obey the by-laws as enshrined in our various laws governing the construction industry.

Because we are staring afresh by addressing the basic of our needs, food, we must then address shelter, water and electricity needs of this country.

I am happy that after 46 years of showing no leadership, the Big 2 have finally come to realize what the country needs. Let us urge them on for our benefit.

We might need to ask the gods to spare them the wrath of Sodom and Gomorrah after all.

There is no way Michael Jackson look like that Egyptian bust. From my reading of History, the noses of Egyptianrelics were defaced b/c they werent "Caucasian" so to speak. Westerners have/had the idea that all Afrikans have wide broad noseswhen they arrived South they blasted them off b/c the wide broad Afrikan noses didn't fit w/their stereotypes. For one they didnt want to believe or accept the fact that Blacks had anything to do w/the Egyptian civilization b/c it was so advanced.

We won! Thanks to you and 35,000 other NAACP members and supporters, the U.S. Supreme Court today announced that Troy Davis will finally get his day in court and a chance to prove his innocence.

The court ordered a federal judge in Georgia to review, what we and many others believe is, the overwhelming evidence of Troy's innocence. Troy was sentenced to death for the 1991 killing of a police officer in Savannah, Georgia.

Bro. Tafari Khumbaka,

I sincerely sympathize with the victims in The Congo and elsewhere in Africa, Asia, Australia and The Americas. However my brother neither Evil Black Peoples, Evil Whites, Arabs, Indians, Hispanics or Orientals are The Promblem in the World nor have they been for a long, long, time now.

No My Brother.!

The promblem in the world that has so much War, Rape, Disrespect and Hell going on daily as a way of life in all Four Quarters of The Earth is to be found right here in America.

And it is NOT White America Either.!

It IS BLACK AMERICA.

The Functional Insanity of Black Americans in refusing to UNCONDITIONALLY UNITE in all areas from Top to Bottom, Streets to Office, Regardless of Skill, Talent, Field of Occupation or Chosen School of Thought has Diabolical and Ominous Implications for ourselves and humanity.

All of the many reasons that can be given for not doing so and the many peoples among us in the various fields of politics, religions, education, sciences, economics, industries, street-gangs and organized crimes who continues to thwart such a unity for narrow-minded, selfish, organizational purposes, religious reasons (and any others) only shows and verifies The State of Functional Insanity that we have been in for a long, long time and are still presently in now.!

Until we as a whole or some of us (a strong group of us) rise up and take control and power of The Political, Religious/Spiritual, Police, Educational, Economic, Organized Crime, and Scientific Institutions that rule, guide , influences, controls and directs the destinies of humanity we will continue to have barbaric acts like these and watch the world itself (humanity) melt down.!

Until we have the power of the support of each other in our own hands and own grips we will continue to be zombie-like witnesses to atrocities here and abroad. We must begin to own and control our own human institutions in a organized society.

We should at least do this for Ourselves, in Our Own Institutions and In Our Own Regions of the Country where we are predominate atsomewhat like immediately.!

Tony, John,

I have great respect for Hon Martha Karua, just like I would have for Migosi Raila Odinga Mzee Mwai Kibaki; they are all politicians and they engage their minds where their pocke

A quick look at the history of the struggle, in the name of the people started in 1966 when Jaramogi [RIP] Oginga Odinga questioned the policy of the Kanu Government in respect t issues of govornance. This led to a fall out with Kenyatta, Odinga was consigned to pilitic: Siberia and the fight for change, in the name of the people started.

In the recent past, I have been a very strong advocate for moving From Talking to Tasking something my friend Kombo Elijah referes to in jest as moving From Tasking to Talking. believes we are still talking too much!

But at times, it is good to put what we see into proper perspective.

Kibaki is our president by accident, not that he believed in any change. He was at the right at the right time, and as soon as he had benefited from the now infamous Kibaki Tosha, he forsook his comrades in the struggle. He promptly locked the doors on them as soon as he foot at State House, and called the change that we had believed in; Pumbavu.

Fast track to 2007. Martha Karua was the only man left standing at KICC in defence of the President who was surely loosing an election. It was Martha Karua who ensured that the aspirations of the majority was subjugated, and the results were disastrous; 1500 Kenyans killed and as many as 600,000 were displaced. All displaced because Martha Karua did not believe in the tenets and principles of democracy; one man one vote.

Fast track again; Martha Karua has fallen out of favour with her principals and she again remembers that struggles are best mounted in the name of the people. She has again discovered that the people are around, and they can again be used for personal glory and gain!

She will hence mount every podium and shout in the name of the people. But does she believe in what she is saying? At what point do the people become supreme? No. I refuse to be such confused by these globe trotting Kenyan politicians. They travel far and wide and they learn not.

They talk none stop and promptly forget what they did yesterday.

It is time we moved Kenyan From Talking to Tasking. Ukimwuo wau, if you see Karua, ask her what changed?

Remember it is our lives at stake. It is our psyche being played with, and it is us who consent to be such played with. We must move and identify people who really believe in Kenya. Martha Karua and her team have been around for so long with no tangible results. It is time to move on, for the sake of our Motherland; Kenya.

Bwana Mongare,
you probably need to hear the other dozen potential presidential candidates before settling for Karua. I'm sure the other "dirty dozen" will make their way via New Jersey and probably steal your soul just as Martha did.

So that brings us back to East Africa.

So you have

Sumerian > Akkadian > Aramaic > Arabic

I wonder which language the Semitic Puntite of Ethiopia is related to. Is it s back-migration from Saudi Arabia, or is it older than all of them?

And how did Sumerian end up in Sumeria from the Punt?

PLEASE READ THIS AND FORWARD IT TO EVERYONE YOU KNOW.

There sure are some sicko people out there -- A man came over and offered his services as a painter to a female putting gas in her car and left his card.

She said no, but accepted his card out of kindness and got in the car.? The man then got in car driven by another gentleman..? As the lady left the service station, she saw the men follow her out of the station at the same time. Almost immediately, she started to feel dizzy and could not catch her breath. She tried to open the window and realized that the odor was on her hand the same hand which accepted the card from the gentleman at the gas station. She then noticed the men were immediately behind her and she felt she needed to do something at that moment. She drove into the first driveway and began to honk her horn repeatedly to ask for help. The men drove away but the lady still felt pretty bad for several minutes after she could finally catch her breath. Apparently, there was a substance on the card that could have seriously incapacitated her. This drug is called 'BURUNDANGA' and it is used by people who wish to incapacitate a victim in order to steal from or take advantage of them?

This drug is four times dangerous than the date rape drug and is transferable on simple contact. Take heed and make sure you don't accept cards at any given time you are alone or from strangers on the streets.. This applies to those making house calls and slipping you a card when they offer their services?

PLEASE SEND THIS E-MAIL ALERT TO EVERY FEMALE YOU KNOW!!!!

Must see. Check out the video from youtube. It does not take much research to see that these things are actually happening right now. History is always relative to the present.

They were stolen from their homes, locked in chains and taken across an ocean. And for more than 200 years, their blood and sweat would help to build the richest and most powerful nation the world has ever known. But when slavery ended, their welcome was over. America's wealthy elite had decided it was time for them to disappear and they were not particular about how it might be done.

What you are about to see is that the plan these people set in motion 150 years ago is still being carried out today. So don't think that this is history. It is not. It is happening right here, and it's happening right now.

Forgive me for the lack of knowledge on the topic. But is it not true that the original Arabs were of African descent? Were the Moors not African? Would that not mean that the Arabic language also has African descent? I've learned that Arabic is the most mathematic language of them all. So were the Moors taught Arabic by white Arabs, or was it their original tongue?

Just curious to know. I have a book called the Moors in Spain by Stanley Lane Poole, and he talks about the origins of the Moors being from North Africa. Yes, they were Muslims.. they were also scientists, mathematicians, astrologists, architects etc. As were many nations from Africa. So was this knowledge acquired by contact with the white Arabs, or from the homeland?

I know we all talk about all nations coming from Africa. I know this is a complex subject when talking of linguistics. Alex, it seems to me you are saying that these languages do have their origin in E Africa, yes? So was Arabic the original tongue of the Moors, or was it introduced to them with Islam?

Help me out! By the way, I have not finished the book... so perhaps some of these questions can be found there... for those that have read it.

Thank you!

So that brings us back to East Africa.

So you have

Sumerian > Akkadian > Aramaic > Arabic

I wonder which language the Semitic Puntite of Ethiopia is related to. Is it s back-migration from Saudi Arabia, or is it older than all of them?

And how did Sumerian end up in Sumeria from the Punt?

21st August 2009

Traffic Management in Nairobi

The City Council of Nairobi unveiled a new set of rules to help manage the traffic flow in and out of Nairobi yesterday and this left many of us wondering, are we retrogressing or moving forward.

Planning seems to have taken a back seat when it comes to looking at how some of these decisions impact on the residents of Nairobi , people whom the Council would strive to serve. I say this because, how do you terminate commuter transport into town so far away? What are the options and where are the options?

For some time now, people who commute into town via Jogoo Road have suffered the incompetence of planning from City Hall and the Central Government. People have suffered both financial and physical stress at the long distances they have to walk to reach their offices.

If the Council was serious, they should have used the impact of the Jogoo Road users malady to help address the bigger transport paralysis and congestion that we witness in Nairobi .

Instead of addressing the problem, the Council is instead punishing the residents of Nairobi . The problem is not the commuters; the problem has everything to do with the management of PSV transport in Nairobi .

In my view, PSVs should be allowed to transit through the Central Business District. They should not be allowed to end their journeys in the CBD. All vehicles from say, Dandora, should transit through town to say, Kibera. In the same way, Vehicles from Kawangware should transit town to Kayole.

If this is implemented, as it used to happen before, all vehicles will be on the move and we will have no transport paralysis.

But when the Central Government and the Council become lethargic in addressing the issues, it is the common man that suffers the consequences of their incompetence. And I want to believe that our planners do not suffer any intellectual menopause!

In town planning, the concerns and plight of the residents ought to take centre stage. Think about that mother who is 7 months pregnant alighting at City Stadium, then walks to her work station at Anniversary Towers .

Think of that father who is lame, walks with the help of a stick, alighting at City Stadium and then walking to his work station at Afya Centre.

Think of these people in similar circumstances when it rains and people must jostle and fight for the available transport. Then think of when these people ever received a pay raise.

Let us engage our thinking capacities as we pretend to offer solutions to our problems.

Everyone's been cracking on the $1 bill since it began.

Well, it won't matter soon. The New World One Gov't Currency is coming soon!

From: Ginger Daniels
Sent: Tuesday, August 18, 2009 7:03:46 PM
Subject: [Ta_Seti] Symbolism and the $1 Bill

Funny how he slides past the masons and the number 13.
Funny how he makes no mention of the pyramid and the connection to Egypt.
Funny how he forgot to mention that John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Jefferson were all masons... Why would their symbolism be on the dollar bill?

Symbolism and the \$1 Bill by Ethan Trex

Crack open your wallet, pull out everyone's favorite portrait of George Washington, and be prepared to learn about some odd symbolism that probably seemed perfectly normal in the 18th century. Here are the explanations behind some of the more baffling parts of our nation's smallest bills.

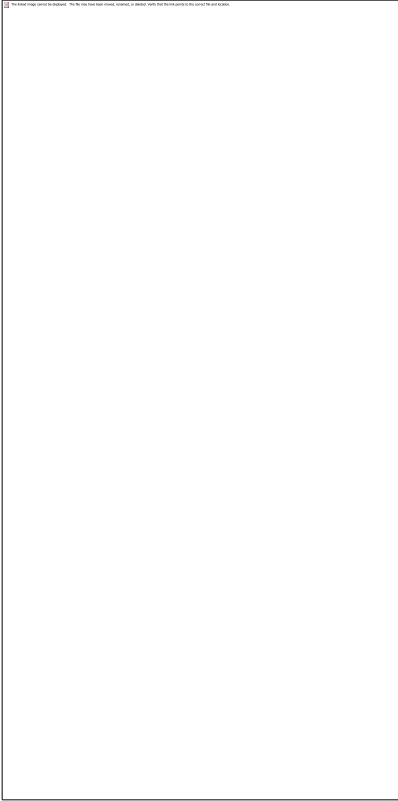

Whats that weird pyramid drawing on the reverse of the bill?

The two circular drawings on the reverse of the bill are actually parts of the two-sided Great Seal of the United States. Although we don't see the entire seal outside of our wallets too often, the notion of having a great seal is actually as old as the country itself. The Continental Congress passed a resolution on July 4, 1776, to create a committee to design a great seal for the fledgling nation, and heavy hitters John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Jefferson got the first crack at creating the seal.

Congress wasn't so keen on the design these big names brought back, though, and it took nearly six years and several drafts to finally find a suitable seal. Congress finally approved of a design on June 20, 1782.

Whats the story behind the Great Seal of the United States?

According to the State Department, which has been the official trustee of the seal since 1789, both the obverse (front) and reverse (back) of the seal are rich with symbolism. The obverse picturing the eagle is a bit easier to explain. The bird holds 13 arrows to show the nations strength in war, but it also grasps an olive branch with 13 leaves and 13 olives that symbolize the importance of peace. (The recurring number 13, which also appears in the stripes on the eagles shield and the constellation of stars over its head, is a nod to the original 13 states.) The shield floats unsupported over the eagle as a reminder that Americans should rely on their own virtue and strength.

The symbolism of the pyramid on the seals reverse is trickier. The pyramid has 13 steps the designers apparently never got tired of the 13 motif and the Roman numeral for 1776 is emblazoned across the bottom. The all-seeing Eye of Providence at the top of the pyramid symbolizes the divine help the early Americans needed in establishing the new country. The pyramid itself symbolizes strength and durability.

The divine overtones dont stop with the unblinking eye, though. The Latin motto Annuit Ceptis appears over the pyramid; it translates into He [God] has favored our undertaking. The scroll underneath the pyramid reads Novus Ordo Seclorum, or A new order of the ages, which was meant to signify the dawn of the new American era.

How did the seal end up on our dollar bill?

We can thank former Secretary of State Cordell Hulls busy schedule for that one. Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace had to wait for a meeting with Hull in 1934 and decided to kill time by thumbing through a State Department pamphlet on the Great Seal. The pamphlet contained an illustration of the reverse side of the seal with the pyramid, and Wallace was quite taken with the drawing. He took the seal to President Franklin Roosevelt and suggested the country mint a coin using the two sides of the seal.

FDR liked the seal, too. (Roosevelt and Wallace were both Masons and loved the all-seeing eye part of the reverse design, which echoed the concept of the Great Architect of the Universe.) He thought the seal should be on the reverse of the dollar bill rather than a coin, but he was worried the mystical imagery would offend Catholics. After Postmaster General James Farley assured FDR he didn't think his fellow Catholics would have any problem with the design, Roosevelt approved a new dollar bill design that first appeared in 1935.

Did the Founding Fathers swipe any ideas from a magazine?

Possibly. The familiar E Pluribus Unum motto that the eagle holds in its beak underscores the union and togetherness of the 13 colonies. It might also underscore early Americans' love of periodicals.

According to the State Department, recent historical research has indicated that this Latin motto may have been borrowed from Gentlemens Magazine, a London publication that ran from 1732 to 1922.

The magazine was popular in the colonies, and its title page always carried the E Pluribus Unum motto.

Why don't the dates on the front of the bills change that often?

At the lower right of the portrait on the bills' obverse you'll see the word Series and a year. You might notice that these don't change each year the way the numbers on minted coins do. Why not?

According to the Treasury, the series date only changes when there's a new design for a bill, a new Treasurer of the United States, or a new Secretary of the Treasury. (These are the two officials whose signatures appear on either side of the portrait.) The series year itself changes when the Secretary of the Treasury changes, while a change in the Treasurer of the United States means that the series year remains the same, but a suffix letter gets tacked onto the end of the year.

What are the various other numbers on the obverse of the bill?

The bill's serial number is the most prominently displayed set of digits on the dollar, but they're not alone. If you take out a dollar, you'll notice there are four large numbers in the corners of the bill's open space. Like the encircled letter to the left of Washington's portrait, these numbers tell which Federal Reserve Bank issued the note. (Each Feds number corresponds the letter of the alphabet assigned to the bank, with A=1, B=2, and so on.)

The tiny letters and numbers that appear on the top left and bottom right of the bills obverse indicate the position of the note on the Treasurys printing plates. If your dollar bill has a tiny FW before this code, those letters indicate that it was printed at the Treasurys facility in Fort Worth, Texas, rather than in Washington, D.C.

Greetings,

I am pleased to share with the group, some of very interesting findings of our research on HIV / AIDS, (the objective was to find out CURE for HIV/AIDS). We were working on this project since 1994 and alhamdulillah results are amazing.

Laboratory studies (in vitro) of this project were carried out in Nagoya University, Japan and clinical trials were conducted in Pakistan.

Thirty one HIV / AIDS +ve patients were treated with the test compound, 17 of them were cured (post treatment PCR negative) and in 9 patients mean viral load decreased by more than (72%). p value

I have posted all details with lab reports on the following web site, kindly spare sometime to visit the web, and share your thoughts as how the patients in your part of the world can be benefited with this treatment success.

Should you need further information / clarifications please feel free to contact me any time.

Bro. Tafari Khumbaka,

I sincerely sympathize with the victims in The Congo and elsewhere in Africa, Asia, Australia and The Americas. However my brother neither Evil Black People nor Evil Whites, Arabs, Indians, Hispanics or Orientals are The Problem in the World nor have they been for a long, long, time now.

No My Brother.!

The problem in the world that has so much War, Rape, Disrespect and Hell going on day in and day out in all Four Quarters of The Earth is to be found right here in America.

And it is NOT White America Either.!

It IS BLACK AMERICA.

The Functional Insanity of Black Americans in refusing to UNCONDITIONALLY UNITY in all areas from Top to Bottom, Streets to Office, Regardless of Skill, Talent, Field of Occupation or Chosen School of Thought has Diabolical and Ominous Implications for our race and humanity.

All of the many reasons that can be given for not doing so and the many peoples among us in various fields of politics, religions, education, sciences, economics, industries, street-gangs, organized crimes who continues to thwart such a unity for narrow-minded, selfish, organizational purposes, religious reasons (and any others) only shows and verifies The State of Functional Insanity.

Insanity that we have been in for a long, long time and are still presently in now.!

Until we as a whole or some of us (a strong group of us) rise up and take control and power of The Political, Religious/Spiritual , Police, Educational, Economic, Organized Crime, and Scientific Institutions that rule, guide , influences, controls and directs the destinies of humanity we will continue to have barbaric acts like these and watch the world itself (humanity) melt down.!

Until we have the power of the support of each other in our own hands and own grips we will continue to be zombie-like witnesses to atrocities here and abroad. We must begin to own and control our own human institutions in a organized society.

We should at least do this for Ourselves, in Our Own Institutions and In Our Own Regions of the Country where we are predominate atsomewhat like immediately. !

We are in the strongest place in the world and behave like the weakest peoples, in fact like a peoples, an entire peoples, in a damningstupor of the worst type.!

That is All.

In my mind, I am convinced these people who have invaded Mau ought not to be compensated.

They have messed our water towers, made our animals die for lack of water, made our wildebeests migrate to Tanzania, made our taps at home dry, made us suffer the indignity of power rationing, made our rivers dry, and stopped the rains from visiting us.

They ought to pay us instead.

If we pay them, we will be doing the same kind of thing we did to ECK; pay them for messing Kenya up.

But, with the kind of rudderless leadership that we have, payment is best made to the wrong guy. And they aim at what they call vision 2030. It could be a visionless vision.

Hi All

I think we are all missing the point about the MAU thing. We can not be talking about MAU and at the same time bring in individuals. MAU is not about Kalenjins or whoever is degrading MAU. This is a national matter and deserves to be handled so and very soberly and very quickly. We all agree that we need to conserve the environment, and the only problem I believe is the politicians/ their supporters are using the words EVICTION and CONSERVATION interchangeably and this confuses the people like Sang and others like him. The issue of victimising the Kales does not arise it only happens that they are the majority in the MAU problem. Whether with or without compensation conservation is a must. CONSERVATION

FIRST COMPANSATION SECOND.

Lets not talk about the occupiers of MAU forest first, lets talk about the good things MAU will bring to the future generations and the occupiers second, and not to classify them as legal or illegal, with or without tittle deedsthey are all doing the same to the environment-DEGRADATION.

LETS STOP FURTHER DEGRADATION OF THE ENVIRONMENT FOR THE SAKE OF THE FUTURE, NO MATTER HOW POPULAR OR UNPOPULAR ONE WILL BE AFTER THIS.

Ndugu Sang,
You seem to have a point however:

1] Water for Kenya:Please can you tell us the Kalenjin/Kipsigis homegrown way of removing thse people of out MAU.We know very well from educated facts available to you that we cannot do without trees on Mau forest.Do you want a Kalenjin Minister and Permanent Secretary in Forestry Ministry to execute the removal for your people to feel that they are leaving with grace ?

2] Tribalism:It is common sense that Kenyans wants to get rid of tribalism once and for all.We also know that Raila being in talking terms with Kibaki does not necessarily imply that your Kalenjins are being finished.Presidents never go to Nyanza since Independence and when they pay a vist once then it becomes a mistake.Kibaki is a Kenyan President and it is not a mistake that he ate Fish in Opoda farm.

3] Ruto.In private you have told me how you dont trust Ruto with his raw appetite for power n in Public he seems to be the Messiah of Kalenjins[I wonder from what].Let Ruto carry his cross for he does not need your ammunition.Ruto' s reactions sounds like the Presidency is too far a way for him and he is trying to make it come 2017[not even 2012].Ruto is struggling to stay relavant.

4] Kalenjin Community.Kenyatta did his 14/15 years,Moi did 24 and Kibaki will do 10.Look @ those figures and strategise for a long haul[surely not now].

5] Gema/Kikuyus. You have ruled Kenyan for too long so this is not your time.

6]Wanakenya- - Let Kikuyus and Kalenjins take a back seat for not less than 3 terms after Kibaki and their time will just come one day.

First expose everyone and then prosecute them. You do not know all who grabbed Mau as of now. You've only been given names of a few black sheep. Where are the rest and why are they covered if politics is not the motive behind revelation of allottees?

By the way, Ritera, my name is not in the list because I am not a land grabber. I only cry for justice for the poor people who bought land and were issued with titles by government. Also, I know that Ruto whom you hate with passion never grabbed an inch in Mau. You will be surprised to know that your heroes in the current government are the major beneficiaries.

Debate about forest should include all stolen forests since Kenyatta, Moi and now.

Hi Sang,

Now that we know for sure who owns Mau, what next? If we start talking, even wasting any second considering about compensating anybody within the vicinity of Mau, we shall miss the point. A few greedy elements who actually own almost the entire nation, sneaked into Mau, dished the entire forest among themselves. To blanket this, sold to innocent and desperate Kenyans at a song. May be am looking at it from one direction, but why should we compensate our brothers and sisters when they can demand their money from those thieves who sold them what was not theirs in the first place. If one steals and sells what is not his, at what stage does it amount to just sale. Those thieves are well known, very much alive, hence must first compensate all they sold Mau to and then face the full due process of the law.

Bashing Ruto and our MPs will not sit well with us. Your hypocrisy and ignorance regarding Mau and our MPs is sickening. It is time you guys address real issues affecting Kenya rather than attacking Ruto.

Our country is now under a demented president and a brutal first lady. So Saitoti et tal are busy setting up police stations in PNU unfriendly regions of Kenya on one hand and planning to gerrymander RVP to create two new Kikuyu provinces in their quest to rule Kenya forever on other, while president is creating districts in PNU zones. While all these are happening, a clever tactic is being hatched- attack Ruto and RVP leaders as real problems facing Kenya while pacifying Luos with an empty visit to Nyanza. We are well conversant with this-it is all empty meant to destroy ODM by creating an illusion that what never worked before between Kibaki and Raila can work now. Those who believe in this are buying into illusion. Our MPs are ODM and we are too. Ruto has our blessing and together we are behind Ogwambo. If Ogwambo chooses to abandon ship and follow the whirlwind called new found alliance with the man who hate him most he will have chosen the road his father took.

The election was stolen and now strategies are well drawn to divide and finally destroy ODM before 2012. We need to read the signs on the wall and avoid deception.

Beth, when Rutto takes a stand, why does it matter at all? if he changes his position today from what he stood for yesterday, does that make him guilty? if the others are capable of approving on the agreed recommendations in cabinet or parliament without Rutto's blessings, that will be the Kenyan government's position. It will not matter what Rutto says, his will be considered an historical position on an issue be it haque or mau. You do not have to fear if Rutto decides to change 1001 times, that is his democratic right. Changing of position on issues will not be used as evidence either in haque or with a local tribunal; it is the evidence that shall be presented before the courts. people like you who have branded Rutto a murderer should be preparing evidence to be presented in these courts. He is not scuttling any postion, it is called trouble shooting. We have to create alternatives; we cannot all think alike - we shall be regarded as zombies if we were to ever behave like so.

Sang,

Your man Ruto has opposed anything and evrything that is meant at addressing the past injustices. He seems to believe that he is so special that the country's systems should be structured to favor his ways. It started off with with PEV where he has never held on to a position but has been very consistent in opposing all proposed positions. We are seeing him adopting the same position in mau; having no stand but except to scuttle any position that is adopted.

>Goot, The Mau Forest Complex issue is mouth-watering for the politicians; every politician now wants a piece of the action. Mau is where a lot of politicians will meet their Waterloos for trying to meddle & interfere with the affairs of Mau. As the name itself suggests, the issues surrounding Mau are too complex to comprehend. I leave that for another day. My concern here is the Prime Minister Raila Amollo Odinga alias Tinga. Kibaki's visit to Luo Nyanza came at a time when the Cabinet met twice and could not agree as to whether the instigators of the post election violence (PEV) should be tried at the Hague or the Local Tribunal. 2/3's of the 222 MPs (i.e. 148), are required to pass a Constitutional Amendment in Parliament to allow the setting up of the Local Tribunal. The majority of the MPs have refused the Local Tribunal and they want the suspects to be tried at the Hague . Mutula Kilonzo, the Minister for Justice wants the President's immunity to be removed so that in case he is one of the suspects, he can stand trial at the Hague. This has brought a lot of fear & unease in some quarters. The President is the Head of State & Commander-in- Chief of the Armed Forces of Kenya . At the time the violence occurred Raila was a mere MP; same applies to William Ruto and Kalonzo Musyoka . If one is following what is happening currently at the Hague, Charles Taylor who >was once the President of Liberia & the Commander-in- Chief of the Armed Forces of Liberia and therefore the controller of the Instruments of Force , is standing trial at the Hague. The President of Sudan, Omar-el- Bashir, who is the Commander-in- Chief of the Armed Forces of Sudan & the holder of Instruments of Force , has been issued with the warrant of arrest by the ICC. President Kibaki knows this, because he was & still is the holder of Instruments of Force . If there is one >person who must go to the Hague, then that person is Kibaki. His handlers know that the safest way for Kibaki is by setting up a Local Tribunal. The problem is that the Cabinet & by extension Parliament have refused to ratify the setting up of the Local Tribunal. He needs the numbers in Parliament & so what does he do? Of course his friend Raila needs to come to his rescue again? (remember Kibaki Tosha declaration?). Visit Luo Nyanza, promise the members of the Luo Community that the past must be forgotten & then dish out goodies. In the process blame the "primitive" Kalenjin for having not read enough & therefore do not understand what conservation of Mau means to the Luos; Lake Victoria will dry up and there will be no fish, and then the only Hydro-Electric Generating Plant in the whole of Nyanza, Sondu Miiriu, will grind to a halt. It >is called scare tactics. So what does Kibaki need? He needs the numbers in Parliament so that at least 2/3's of the MPs will pass the Amendment of the Constitution . With this, Kibaki will have achieved two things: 1. He will avoid going to the Hague and therefore fix his foes squarely at home in Kenya; 2. He would have dismantled the ODM once and for all (divide & rule); 3. The Kalenjin Nation will have been contained. Mau issue has been with us since Kenyatta's time, it is nothing new; it was at that time about Tinet which is in Mau and where peasants sold their cows for a song at Kshs 5/= per cow. Kibaki in 2005 issued the Title Deeds for 12000 acres to the squatters of Mau. Kibaki told everyone then to go back to their shambas despite the fact that his Govt had torched maize stores, schools & poor peoples houses earlier on. At times it is difficult to comprehend >&understand this if one has never seen his labour & savings of so many years go up in smoke in one day. Way forward: the members of this forum must analyze issues without emotions.. People need to do more research on issues such as Mau. We need Strategic Thinkers, people who can see beyond the year 2012. Members of this forum should ask themselves as to why Kalenjin Professionals are seen differently by the "rest" of the Kenyans? Why is it that a whole Professor like Hellen Sambili is accused of not been qualified when she appoints Benjamin Sogomo to be the CEO of Stadia Management? (whom they accuse of not been qualified). Why is it that when Amb Bethuel Kiplagat is appointed as the Chairman of TJRC, some people start wagging their tongues? Why were our athletes accused of having participated in the PEV? Why are our own dragged >around the courts like dogs when there are a lot of people sitting pretty in the Govt who were involved in the mega scandals? Whatever happened to Triton issue? Anglo Leasing? etc. I am not at all supporting corruption; i am calling for equal treatment not equitable treatment. Can our professionals please stand up & be counted, do not feign ignorance, because the moment the fire burns, no one will be spared, not even those who are far away in the Diaspora. It is high time we went back to our elders and seek guidance. We need Moi & Ruto to work together for the sake of our Community's interests. We either stick together or we are hanged separately. Greetings,

Iam pleased to share with the group, some of very interesting finding of our research on HIV / AIDS, (the objective was to find out CURE for HIV/AIDS).We were working on this project since 1994 and alhamdolillahresults are amazing.

Laboratory studies (in vitro) of this project were carried out in Nagoya University , Japan and clinical trials were conducted in Pakistan .

Thirty one HIV / AIDS +ve patients were treatedwith the test compound, 17 of them were cured(post treatment PCR negative) and in 9 patients mean viral load decreased by more then (72%). p value

I have posted alldetails with lab reports on the following web site, kindly spare sometime to visit the web, and share your thoughts as how the patientsin your part of the world can be benefited with this treatment success.

In the Egyptian Museum at Cairo, when you walk into the Greco-Roman section, all of a sudden you see many intact and narrow noses.

Knocking off the noses of the massive monumental Egyptian sculpture was probably too much work as many of them are intact.

In ancient India, the noses were often displayed in broad shape and here again most of them are broken off! Still you can tell from what is left how the nose would be shaped. During the medieval period, noses were more often displayed very narrow and prominent, and no surprise to see in most cases these are still intact.

Cuban Underwater Pyramids

The existence of pyramidal structures deep underneath Cuban waters is verified. Paulina Zelitsky has been steadfast in her theory of the collapse of the city as a result of a powerful earthquake more than 12,000 years ago. The scientists are in agreement that the geologic formation of the Yucatan Peninsula is as a result of seismic activity.

The Russian-Canadian oceanographer Paulina Zelitsky reveals that in late October, she will lead a new expedition, from the Port of Progress, to explore a suspected site of a lost underwater city near Cuba financed by National Geographic. The team has been readying a specially equipped ship in Canada for the expedition. A hundred people plan to deploy a mini-submarine and several robots to depths of up to half a mile. In October of 2004, Paulina Zelitsky and her team found evidence that an island collapsed into the sea, but they could not complete the mission due to technical deficiencies. The scientists managed to film a pyramid of almost 35 meters height (115 feet) and to extract stones embedded with animal fossils incapable of living at a depth of 700 meters (2,300 feet).

This discovery demonstrates that the first North Americans arrived earlier than previously thought...The city lies between Cuba and Yucatan submerged to more than 600 meters with structures very geometrically cut, passages, tunnels and even temples with diverse symbols that arose in a place where officially human beings never lived. Most of these megalithic blocks have gigantic dimensions, reaching to five meters of height and several tons of weight and were cut to form greater structures.

This city would be a phenomenal find if it eventually proved to be factual. But Paul hits the nail on the head -- what time period (historical or prehistorical) are we talking about? That may inform is about the climate and sea water levels of that time.

Bro. Tafari Khumbaka,

I sincerely sympathize with the victims in The Congo and elsewhere in Africa, Asia, Australia and The Americas. However my brother neither Evil Black People nor Evil Whites, Arabs, Indians, Hispanics or Orientals are The Problem in the World nor have they been for a long, long, time now.

No My Brother.!

The problem in the world that has so much War, Rape, Disrespect and Hell going on day in and day out in all Four Quarters of The Earth is to be found right here in America.

And it is NOT White America Either.!

It IS BLACK AMERICA.

The Functional Insanity of Black Americans in refusing to UNCONDITIONALLY UNITE in all areas from Top to Bottom, Streets to Office, Regardless of Skill, Talent, Field of Occupation or Chosen School of Thought has Diabolical and Ominous Implications for our and humanity.

All of the many reasons that can be given for not doing so and the many peoples among us in the various fields of politics, religions, education, sciences, economics, industries, street-gangs and organized crimes who continue to thwart such a unity for narrow-minded, selfish, organizational purposes, religious reasons (and any others) only shows and verifies The State of Functional Insanity that we have been in for a long, long time and are still presently in now.!

Until we as a whole or some of us ( a strong group of us ) rise up and take control and power of The Political, Religious/Spiritual , Police, Educational, Economic, Organized Crime, and Scientific Institutions that rule, guide , influences, controls and directs the destinies of humanity we will continue to have barbaric acts like these and watch the world itself ( humanity ) melt down.!

Until we have the power of the support of each other in our own hands and own grips we will continue to be zombie-like witnesses to atrocities here and abroad. We must begin to own and control our own human institutions in a organized society.

We should at least do this for Ourselves, in Our Own Institutions and In Our Own Regions of the Country where we are predominate at somewhat like immediately. !

We are in the strongest place in the world and behave like the weakest peoples, in fact like a peoples, an entire peoples, in a damning stupor of the worst type.!

That is All.

PLEASE READ THIS AND FORWARD IT TO EVERYONE YOU KNOW.

There sure are some sicko people out there -- A man came over and offered his services as painter to a female putting gas in her car and left his card.

She said no, but accepted his card out of kindness and got in the car.? The man then got in car driven by another gentleman..? As the lady left the service station, she saw the men fol her out of the station at the same time. Almost immediately, she started to feel dizzy and c not catch her breath. She tried to open the window and realized that the odor was on her h: the same hand which accepted the card from the gentleman at the gas station. She then not the men were immediately behind her and she felt she needed to do something at that mon She drove into the first driveway and began to honk her horn repeatedly to ask for help.

The men drove away but the lady still felt pretty bad for several minutes after she could fii catch her breath. Apparently, there was a substance on the card that could have seriously i her. This drug is called 'BURUNDANGA' and it is used by people who wish to incapacita victim in order to steal from or take advantage of them?

This drug is four times dangerous than the date rape drug and is transferable on simple car take heed and make sure you don't accept cards at any given time you are alone or from so on the streets.. This applies to those making house calls and slipping you a card when they their services?

**The African Hindu Monastery Of Ghana**

Source: www.tehelka.com

GHANA, WEST AFRICA, August 10, 2009: The African Hindu Monastery is a simple white structure in Odorkor, a suburb of the Ghanaian capital city of Accra. Started in 1975, it is headed by Swami Ghanananda Saraswati. The gentle-voiced Saraswati was born into the traditional African faith. Although he converted to Christianity when both his parents became Christian priests, he continued his search for truth. Attracted by Hindu beliefs and the practice of yoga, he travelled to India. While staying at Swami Sivanandas ashram in Rishikesh, he decided to embrace Hinduism. At 35, he returned to Ghana and acquired his first disciples, holding lectures to educate Ghanaians about this ancient and foreign religion.

Today, Ghanas population of 23 million includes 12,500 Hindus, of which 10,000, like their Swami Ghanananda Saraswati, are indigenous Africans. While an older Sindhi temple still exists in Accra, the African Hindu Monastery is now Ghanas largest center of Hindu worship.

Contrary to its name, the monastery currently has only one monk. Saraswati explains, Hinduism is a new thing in West Africa. More photos (in higher resolution) of Swami Ghananands ashram can be found on the photo-journalists public gallery at <http://picasaweb.google.com/smruthig>

PLEASE READ THIS AND FORWARD IT TO EVERYONE YOU KNOW.

There sure are some sicko people out there -- A man came over and offered his services as painter to a female putting gas in her car and left his card.

She said no, but accepted his card out of kindness and got in the car.? The man then got in car driven by another gentleman..? As the lady left the service station, she saw the men fol her out of the station at the same time. Almost immediately, she started to feel dizzy and c not catch her breath. She tried to open the window and realized that the odor was on her h: the same hand which accepted the card from the gentleman at the gas station. She then not the men were immediately behind her and she felt she needed to do something at that mon She drove into the first driveway and began to honk her horn repeatedly to ask for help.

The men drove away but the lady still felt pretty bad for several minutes after she could fi catch her breath. Apparently, there was a substance on the card that could have seriously i her. This drug is called 'BURUNDANGA' and it is used by people who wish to incapacita victim in order to steal from or take advantage of them?

This drug is four times dangerous than the date rape drug and is transferable on simple cards? So take heed and make sure you don't accept cards at any given time you are alone or from someone on the streets.. This applies to those making house calls and slipping you a card when they offer their services?

"Before the end of the last Ice Age (12,000-years ago) the ocean levels were at least 300 feet below their current levels. A vast "island" was in the area in those remote times rather than chains of islands. Edgar Cayce referred to Bimini as one of the mountaintops of ancient Atlantis. While few would consider the island a mountain, 12,000-years ago it was one of the highest points on the vast land formation in the region. Bimini and Andros Island, lying about 100 miles to the east of Bimini, were a part of the same island in 10,000 B.C.called "Poseidia" by Cayce. Cayce related that a Hall of Records containing the records of Atlantis was constructed somewhere in the region. The Hall of Records was in a temple which sunk in 10,000 B.C. and is, according to Cayce, covered by "the slime of ages." This record hall is identical to the one in Egypt under the Sphinx.

Archaeologists have countered that the remains of civilization in the region only go back 7,000 years or perhaps even less. They have asserted that if a major civilization existed in the area, some of its remains would be found on current land. That assertion has a fundamental flaw. Ancient maritime civilizations typically built their cities and ports on the ocean shores. As related in prior issues of Ancient Mysteries, archaeologists working in South America, the Pacific coast of North America, India, and elsewhere in the world have been discovering the remains of underwater ruins. These ancient maritime civilizations built their cities and ports on coastlines all of which have been covered by the rising oceans. Given the recent changes in North and South American archaeology taking the history of habitation in the Americas to 50,000-years ago it seems likely that ruins would lie in the shallow waters around Bimini."

This city would be a phenomenal find if it eventually proved to be factual. But Paul hits the nail on the head -- what time period (historical or prehistorical) are we talking about? That may inform is about the climate and sea water levels of that time.

<<http://zetatalk.com/index/zeta526.htm>>

Part Two

<<http://zetatalk.com/index/zeta527.htm>>

Excerpts:

[Questioner] According to a guest on the News radio show NPR there is ample evidence that the man convicted of the Lockerbie bombing in 1988 in Lockerbie Scotland was not in fact the actual bomber. Is this in fact the case? If this is in fact the case why was he the one indicted for this crime?

[Zeta Response] Correct. This fact will shock those reading it, but there are more innocent people in prison than guilty. Police like to wrap up a case, and pick on someone who cannot defend themselves, forcing a confession for a lesser sentence. Even when the guilty party is known, if they are expected to put up a fight, cause the prosecutors a lot of money and effort with a likely loss in court, this is done. Then there is outright collusion between someone wanting to commit a crime like robbery or the murder of a spouse, bribing the police to look the other way. Despite the media, which portrays investigators as being ethical, this varies by district to such a great degree that in one district no justice is performed while in others, an impeccable adherence to justice is held.

[Questioner] The healthcare debate hasn't exactly been a debate. I think these emotions coming out are more subconscious that the world as they know it will soon end. They realize the country is collapsing and want someone to yell at. These right wing nuts jobs comparing Obama to Hitler care less about the healthcare but are really just scared? As the majority of Republicans are insecure and easily subcome to scare tactics. These people aren't really just scared about the healthcare debate, they realize something isn't right and they are terrified?

[Zeta Response] Most of the uproar over health care is orchestrated by the Republicans who simply don't want Obama to have a victory long sought by Democrats. This was a campaign promise, so would be a big victory, as the public knows it will be difficult to pull off, given the strength of the insurance company lobby. Beyond this is the false information that has been pushed by Republicans and insurance industry - death panels, socialism, poor quality care and the like. Remove the Republican lies and insurance company opposition and there is no uproar.

[Questioner] What it has come down to is the "haves" and "have nots". Why don't people with the "haves" realize that their fellow Americans should be equal? Why don't they realize we already have death panels and rationing of care? It's call the insurance company! they do it daily, at this exact moment I bet someone who needs life saving surgery is being denied by their insurance monopoly. And either way we are paying for those uninsured americans because we have the ER, so we already have a type of "socialism". I'm a person with "haves" but believe everyone deserves health care and it feels good driving in my lexus and seeing the less fortunate people living on the streets exchanging thumbs up when they see me obama signs. I'm a "have" but don't understand why it isn't common sense that everyone should get healthcare?

[Zeta Response] You are dealing with people who do not care, who have the attitude that if they have what they need, then who cares about others. They protect themselves from any empathy they might be inclined to feel by insulating themselves from the raw reality of what their attitudes bring. If there were a starving family, they would avoid going to the neighborhood and hearing the baby cry, for instance. If there were those without insurance in the parking lots of hospitals who are declining care, they would not park in that area, or be delivered by ambulance so as to avoid the waiting room where the poor are awaiting care. These individuals obviously are not headed in the direction of becoming Service-to-Others, while your attitude does exhibit that.

[Zeta Response] We have stated that the economy will not recover from the essential depression the world is in, as the Earth changes will continue to undermine mankind's infrastructure and the weather will continue to create crop shortages. A domino effect occurs, as we have explained in detail in these chats. Currently the establishment is controlling the population by the cover-up, and when this breaks and the truth can no longer be denied, they will bunker themselves. Disclosure on the alien presence is being done lately not only because sightings have increased to the degree that to deny is to be obvious, but also because there are those in the establishment who thing that is the public is comfortable with the idea of the alien presence then benign aliens will land can help care for the populace after the pole shift. This is not correct, of course, except in those situations where a community is highly Service-to-Others or under the control of highly Service-to-Others individuals, but those promoting disclosure within the establishment are hoping that they might benefit.

The answer is actually much more simple and realistic than I am presenting it from within my own limited framework and sphere of influence.

1. The very first thing is to have or rather resurrect A Mental Unity. Yes a Mental Unity because even having a Spiritual Unity or a Physical ( Capitalistic ) Unity is just simply not enough.

Because we have many religions and spiritualities such as Islam, Christianity, Vodun, Hinduism, Yogas, Buddhism and the likes we can easily see that all it takes to divide us in any way with these is some opportunistic power-hungry persons with a "magnetic attraction " that preaches one over the other and we are divided.!

Or there can be some unfortunate event that makes a large number of people blame the other group and their faith and we are divided. In a capitalistic sense it would be wonderful if everyone had enough money and resources to pursue the best way of life for themselves and help others but that is not the case.

Monies and the lack of it causes class divisions, discriminations, jealousies and the likes based on the haves and/or have nots. Capital also causes the concentration of wealth and power in the hands of a few and not the majority. These " few " may make decisions that are not in the interests of the majority. ( Now don't get me wrong. I am not per se anti-capitalist I am just outlining some common problems of capitalism ).

2. With a Mental Unity the Evolutionary Welfare of The Tribe, the Socio-Ethnic Group, Itself would be The Sole and Primary Focus of Every School of Thought, Discipline, Occupation and Industry no matter what Spiritual Practice or Career that a Individual Person would choose. It would be extremely hard then to use, enslave or pimp any person for anything.!

With that alone the ignorance, jealousies, hates, fears, slanderings, ego-trippings, low self-esteem, lack of confidence and the foolishness that divides us in religions by dividing our spiritualities would all disappear.!

The divisions among us that are based on gender, racial ideologies, capitalism and politics would also disappear or at least be neutralized and put in their place so that these issues can help us rather than divide us and hurt us.

3. Nationalism along with Afrocentrism and Afroasiatic Teachings in a Evolutionary Curriculum with a good, good bit of Free Thinking or Free-Thought could help all of us to do this in real time such as the present Industrial, Mechanical, Scientific Technological Age that we ourselves and the rest of the human race are in now.

But then, after all, we would have to have a Mental Unity to want to do this and carry it out.!

As I have humbly stated before, there are many, many issues and elements included in this in just the Black American Communities alone and I am aware that we all come from different backgrounds in our personal lives and social realities here. This is a Situation or rather a New Age of Time that requires input from a lot of other concerned peoples.

That is All.

Bro. Tafari Khumbaka,

I sincerely sympathize with the victims in The Congo and elsewhere in Africa, Asia, Australia and The Americas. However my brother neither Evil Black Peoples, Evil Whites, Arabs, Indians, Hispanics or Orientals are The Promblem in the World nor have they been for a long, long, time now.

No My Brother.!

The promblem in the world that has so much War, Rape, Disrespect and Hell going on daily as a way of life in all Four Quarters of The Earth is to be found right here in America.

And it is NOT White America Either.!

It IS BLACK AMERICA.

The Functional Insanity of Black Americans in refusing to UNCONDITIONALLY UNITE in all areas from Top to Bottom, Streets to Office, Regardless of Skill, Talent, Field of Occupation or Chosen School of Thought has Diabolical and Ominous Implications for ourselves and humanity.

All of the many reasons that can be given for not doing so and the many peoples among us in the various fields of politics, religions, education, sciences, economics, industries, street-gangs and organized crimes who continues to thwart such a unity for narrow-minded, selfish, organizational purposes, religious reasons (and any others) only shows and verifies The State of Functional Insanity that we have been in for a long, long time and are still presently in now.!

Until we as a whole or some of us ( a strong group of us ) rise up and take control and power of The Political, Religious/Spiritual , Police, Educational, Economic, Organized Crime, and Scientific Institutions that rule, guide , influences, controls and directs the destinies of humanity we will continue to have barbaric acts like these and watch the world itself ( humanity ) melt down.!

Until we have the power of the support of each other in our own hands and own grips we will continue to be zombie-like witnesses to atrocities here and abroad. We must begin to own and control our own human institutions in a organized society.

We should at least do this for Ourselves, in Our Own Institutions and In Our Own Regions of the Country where we are predominate at somewhat like immediately. !

We are in the strongest place in the world and behave like the weakest peoples, in fact like a peoples, an entire peoples, in a damning stupor of the worst type.!

Greetings,

Everyone who commented on this issue is right that the modern knocking off of noses from statues is mainly a racial effort to de-Africanize the images. I just returned from Kemet last week and I pointed out to my group almost everyday on the tour the systematic patterns of criminal defacement by both the early Christians on the one hand, and the modern archaeologists/museum officials on the other, as the particular pattern of defacement by both groups is very distinctive and easy to recognize. The early Christians were very callous in their widespread destruction of images and monuments, but they were not really concerned with simply noses, they were most often focused on disfiguring an **entire** image, particularly on wall reliefs.

Regarding statues in particular, noses were sometimes knocked off by early Christians, but the more widespread criminal act is the **modern** reshaping and recarving of noses on both statues and wall reliefs. If you take a look at the bust in the Field Museum shown on CNN, you will notice that the nose is not completely knocked off; it is broken and crudely reshaped. Also notice that the modern conspirators systematically stripped the facial paint and left only the black paint for the eyes and eyebrows to give the visitor the false impression that the rest of the face was originally left without any paint. When visitors see this statue made of white limestone, they naturally assume that the image did not have the brown pigmentation on the face, which was certainly painted on this bust. The early Christians and Muslims never concerned themselves with selectively stripping facial paint and recarving noses, this is the criminal work of modern conspirators.

<http://www.cnn.com/video/?/video/bestof/2009/08/18/ac.beat.mon.cnn>

Take a look at this example from a 2004 tour that I led in the British Museum. About 2:52 min. into the video, I explain the work of **modern** criminals in their attempt to change the racial identity of one of the relief images. This is a classic example of de-Africanizing an image.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-Vuh-O1pCMo>

The knocking off of noses is the most obvious form of vandalism, but the more widespread and subtle crime is the reshaping of noses and the stripping of facial and body paint on statues and reliefs by archaeologists and modern officials.

Thank you, Prof. Ampim, for that illuminating video of your tour of the BM. I visited the BM in late June this year, and wish I had such a tour guide. When I toured the Valley of the Kings (VoK) back in 1995, I did have the good fortune of getting up a guide who was quick to point out the African iconography in the tomb of Ramses III, among many other examples.

From Urban Legends at About.com:

<http://urbanlegends.about.com/od/crime/a/burundanga.htm>

Comments: Is there a drug called burundanga used by criminals in Latin America to incapacitate their victims? Yes.

Do news sources confirm that burundanga is being used to commit crimes in the United States and other countries outside Latin America? No, they do not.

The above story is almost certainly a fabrication. Two details betray it as such:

1. The victim allegedly received a dose of the drug by simply touching a business card. (All sources agree that burundanga must be inhaled or ingested, or the subject must have prolonged topical contact with it, in order for it to have an effect.)
2. The victim allegedly detected a "strong odor" coming from the drug-laced card. (All sources agree that burundanga is odorless and tasteless.)

What is burundanga?

Burundanga is the street version of a pharmaceutical drug called scopolamine. It is made from the extracts of plants in the nightshade family such as henbane and jimson weed. It's a deliriant, meaning it can induce symptoms of delirium such as disorientation, loss of memory, hallucinations, and stupor.

You can see why it would be popular with criminals.

In powdered form scopolamine can be easily mixed into food or drink, or blown directly into victims' faces, forcing them to inhale it.

The drug achieves its "zombifying" effects by inhibiting the transmission of nerve impulses in the brain and muscles. It has several legitimate medicinal uses, including the treatment of nausea, motion sickness, and gastrointestinal cramps. Historically, it has also been used as a "truth serum" by law enforcement agencies. And, like its street cousin burundanga, scopolamine has frequently been implicated as a stupefying agent or "knockout drug" in the commission of crimes such as robbery, kidnapping, and date rape.

I agree wholeheartedly -- too often people post all kinds of irrelevant or distantly related "news" items or topics they believe might be of general interest to the group. But that dilutes the purpose of having a forum set up specifically for the purpose of discussing African history/historiography, politics, science, etc.

Paulina Zelitsky has been steadfast in her theory of the collapse of the city as a result of a powerful earthquake more than 12,000 years ago. The scientists are in agreement that the geologic formation of the Yucatan Peninsula is as a result of seismic activity.

she will lead a new expedition, from the Port of Progress, to explore a suspected site of a lost underwater city near Cuba financed by National Geographic. The team has been readying a specially equipped ship in Canada for the expedition. A hundred people plan to deploy a mini-submarine and several robots to depths of up to half a mile. In October of 2004, Paulina Zelitsky and her team found evidence that an island collapsed into the sea, but they could not complete the mission due to technical deficiencies. The scientists managed to film a pyramid of almost 35 meters height (115 feet) and to extract stones embedded with animal fossils incapable of living at a depth of 700 meters (2,300 feet).

Greetings

Again, because my emails do not go through on African Classical Civilizations list, I am addressing your email here. You stated:

GORE: The Proto-Bantu reconstruction for `lake` is M3221 *-janja and because it is in noun class 9 becomes *-njanja `lake`. The nominal root is UNANALYSABLE, this means it cannot be divided into semantically meaningful parts. Furthermore there is no *-nja or *-ja meaning `lake` that could serve as an alternative. Feel free, however, to correct me. You talk as if a term from one Bantu language automatically goes back to the ancestral language. This is not the case.

ASAR:

That is incorrect. From

http://encyclopedia.jrank.org/NUM\_ORC/NYANZA\_from\_the\_ancient\_Bantu\_r.html

NYANZA (From the ancient Bantu root anza, a river or lake), the Bantu name for any SHEET or stream of WATER of considerable SIZE; especially applied to the Great Lakes of East Africa. The word is variously spelt; and the form NYASA has become the proper name of a particular lake. Nyanza is the spelling used in designating the great lakes which are the main reservoirs of the River Nile.

The fact that anza refers to a lake AND a river demonstrates that the core of the meaning is not a lake and refers to that which houses a body of water of considerable size. This is why in Kiswahili SIWA or ZIWA refers to a lake or pond. Again, the reference is to a collection of water. The root is SA or ZA. As Ferg noted MA-SINI refers to breasts in Rukwangali-Bantu. The same is MA-SHI in Setswana-Bantu. We can see why the root SA in Nara means milk (sa) and in Proto-Taman milk (*sun). -SA- is an ancient African root.

To address the NY prefix, it is not a prefix at all. The word NYANZA is an agglutinated term where the final vowel in the first word has been elided. Observe:

nu, niw, nwn = primordial waters iKami (Egyptian) nwy = water iKami nyu = to drink Dagara nwa = primordial waters Kikongo nua, nui-ni = to drink Kikongo nyua = primordial waters Mbochi inu = to drink Maori nu = water Common Bantu nmu = drinking Yoruba mu = water Yoruba

The word NYANZA or NYASSA means great waters and not simply lake as ethnographers translate it. It is made up of two words NYUA (NUA) +ANZA = NYANZA which we can translate as a large collection of water.

| 29636|2009-08-25 20:16:46|Asar Imhotep|Re: [africanclassicalhistory] When The Cats Away...|

In response to your email:

GORE: There is a difference between SOUND CHANGES, where the sounds in a word change thus altering the pronunciation, and word change or LEXICAL REPLACEMENT where the entire word is substituted by a new word. That is what has happened with `sure` being replaced by `shizzle`. It is not a sound shift and to present it as such raises serious questions about your understanding of basic historical linguistics.

ASAR: shizzle is not a lexical replacement by any stretch of the imagination. The sound izzle has no meaning by itself. It is a stylistic transposition that can be added to words as the user sees fit. It is a clear sound shift that thousands of people use on a daily basis. You seem to be of the opinion that if a European says it's a word by putting it in a dictionary, then it is official.

GORE: Either you have enough regular correspondences in words of the same meaning to demonstrate a genetic relationship or you do not. Do you need to know the cosmologies of the German and English people's to demonstrate the genetic relationship? No. Do you need it to show that English and Polish are related, all be it more distantly? No. Do you need cosmology to show that Bantu languages are related to each other? No. What about that Bantu languages are related to Fula and Wolof in Senegal? No. So what do you mean?

ASAR: If I was trying to argue genetic relationship you may have a point. But again, you seem to be of the opinion that a linguist knows more about the terms African people use better than African people. As an example, the word ZULU in dictionaries is always rendered to mean sky and this is farthest from the truth. If you ask any Sangoma about the word ZULU they will tell you that the term refers to interplanetary space and is rooted in the notion that the mind/soul of a human being has the ability to travel across galaxies. When they are referring to the blue sky they say SIBAKABAKA.

We see this same concept among the Yoruba term eiye ororo which means bird of descent which is a symbol for an individual's ability for astral travel. If you see a bird on top of one's head in African traditions, this is what it means. This same bird symbolism is associated with Mwene Mutapa of South Africa and is the same among the Zulu.

Not knowing African cosmology linguists have missed the Egyptian word HTP in Yoruba as ADABA. Here the initial H is dropped and T > D and P > B. In the dictionaries they always say the word means dove. It does, but it is a symbol for peace. It is also what is sacrificed to Obatala which makes it an offering. When some says ADABA to you in Yoruba, they are not saying dove they are saying peace. Its also interesting to note that word APD means fowl in Egyptian and is used as an offering on the HTP table. To a foreign ear APADA could sound like ADABA. Only by knowing the spiritual practices would you know these things.

GORE:Is that how it`s done Asar? Some linguists go into the field and collect raw data on languages which they record using the international phonetic alphabet. Some linguists may consult a dictionary but why do you assume that the original recorder didn`t understand and entered a simplified form? That might be an issue with a reconstruction, like at BLR 3, but not, as far as I know, with the raw data. Feel free to correct me.

As for your seemingly sneering attitude towards hypothesised`proto-forms` if you understood regular correspondences and actually tried to follow them in your own work you would understand the basis of reconstructions.

ASAR: Again, if proto reconstructions actually led anywhere in terms of real meaning, it would hold more weight in my work. The same reason you missed ANZA as the root of the word NYANZA by using a reconstruction of *JANJA and then claiming that there could not be broken down into smaller meaningful parts. This is defining characteristic of Bantu, that all meaningful words can be reduced to monosyllabic morphemes agglutinated to make an enhanced or new word. You seem to believe this same impossibility when it comes to Egyptian bi and triliterals. As has been demonstrated time and time again this is not the case and you should really rethink your position because you have yet to falsify it. The major drawback to proto forms is that they are imaginary and assumes that there were no regional dialects to the terms.

GORE: Metaphor is used in every language on earth. Am I missing something? Oh and I wonder how Dr Senghor got on with Professor Diop?

ASAR: This is a clear sign that you don't speak to native speakers and your primary source of information is a book. Put the books down and live the culture.

GORE: I'm sure there are many, if not most, African languages where the word "star" and the word "teacher" have no connection. You write as if the situation were identical in all African languages in terms of the double meaning and the mythology.

ASAR: You missed the point. Explain away how SBA in Egyptian means to teach, student and teacher and how SUBAA in Bambara means initiated student and teacher? You can type long responses and ignore the facts all you want to. But you cannot falsify this as a legitimate cognate. Now you have to explain how a modern African culture came across this ancient term as this is not something that is shared among a vast language group to claim some common origin. I await your response on this one.

GORE: At least the historical linguistics textbooks contain examples of good quality recurrent correspondences in cognates even if, as you say, they are missing cognates. We should all aspire to have putative cognates in our work that are at least of that quality. That should be our starting point. If we can expand our work to include less obvious cases, whether through knowledge of cosmologies or some other way, then that should come afterwards. The problem is when the convincing stuff isn't there but there's plenty of speculative evidence.

ASAR: My starting point is always the cultural practices, then I compare terms based on the spiritual, cosmological definitions given by the priests or as I call them the keepers of the culture. When you actually talk to the native historians you learn things you don't get from books. Like when you talk to Nubian people they tell you that the constant reference to 42 in Egyptian theology represents the 42 tribes that made up the original nomes of Egypt. If we go by the records of living traditions today, and that of the Egyptians themselves, they will tell you that Egypt was not a monolingual society. You act as if the Egyptian language is a monolithic language. It is because of this false assumption that you keep in vain requesting a proto comparison and you haven't, nor has anyone else, reconstructed proto-Egyptian to compare proto terms. You can't construct a proto-Egyptian because you don't know all of the languages that made up the Egyptian language. This is why Egyptian is classified as an isolate which makes no sense. How do you have a 3000 + year old language that has NO living branches, yet we are to assume that this is the case with Bantu and Niger-Congo within the last 3000 years. This is logically and theoretically impossible.

Greetings Peter, thanks for your feedback. The BM has many examples of altered noses, lips, and other facial features. We edited the guided tour video down from about 5 hours to 90 minutes (three short clips are on YouTube). You went to the KV area at the right time because the Tomb of Ramses III was open in 1994-1995, and it was open recently until earlier this year. This important tomb is now closed again indefinitely.

Thank you, Prof. Ampim, for that illuminating video of your tour of the BM. I visited the BM in late June this year, and wish I had such a tour guide. When I toured the Valley of the Kings (VoK) back in 1995, I did have the good fortune of getting up a guide who was quick to point out the African iconography in the tomb of Ramses III, among many other examples.

Greetings,

Everyone who commented on this issue is right that the modern knocking off of noses from statues is mainly a racial effort to de-Africanize the images. I just returned from Kemet last week and I pointed out to my group almost everyday on the tour the systematic patterns of criminal defacement by both the early Christian on the one hand, and the modern archaeologists/ museum officials on the other, as the particular pattern of defacement by both groups is very distinctive and easy to recognize. The early Christians were very callous in their widespread destruction of images and monuments, but they were not really concerned with simply noses, they were most often focused on disfiguring an *entire* image, particularly on wall reliefs.

Regarding statues in particular, noses were sometimes knocked off by early Christians, but the more widespread criminal act is the *modern* reshaping and recarving of noses on both statues and wall reliefs. If you take a look at the bust in the Field Museum shown on CNN, you will notice that the nose is not completely knocked off; it is broken and crudely reshaped. Also notice that the modern conspirators systematically stripped the facial paint and left only the black paint for the eyes and eyebrows to give the visitor the false impression that the rest of the face was originally left without any paint. When visitors see this statue made of white limestone, they naturally assume that the image did not have the brown pigmentation on the face, which was certainly painted on this bust. The early Christians and Muslims never concerned themselves with selectively stripping facial paint and recarving noses, this is the criminal work of modern conspirators.

<http://www.cnn.com/video/?/video/bestoftv/2009/08/18/ac.beat.mon.cnn>

Take a look at this example from a 2004 tour that I led in the British Museum. About 2:52 min. into the video, I explain the work of *modern* criminals in their attempt to change the racial identity of one of the relief images. This is a classic example of de-Africanizing an image.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-Vuh-O1pCMo>

The knocking off of noses is the most obvious form of vandalism, but the more widespread and subtle crime is the reshaping of noses and the stripping of facial and body paint on statues and reliefs by archaeologists and modern officials.

Advancing the work,

Manu Ampim

Isn't the tomb of Ramses II one of the thirteen or so (ref. letter of Champollion the Younger to his elder brother cited in Diop) having an illustration of the famous "Table of Nations" as the Euros call it?

Note I sent to the author of this page

Usually when you are looking for information, you put in a key word for the guy you are looking for and when you find the pages, they are full of all kind of topics not in what you are looking for.

Your Ahmose page is great. I too have a paid web site, but one of these days I will run out of the ability to keep paying for it.

I also put my pages on a Google Blog.. free, and I'll bet Google will be around longer than a Tootsie Roll.

After you create a Google Identity, you can actually e-mail your page to Google Docs

After it is a doc, you can edit it any time

You can store your images on Google's other utility, but they are limited to 6.3" if you are going to use them in your blog.

It is much easier to edit blogs in the docs utility than in the blog utility.

Once you get your doc the way you want it, you can publish it to your blog.

After that, you can come back to docs and edit your doc and when it is updated, so is your blog.

Any way, you did good. The idea to focus on one particular topic on a page and including all information about that topic is great.

1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to determine what consumers want and are willing to pay for. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept that addresses this need.

2. The second step is to develop a business plan. This document outlines the company's goals, strategies, and financial projections. It is essential for securing funding and guiding the company's operations. The business plan should also include a marketing strategy to reach the target market.

3. The third step is to create a prototype. This is a physical model of the product that allows the company to test its design and functionality. Prototyping is crucial for identifying potential issues early in the development process and making necessary adjustments.

4. The fourth step is to conduct a pilot test. This involves producing a small batch of the product and testing it in a controlled environment. The pilot test helps to gather feedback from potential users and assess the product's performance under real-world conditions.

5. The fifth step is to launch the product. This involves distributing the product to the market and promoting it through various channels. A successful launch requires a strong marketing campaign and effective distribution strategy to ensure the product reaches its target audience.

6. The sixth step is to monitor the product's performance. This involves tracking sales, customer feedback, and market trends. Continuous monitoring allows the company to make data-driven decisions and implement improvements to enhance the product's success.

7. The seventh step is to scale the production. Once the product has been successfully tested and marketed, the company can increase its production volume to meet growing demand. Scaling requires careful planning to ensure quality and efficiency.

8. The eighth step is to maintain the product. This involves ongoing support, updates, and improvements. Regular communication with customers and staying abreast of market changes are essential for maintaining the product's relevance and competitiveness.

9. The ninth step is to evaluate the overall success of the product. This involves analyzing the company's financial performance, market share, and customer satisfaction. A thorough evaluation helps the company understand what worked well and what areas need improvement for future products.

10. The tenth step is to plan for the future. This involves identifying new market opportunities and developing strategies to explore them. Continuous innovation and adaptation are key to long-term success in a competitive market.

11. The eleventh step is to build a strong brand. A well-defined brand identity, including a logo and consistent messaging, helps to differentiate the product from competitors and build customer loyalty. Branding is a critical component of a successful marketing strategy.

12. The twelfth step is to establish a distribution network. This involves partnering with retailers, wholesalers, or other channels to get the product into the hands of consumers. A robust distribution network is essential for reaching a wide audience.

13. The thirteenth step is to manage the supply chain. This involves sourcing raw materials, manufacturing the product, and managing logistics. Efficient supply chain management is crucial for controlling costs and ensuring timely delivery to customers.

14. The fourteenth step is to provide excellent customer service. This involves addressing customer inquiries, resolving issues, and providing support. High-quality customer service is a key factor in building a positive reputation and encouraging repeat purchases.

15. The fifteenth step is to stay up-to-date with industry trends. This involves monitoring technological advancements, market shifts, and competitor activities. Staying informed allows the company to anticipate changes and adapt its strategy accordingly.

16. The sixteenth step is to foster a culture of innovation. Encouraging creative thinking and experimentation within the company can lead to the development of new products and improvements to existing ones. Innovation is the lifeblood of a successful business.

17. The seventeenth step is to build a strong financial foundation. This involves managing the company's budget, securing funding, and ensuring profitability. A solid financial base is essential for sustaining the business and investing in future growth.

The answer is actually muchmore simple and realistic than I am presentingit fromwithin n limited framework and sphere of influence.

1. The very first thing is tohave or rather resurrect A Mental Unity. Yes a Mental Unity be even having a Spiritual Unity or a Physical ( Capitalistic ) Unity is just simply not enough Because we have many religions and spiritualities such as Islam, Christianity, Vodun, Hinduism, Yogas, Buddhism and the likes we can easily see that all it takes to div in any way with these is some opportunistic power-hungry persons with a "magnetic attrac that preaches one over the other and we are divided.!

Or there can be some unfortunate event that makes a large number of people blame the oth group and theirfaith and we are divided. In a capitalistic sense it would be wonderful if evi had enough money and resources to pursue the best way of life for themselves and help others but that is not the case.

Monies and the lack of it causes class divisions,discriminations, jealousies and the likes b the haves and/or have nots. Capital also causes the concentration of wealth and power in tl hands of a few and not the majority. These " few " may make decisions that are not in the interests of the majority.( Now don't get me wrong. I am not per se anti-capitalist I am just outlining some common promblems of capitalism ).

2. With a Mental Unity the Evolutionary Welfare of The Tribe, theSocio-Ethnic Group, It would be The Sole and Primary Focus of Every School of Thought, Discipline, Occupatio and Industry no matter what Spiritual Practice or Career that a Individual Person would ch It would be extremely hard then to use, enslave or pimp any person for anything.!

With that alone the ignorance, jealousies, hates, fears, slanderings, ego-trippings, low self-esteem, lack of confidence and the foolishness that divides us in religions by dividing our spiritualities would all disappear.!

The divisions among us that are based on gender, racial ideologies, capitalism and politics would also disappear or at least be neutralized and put in their place so that these issues can help us rather than divide us and hurt us.

3. Nationalism along with Afrocentrism and Afroasiatic Teachings in a Evolutionary Curriculum with a good, good bit of Free Thinking or Free-Thought could help all of us to do this in real time such as the present Industrial, Mechanical, Scientific Technological Age that we ourselves and the rest of the human race are in now.

But then, after all, we would have to have a Mental Unity to want to do this and carry it out.!

As I have humbly stated before, there are many, many issues and elements included in this in just the Black American Communities alone and I am aware that we all come from different backgrounds in our personal lives and social realities here. This is a Situation or rather a New Age of Time that requires input from a lot of other concerned peoples.

That is All.

Bro. Tafari Khumbaka,

I sincerely sympathize with the victims in The Congo and elsewhere in Africa, Asia, Australia and The Americas. However my brother neither Evil Black Peoples, Evil Whites, Arabs, Indians, Hispanics or Orientals are The Problem in the World nor have they been for a long, long, time now.

No My Brother.!

The problem in the world that has so much War, Rape, Disrespect and Hell going on daily as a way of life in all Four Quarters of The Earth is to be found right here in America.

And it is NOT White America Either.!

It IS BLACK AMERICA.

The Functional Insanity of Black Americans in refusing to UNCONDITIONALLY UNITE in all areas from Top to Bottom, Streets to Office, Regardless of Skill, Talent, Field of Occupation or Chosen School of Thought has Diabolical and Ominous Implications for ourselves and humanity.

All of the many reasons that can be given for not doing so and the many peoples among us in the various fields of politics, religions, education, sciences, economics, industries, street-gangs and organized crimes who continues to thwart such a unity for narrow-minded, selfish, organizational purposes, religious reasons (and any others) only shows and verifies The State of Functional Insanity that we have been in for a long, long time and are still presently in now.!

Until we as a whole or some of us ( a strong group of us ) rise up and take control and power of The Political, Religious/Spiritual , Police, Educational, Economic, Organized Crime, and Scientific Institutions that rule, guide , influences, controls and directs the destinies of humanity we will continue to have barbaric acts like these and watch the world itself ( humanity ) melt down.!

Until we have the power of the support of each other in our own hands and own grips we will continue to be zombie-like witnesses to atrocities here and abroad. We must begin to own and control our own human institutions in a organized society.

We should at least do this for Ourselves, in Our Own Institutions and In Our Own Regions of the Country where we are predominate at somewhat like immediately. !

We are in the strongest place in the world and behave like the weakest peoples, in fact like a peoples, an entire peoples, in a damning stupor of the worst type.!

"Before the end of the last Ice Age (12,000-years ago) the ocean levels were at least 300 feet below their current levels. A vast "island" was in the area in those remote times rather than chains of islands. Edgar Cayce referred to Bimini as one of the mountaintops of ancient Atlantis. While few would consider the island a mountain, 12,000-years ago it was one of the highest points on the vast land formation in the region. Bimini and Andros Island, lying about 100 miles to the east of Bimini, were a part of the same island in 10,000 B.C.called "Poseidia" by Cayce. Cayce related that a Hall of Records containing the records of Atlantis was constructed somewhere in the region. The Hall of Records was in a temple which sunk in 10,000 B.C. and is, according to Cayce, covered by "the slime of ages." This record hall is identical to the one in Egypt under the Sphinx.

Archaeologists have countered that the remains of civilization in the region only go back 7,000 yearsor perhaps even less. They have asserted that if a major civilization existed in the area, some of its remains would be found on current land. That assertion has a fundamental flaw. Ancient maritime civilizations typically built their cities and ports on the ocean shores. As related in prior issues of Ancient Mysteries, archaeologists working in South America, the Pacific coast of North America, India, and elsewhere in the world have been discovering the remains of underwater ruins. These ancient maritime civilizations built their cities and ports on coastlinesall of which have been covered by the rising oceans. Given the recent changes in North and South American archaeologytaking the history of habitation in the Americas to 50,000-years agoit seems likely that ruins would lie in the shallow waters around Bimini."

This city would be a phenomenal find if it eventually proved to be factual. But Paul hits the nail on the head -- what time period (historical or prehistorical) are we talking about? That may inform us about the climate and sea water levels of that time.

Greetings,

on the one hand, and the modern archaeologists/ museum officials on the other, as the particular pattern of defacement by both groups is very distinctive and easy to recognize. The early Christians were very callous in their widespread destruction of images and monuments, but they were not really concerned with simply noses, they were most often focused on disfiguring an *entire* image, particularly on wall reliefs.

Regarding statues in particular, noses were sometimes knocked off by early Christians, but the more widespread criminal act is the *modern* reshaping and recarving of noses on both statues and wall reliefs. If you take a look at the bust in the Field Museum shown on CNN, you will notice that the nose is not completely knocked off; it is broken and crudely reshaped. Also notice that the modern conspirators systematically stripped the facial paint and left only the black paint for the eyes and eyebrows to give the visitor the false impression that the rest of the face was originally left without any paint. When visitors see this statue made of white limestone, they naturally assume that the image did not have the brown pigmentation on the face, which was certainly painted on this bust. The early Christians and Muslims never concerned themselves with selectively stripping facial paint and recarving noses, this is the criminal work of modern conspirators.

<http://www.cnn.com/video/?/video/bestoftv/2009/08/18/ac.beat.mon.cnn>

Take a look at this example from a 2004 tour that I led in the British Museum. About 2:52 min. into the video, I explain the work of *modern* criminals in their attempt to change the racial identity of one of the relief images. This is a classic example of de-Africanizing an image.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-Vuh-O1pCMo>

The knocking off of noses is the most obvious form of vandalism, but the more widespread and subtle crime is the reshaping of noses and the stripping of facial and body paint on statues and reliefs by archaeologists and modern officials.

Advancing the work,
Manu Ampim

Friends,

On 5th September 2009, we will be converging at KCDN offices at 8am to kick start the exercise on Komarock Canal.

We are pleased to announce that Total Kenya Ltd, through Eco Challenge, will be giving 1,000 various types of seedling for a start. We will detail all the other forms of support they are giving to us.

City Council of Nairobi has mobilized her staff to join us for the event and they will provide technical support and water for the day. I was called in for an early morning meeting with the City Department at the City Hall to ensure that the staff at City Hall participate in this exercise in the best way they can.

I talked with the Sponsorship Manager at Safaricom and she was optimistic about their participation.

Housing Finance called us this morning and I went in for a meeting with the head of their Relations in the evening today. They will get back to me on the level of their support.

Barclays Bank at Haile Selassie called me last week and they are determining their level of involvement.

Together with all Friends of KCDN who have shown willingness to support this initiative will converge for the Ministerial address on Environmental Conservation at KCDN at 8am on 5th Sept. The Minister will be invited to address the gathering by the Town Clerk, Mr Philip Kisia. We will then proceed to the site, and we want to set an example of what can be done when the people join hands with institutions that ought to provide these services.

We want to invite as many Corporates to step forward and claim a piece of the cake. They will then show-case what they can do to help make Nairobi a Cleaner place. In the process, they will be supporting our efforts at KCDN to mobilize the people on the need to take care of our environment.

We will give a daily brief on activities from Monday as the D-Day approaches. In the meantime, we are very thankful to all those Friends of KCDN, including the Minister of Environment and Mineral Resources, for having accepted to be part of this noble initiative.

If you are touched by what we are doing, do not hesitate to contact the undersign to offer the kind of support you can.

Peace and blessings to you all.

My Dear Brothers and Sisters

The Article I wrote about Punk Black Males is over a year old and while I still feel the way I did about the shortage of real men in our race, I have not had a running discussion about it since I first wrote it. Upon a request, I forwarded it, not realizing that someone would want to challenge me on this, a year later. Be that as it may, I shall entertain these challenges for the good of the African race. I write so that you may know the truth and that the truth shall make you free.

If the Creator of the Universe were to waste its time looking at the status of the races and nations on planet earth, and finally got down to Africans and people of African descent, today our black males would be found at the bottom of the totem pole of all races. While the Creator hates excuses coming from those Divine spirits created in the Creators image, patience would allow us to submit the reasons why 70% of the African households are headed by African women. The Creator would let us explain why we are so weak as a race that it places us in a position that in less than a year our entire race of almost one billion could not only be reduced to slavery but be reduced to smoldering ashes or drowned in the bottom of the oceans, by any one of the stronger races on this planet.

I criticized all the different groups in our race in the article. No matter how intelligent; how African Centered; how spiritual; nor how wealthy, I called us all out because when the powerful races feel that in order for them to survive that they would need to make more room in these civilizations by getting rid of or exterminating us, none of the groups would be spared. And since the black males of our race have refused to do something as fundamental as heading the family, what kind of resistance or revolution could we wage if called to arms?

My beloved brothers and sisters, I have not written these or any words to the masses of our race to hurt anyone's feelings. I love my race just as I love myself, but I can not flatter you. Instead, I have sought through my writings to warn you. The Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey, who you know loved you, left these words for me to share with you. We are undergoing a period of silent murder and elimination all over the world, and the longer we take to get together, the quicker will the intention be carried out to its final realization. The Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey continues, Let us therefore rouse ourselves to see ourselves as others see us-our plight, our dilemma, our misery and poverty, and work hard to protect ourselves, and ensure a better way of life.

Our teacher the Honorable Marcus Garvey once prayed, God give us men, the urgency of our Cause demands it. If we are to be saved, and we must; if this great programme for Africa is to be carried out, and by God's help it will be, if our people are to be lifted up out of poverty, ignorance and frustration, then we must have men and women capable and efficient to lead and map out the course this race must take toward our goal. When your brother Shaka Barak said things about Black men, he hoped you would understand the seriousness of the age in which we live that my words illuminated. The Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey said, What we want really are men of prime courage, determined in heart and soul to carry the great Cause to victory. What cause you might ask? The Cause of Africa redeemed, the Cause of the emancipated black man the world over; because today he is a slave; if not a chattel slave, then a mental slave-slave to the white mans prejudices, hate and passion-denied a living wage, denied full employment, denied the education that would fit him for useful, scientific work. Hence the great need for service to emancipate him fully, and greater still is the need to emancipate his country and make him a man among men. My brothers and sisters, it was less than 24hrs after I forwarded this old article I had written about A Call To Arms Part I, Punk Black Males, some people came at me the wrong way and with the wrong understanding. Anyone can be born a male. Thats no accomplishment. I want our young and old males to be strong men and strong women so that we wont continue to be defeated by the men and women of other races. First, we must be honest and recognize all of our weaknesses as Black males and then do all we can to overcome them, as I strive to do for myself and my family everyday.

The Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey said, I wonder if you will think in terms of men and go out and be your own builders and architects. The race waits on you. It will never be greater than you make it and think of it. You haven't laid the foundation of your commercial system, your political system, yet you mimic the white man and say you are unemployed. There is nothing scarcely for him to do. He has already built all his banks, railways, ships; he has already defined the boundaries of his political system. He has no more cities to expand and you just follow him saying you are tired and you haven't laid one brick; you haven't sent one ship a thousand times across the ocean.

My brothers and sister, those of us who love you often become your greatest critics rather than always try to make you feel good through flattery.

In my conclusion, the Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey wrote these words, The Negro is dying out, and he is going to die faster and more rapidly in the next fifty years than he has in the past three hundred years. There is only one thing to save the Negro, and that is an immediate realization of his own responsibilities. Unfortunately we are the most careless and indifferent people in the world! We are shiftless and irresponsible, and that is why we find ourselves the wards of an inherited materialism that has lost its soul and its conscience. It is strange to hear a Negro leader speak in this strain, as the usual course is flattery, but I would not flatter you to save my own life and that of my own family.

Brothers and Sisters in that article I could have taken the opportunity of pointing out several of the groups I mentioned and declared an exception, especially those philosophies that I am aligned with, but I did not. The Honorable Marcus Mosiah

Garvey continued, There is no value in flattery. Flattery of the Negro for another quarter of a century will mean hell and damnation to the race. How can any Negro leader flatter us about progress and the rest of it, when the world is preparing more than ever to bury the entire race? Must I flatter you when England, France, Italy, Belgium, and Spain are all concentrating on robbing every square inch of African territory The land of our fathers? Must I flatter you when the cry is being loudly raised for a white America, Canada, Australia and Europe, and a yellow and brown Asia? Must I flatter you when I find all the other peoples preparing themselves for the struggle to survive, and you still smiling, eating, dancing, drinking and sleeping away your time, as if yesterday were the beginning of the age of pleasure? I would rather be dead than a member of your race without thought of the morrow, for it portends evil to him that thinketh not. Because I cannot flatter you I am here to tell, emphatically, that if we do not seriously reorganize ourselves as a people and face the world with a program of African nationalism our days in civilization are numbered, and it will be only a question of time when the Negro will be as completely and complacently dead as the North American Indian, or the Australian Bushman.

Sisters and Brothers your brother Shaka Barak has presented to you the thoughts of the Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey, to support my assertions that we are in trouble all across the board. The Call To Arms was a call to think. If I have offended anyone by touching your precious ideology or philosophy take this warning to the head and not to the heart. Time will not allow me to go back and forth with you on this topic because of an impending schedule that will be very demanding. In the final analysis, if what I say or type is aligned with the teachings of the Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey then as a Garveyite, I am prepared to fight and die for my belief as I remain your humble servant,

Shaka Barak

A Call To Mind, Stop The Killing, Save The Children

Hoteph Beloved:

Take this as not a reply but a statement of Divine Fact concerning the present psychic of E people in America and thus as is passed down to our children

If you are Black and serious about the type of Spirit our Children is now expressing, because the fact that their Mind has become possessed with nothing but lies and deception about A and the World in general.

So if you Divinely Love your Children, then you would be wise to think about what is the course to take in order to change the life living direction our children have been influenced take in America.

The first thing Black Folks need to arm ourselves with, is with a Mind that motivate Black to Think Divinely and not irrational emotionally.

A call to arm must come two fold to Black People, one to be openly Divinely Spiritual and other must be privately physical, and the two method must compliment the life and safety children and their parents, as well as all serious Black Afrikans Descendants in America and rest of Diaspora America.

Now, in this Time, it is not the Time to flex false positive militarism to the Black World, and especially not to our Children, that is if we desire to save our Children from what lies in them, that will be more devastating to them than what you see them going through today.

This is not the Time for the flashing of corrupted ego with a desire to become influential conspicuous before the Black World, calling openly for a act to Arm, not specifying what of Arms are being required for you to pick up and have in your possession.

If you Divinely Love and is Truly concerned about the way that your children have been influenced to act in their young lives today, then the first order of business is to call for the parents and Black Afrikans to arm ourselves with our Ancient First Way Ancestors Mind method of Thinking.

Doing so, will qualify you Black People to know the value and importance that Reparation our Divine Spirituality is to be, in the process of Liberating our Children and Black people from the very environment that have some Black folks shenanigan around appearing to be so militant impatience with the most intelligent process that will save the lives of our children. Such a way of life will put you in a position to reclaim Afrika and will be able to bring about a reunification of the Black Afrikan Nation.

Now, you can not continue to function as a Human Being, using the Human Being Mind, and expect to be qualified to look inside the Spiritual Dynamics of your Black Body Life and be able to know and understand why the necessity of the need for Black people to learn to Think our way out of the misery the life of our children are experiencing today.

There is as well, a more devastating misery that the parents of those children are experiences, which is being experienced by all serious minded Black Afrikans.

No, you will not be able to look at the merit of using a Divine Spiritual approach to saving our children, because the requirement is for you to be qualified to Look as well as see, what the merit is, in using the Mind ability to Divinely Think our Way to our Liberation.

Now, in the process of Divinely Thinking and being able to look as well as to see why the call to Black people must be, first a call to arm ourselves with our Ancient Divine First Way Ancestors Mind, the mind they brought to this planet and passed on to you, the so call Black Afrikan, you who have allowed that Divine quality of Mind to be invaded with the Mind of the Human Being, our oppressors today.

With such a flawed use of a mind, it will not allow you Black so call Afrikans to know why it is that you must first reclaim your Ancient First Way Ancestors Mind, arm yourself with such a high powered caliber of a Divine Mind and you will come to be able to See clearly why the rebirth of your Divine Spirituality and the Demand of our Enslaved Ancestors Reparation is essential to us being able to save the Children of the Black Afrikan Nation.

Can You Understand That, Beloved.

Beloved, this much I can share with you in public, but there is another dimension to the steps that must be taken in order to secure our children freedom.

So, it is by us grandstanding on the falsity of our egotistical grandiose militaristic public call to Arm, not specifying the type and quality of Arms to be used in our endeavor to change the direction of the life path that our children is now traveling today, that is what is causing the confusing among our children today.

You see, it is the so call superficial "Punkness" of such a Militaristic Call to Arm, attacking the two most sacred weapons in the mental arsenal of Black Afrikan People, which are our Divine Spirituality and the Sacred Holiness of our Enslaved Ancestors Reparation, because by engaging in such an attack, you attack mother Afrika and the need for the Black Afrikans to become a United Black Nation again.

You See Beloved, When You Do Not Know What Is Divinely True And Real, A Foolish Appeal will only appeal to the foolish amongst us Black Afrikan People.

Do know, that I mean no disrespect to anyone, it is just that I have Divine Respect For The Divine Truth And Reality that is revealed to me and many others in communication with our Ancient Divine First Way Ancestors, which the Black Life is in need of knowing how to make that Divine connection today, that is if we are to seriously Save The Children Of The Black Nation.

Can You Understand That, Beloved?

Be Kind To Your Self, Beloved

Beloved Mighty warrior Shaka.

Divine Loving to you.

See the comments below at the below link in ref to your missive.

Beloved Sun Star Shaka, when it comes to black are Punks hiding behind REPARATION Spirituality, that I am not vibing with unless you are speaking about religious (artificial) spirituality which is different from true Spirituality.

REPARATION: Beloved Shaka, the majority of our people have no Divine relationship v Reparation and true Spirituality. They do not know the Divine meaning of both. The ones do know the Divine meaning to Reparation and True Spirituality are so few, you can count on one hand and have some fingers left over, and those are the ones the others full of profane parasite ego rebel/rebuke against. There are those who talk about Reparation and are clueless to what the Divine approach is to getting REPARATION, and when others know the Divine approach to getting REPARATION tell them the Divine approach and they do not act on the Divine approach, yes, the punk Profane parasite ego is causing them to not heed to the Divine approach and listen to the ones who knows the Divine approach, which can not be discussed in this form of communication.

Our True Elders (Generals) no longer have the physical strength to be physically be on the battlefield, they have the mental strength (teaching) that will strengthen the warriors both physically and mentally to do battle. When the students is ready the teacher will appear, but it must be the will of the students to learn.

We have many teachers among us, and only a few Master teachers in this dispensation of time and if we do not know who they are when they are right in front of our faces, we will be doing what we are doing now, no Harambee, (working together for progress), we will be doing what we are doing now for another 400-500 years if this planet is going to still be here. Our lack of revelation of the Divine Sacredness of REPARATION And True Spirituality we are doomed, doomed. We might as well pick out our Tombstone. Better yet, forget the Tombstone. Why should we be remembered as a people who was no Universal/Earthly good.

Beloved One, Know that REPARATION and True Spirituality is what will save the children of this people.

Beloved Mighty warrior Shaka, if I miss under/inner stand, help me.

Divine Loving RESPECT

In this city dayton,ohio are some real cowards.

Right now there have been all these drug related killings.

All over this kkkcrack.

In this city the syndrome of thuggism has taken over .

Black males need to study the book " Black on Black Violence and study it cover to cover.

We can thank so-called black sell-out radio for promoting all this urban thuggery BS.

Black thugs don't even know that they are outdated and deemed obsolete by ole slavemaster.

I say it's mainly all these black males hiding behind distorted religion and this homothug,homosexual ,downlow BS.

I wonder why do black females and males like to read these BS downlow stories in these wack,safe negrowish
type magazine.

I say get your guns up and let's do the " Drop Squad " .

Punk Black males hiding behind Spirituality and Reparation

I disagree and the ancestors disagree with the two above being in the way. The above is what will save our children and our people.

Most of our people do not have a relationship with REPARATION and True Divine Spirituality, for if we did, we would be back on top of the world, doing our Divine right thing.

Religion is artificial spirituality.

The rest of the message I agree with.

Shaka Barak.

As educated as you seem you personify the lashes on the backs of the slave struggle. Personify the remarks of hate and control we strive to be free from. Extending your finger in judgment makes you a false law of justice still blind folded with the tales that the master tells his precious house nigger. Practice your lynch theory practice your speech in the mirror to rehearse your pillow of words so you can sleep comfortable. Talk in facts the fact that Europeans have been the leading HIV carriers in the world since Reagan's Contras. Reports from reporters who are for the money and ratings not the news. You are built with the strength of the weakest weight. The way to hurt a man is to show him his personal error the way to hurt the level of hate we have encountered is to take the hand of your own error and lead it to a better self. What of the thieves who stole this country or the tyrants we house by down playing our own. They hide behind you and money, power, title, & position. One ethnic is not the punk but the bully who seeks a verbal war with those who have a lack of words because words weren't there science those who protect families with hood manner because they know that if they do right they'll be shunned if they do wrong they'll be shunned. Find a way to rise and teach those you feel are troubled if your teachings do not stick with the students that doesn't close the class it challenges the teacher to other methods or those who wish to learn. Educate yourself to know the community know the ills then dare administer your remedy. When things are torn down something is always erected in its place, what are you erecting in your destruction?

How is this guy able to say this???? WHY HASN'T HE DIED FOR BLACK PEOPLE ALREADY??!!! People need to stop judging others unless they put their money where their mouth is! Even then...they shouldn't talk, JUST DO!!! Black males are the strongest on the planet...BY DESIGN!!! Just because many black men are confused and don't know how to start the "so-called" revolution, doesn't mean they are punks. ESPECIALLY MUSLIMS!!! IF THIS GUY THINKS MUSLIMS AREN'T FIGHTING FOR THEIRS...HE'S NUTS!!!

You all brought forth some valid points.

Beloved Mighty warrior Darnell, I agree with you. Our sisters and brother must be taught how to Rethink their position. How else will we know how to approach anything.

I am going to ponder on this message some more, and I will return with a reply.

I will forward you all comments to Brother Shaka.

A Call To Arms Part I

By Shaka Barak

Dedicated To Del Jones

Punk Black males hiding behind Religion, Spirituality, Hebrewism, Capitalism, Socialism, Communism, Pan Afrikanism, Nationalism, Integration, Miscegenation, Maat, Kemetism, Revolutionism, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism, Jehovahism, Civil Rights, Reparations, Repatriation while our children die. 100,000 murders of our children by our youth and others everyday and not one Black man has died trying to defend one Black Childs life except for firemen and policemen and most of the time they dont know that the child in the burning building is Black. Punk Black males have figured out how the white man was raised off his all fours and taught to look up towards the sky by the African race, who are the original men and women. Punk Black men can tell the world that it was the African who built the first civilizations and gave art, science, math and literature to the world. Punk Black males can tell of the Genius of our race in peace and in war under our great leaders of the past. But these same Punk Black males cant muster the strength to meet the manhood level of his counter parts today unless he is in the service of other races, as their dogs, that are told when to bark and bite and who to bark at and who to bite. Punk Black males say they will kill somebody about messing with their child or children but the funny thing is they havent killed anybody but their child and children are not only messed with, but dead and dying if not physically but from the drugs and alcohol they consume.

These cowards, includes our elders who, are manning the ship of the destiny of the African race and are not living up to the standards of manhood produced by the leading and dominant races and nations on this planet. Bill Withers window raising granny and grandpas have abandoned their post and Jr. has run off with the shotgun they used to have at that window. Males who are not organized, not willing and therefore not able to defend our race parade themselves across the tabloids, TV screens and you hear their female voices on radio stations, sometime in groups of five, ten, fifteen, twenty at a time, with no clue of what to do and afraid to do it if they knew it. They can say Its glorious to die for a cause only in a Last Poets poem. Every race comes into the Black Punk males so-called community, that has the fastest growing number of homosexuals that are about to outnumber heterosexual males, and pimp slaps the Punks and then walks way with the communities money in a Black bag that they take to their own community. Black Punk men dont even know how to fight except prize fighters and martial artist but most cant fight, cant box, cant use a knife, cant shoot a weapon and this has bred a race of youth who resort to guns, cause they cant fight, cause their Punk daddies that are around cant fight, box, use a knife or a gun. Punk Black males joined marches that call for putting down the guns when the whites who surround them and protect their marches all carry guns and wear vest and are ready to use their guns on the marchers if they got the chance. The other races make guns faster than you could ever collect and destroy them, in these phony gun collection drives that pay a gang banger $100 for an old gun that he can then buy three more guns with that same $100. Pretty soon in about 20 years the Punk Black males and so-called leaders will be dead and out of the way. The youth dont respect these leaders that push them into so called educational systems where not only are they not safe, but where most fail and drop out after they get their training to end up in jail. The Punk Black males have shown our youth over and over how they are high paid speakers and brokers of our pain, who position themselves to be male whores in the name of civil rights or some revolutionary crap. Punk Black males are afraid of our youth so much that they dont even drive in the hood at night and piss on themselves if five youth approach them from the front not just walk up from behind them.

In Call To Arms Part II I will give solutions to the killing of our youth.

You rock. That's why Blockbuster's offering you one month of Blockbuster Total Access, No Cost.

We should demand one thing, and one thing only.

That all raw materials are bought and sold through the national government, at market price.

That will put a stop to most of the 'wars' in Africa,

It should not be up to political elites to allow the underhanded selling of the resources that belong to the people of Africa. Which is what is happening now - through concessions, leases, etc.

And it is a theft of the resources and the economic future of the people of Africa. All this money (a trillion dollars per year) must be reinvested in other economic sectors like agriculture, manufacturing and infrastructure.

It is the only way Africa is going to develop.

I agree, Alex. Elitism has long compromised the development of various sectors in Africa. In Kenya in 1987 I spent a few days on a small coffee farm outside of Nairobi, and learned that the major complaint of the farmers was that their cooperative could not eliminate the various middlemen in the process of selling their product. All of these middlemen were part of the Kenyan business elite, whose main objective was to ensure the lowest possible price for coffee.

Congo: Three Cheers for Eve Ensler?

Written by keith harmon snow

<http://towardfreedom.com/home/content/view/1201/1/>

A major propaganda front has swept the Western media decrying the unprecedented sexual violence in the Eastern Democratic Republic of Congo. As this story goes to press the war in Congo-claiming 1000 lives a day in the East and more than 7 million people since 1996-is escalating yet again. More than 1.2 million were reported displaced in June, with at least 8000 additional displaced persons on October 22 after fighting escalated-as Western-backed forces perpetrate genocide and terrorism to depopulate and secure the land for multinational mining interests.

Needing to explain away the failure of the 2006 "elections process" and the "peace" that never was, the propaganda system has embraced the theme of femicide. As always, the white champions of human rights and humanitarian concern in the end blame the black victims for their own suffering. While raising much needed awareness, the propaganda front serves a selective and expedient agenda, a tool used to pressure certain political groups and provide cover for the real terrorists.

On a visit to Eastern Congo in May 2007, Eve Ensler-the playwright and producer of the Vagina Monologues-was witness to the profound human suffering and unprecedented sexual violence.

"I have just returned from hell," Ensler wrote, in Glamour Magazine in August. "I am trying for the life of me to figure out how to communicate what I have seen and heard in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. How do I convey these stories of atrocities without your shutting down, quickly turning the page or feeling too disturbed?"

Ensler came to see what those whose eyes are open cannot deny: the sexual violence and predation in Central Africa is unacceptable, unfathomable, and stoppable. And she has the courage and audacity to write and speak about it.

Three cheers for Eve Ensler!!

Or not?

Through her global campaign to end violence against women, called "V-Day," and with a nine-page feature article in Glamour magazine in August, Ensler launched a campaign calling for an end to rape and sexual torture against women and girls in eastern Democratic Republic of Congo. One of the voices she uses to tell the story is that of Christine Schuler Deschryver, described as a human rights activist in Congo. Ensler, Deschryver and the campaign have received a lot of press, with stories in Glamour, interviews on the BBC, PBS and Al Jazeera. The New York Times picked up the issue of rape in Eastern Congo in early October, and the Times story was followed the next day with a Democracy Now! interview with Christine Schuler Deschryver.

"Stop Raping Our Greatest Resource, Power To The Women And Girls Of The Democratic Republic Of Congo," Ensler's web site explains, "is being initiated by the women of Eastern DRC, V-Day and UNICEF on behalf of United Nations Action Against Sexual Violence in Conflict. The campaign calls for an end to the violence and to impunity for those who commit these atrocities." [1]

An end to impunity for those who commit these atrocities?

Ensler's Glamour article is an apt documentary of human suffering and courage. The doctors working to save and heal the survivors of sexual brutality are heroes. The women and girls who have survived are themselves portraits of courage and human dignity. The issue demands international condemnation and action. However, in her nine-page portrait of heroism and suffering, there is a single half paragraph that ostensibly addresses the roots of the problem.

"The perpetrators include the Interahamwe," Ensler writes, "the Hutu fighters who fled neighboring Rwanda in 1994 after committing genocide there; the Congolese army; a loose assortment of armed civilians; even U.N. peacekeepers." [2]

THE GLAMOUROUS GENOCIDE

Who is responsible for the brutality?

According to Glamour and Vanity Fair, it is always those rag-tag Rwandan genocidaires who fled justice in Rwanda, or those ruthless Congolese soldiers from the heart of darkness, and the loose assortments of obviously "loose" civilians, and even the U.N. peacekeepers who, in the United Nations Observers Mission in Congo (MONUC), are men from India, Uruguay, Nepal, Pakistan. and in Darfur, Sudan, it is those damned Janjaweed-Arabs on horseback, you know, the usual dark-skinned subjects.

And there is no mention whatsoever of the deeper realities and responsibilities of white people and predatory capitalism. Where is the discussion of the backers behind this warfare? Who sells the weaponry? Who produces it? Who photographs the UNICEF poster children and peddles the images of suffering in the Western press for billion dollar profit-driven campaigns that do not in the end uplift the people who they claim to care about?

Why are there gala UNICEF "fundraising" benefits-the Annual Snowflake Ball-in New York hotels with white-tie U.S. Presidents as honorary ambassadors and state department officials from the National Security Council-and $10,000 tickets-held by and for officials who remain silent about genocide in Ethiopia or northern Uganda or the U.S.-backed coup d'etat that occurred in Rwanda in 1994 or Zaire (Congo) in 1996? [3]

What we know to be true is that Eve Ensler was lucky to get this article in Glamour at all. The magazine is a travesty of violence against women-cosmetics, luxury aids, "health" and "beauty" products, liposuction, breast implants and sexually seductive advertising peddling the "perfect" female body and great American culture of sexual violence-and yet Glamour offers a platform for Ensler's message about sexual brutality of unprecedented human proportions.

What's going on here? There is a reason these stories proliferate and it is not about life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Glamour's publishers do not care about the suffering of black people. It is pure Western white supremacist propaganda serving to underscore the accepted narratives of Central Africa and assist in the consolidation of power over the region, but this is neither seen nor appreciated by white "news" consumers.

What Eve Ensler and Glamour have not addressed are the warlords behind the warlords, the corporations and white collar crime which is never-or selectively, now and then expeditiously, if ever-reported on the pages of Glamour, Vanity Fair, the New Yorker, or the other promoters of popular propaganda brought to us by the Conde Naste corporate empire.

Behind the warfare always blamed on Africans, behind the warlords' deadly battles, are other warlords and corporations from Western countries. The reason people-U.S. and Canadian citizens-are unaware of the issues involved is because of publications like Glamour and the corporations that control them. Ensler's article begins to look like an advertisement for UNICEF and the so-called "humanitarian" AID industry, which is itself part of the problem, because it remains silent about corporate plunder, "humanitarian" organizations partnering with the corporate exploiters, shared directorships with mining, defense, petroleum and other multinational interests. UNICEF and "not-for-profit" organizations like it are in the business of perpetuating their own survival, the vanguard of transnational capital.

Asked what to do, Ensler points to UNICEF: "Right now, [the best thing to do is] to give to the V-Day UNICEF campaign at vday.org/congo."

In the end Ensler's article-like the few racialized articles about rape in Rwanda, Congo and Darfur that have appeared in Ms. Magazine [4]-is a compelling portrait that serves a narrow political agenda of which Ensler appears not to be conscious. Such articles-appearing in gendered white spaces of privilege like Glamour or Ms. or Cosmopolitan-blame the very (African) victims of an international system of oppression that revolves around permanent warfare economies-U.S., Canada, Britain, Belgium, Israel, France, Canada, Australia-and they serve to promote the interests of these by never challenging the perpetrators of chaos and terrorism that are directly aligned with the predominant military-intelligence establishment. When reporting on rape in Central Africa, articles in Conde Naste group publications-as with almost all publications-have never challenged the governments of either Rwanda or Uganda, soldiers of which have committed massive sexual atrocities, crimes against humanity and other war crimes. [5]

How does it happen that a notorious "dictator" and "cannibal" like Uganda's legendary dictator Idi Amin could live out his life in splendor in Saudi Arabia? Far more people have suffered terrorism under President Yoweri Museveni in Uganda, than under Idi Amin, yet Museveni remains the West's golden boy in the old Pearl of Africa. It was Paul Kagame-"the Butcher of Kigali"-who in the early years-circa 1981 to 1988-wielded the iron fist of terror in Uganda. Kagame was Museveni's director of Military Intelligence and is now President of Rwanda. Taban Amin, Idi Amin's eldest son, is today in charge of the Uganda's dreaded Internal Security Organization, the private terror instrument of President Yoweri Museveni. While Ugandan troops are perpetrating atrocities in Eastern Congo at this writing, no one says anything about them. Uganda remains near the top of the list for AID to ARMS scandals, even as Museveni visits with George W. Bush at the White House (October 30). Similarly, the Kagame government always gets away with murder because Kagame has friends in high places.

An end to impunity for those who commit these atrocities?

Indeed, it turns out that Eve Ensler is collaborating with certain powerful interests whose involvement in Central Africa has never come under scrutiny. In a September 17, 2007 interview with Ms. Magazine journalist Michele Kort, broadcast by PBS, Ensler was joined in a dialog about sexual violence in Eastern Congo by Christine Schuler Deschryver, described by PBS as "from Bukavu in the Congo, who is an activist against the sexual violence." [6]

This is the same "human rights activist from Congo" interviewed by Amy Goodman on Democracy Now!

Who is Christine Schuler Deschryver?

THE POLITICAL ECONOMY OF RAPE REPORTING

Jumping on the bandwagon, on October 8, 2007, Democracy Now! ran an interview between Amy Goodman and Christine Schuler Deschryver about sexual violence in Congo. [7] Deschryver claimed that studies were done that show that sixty percent of the sexual violence in Eastern Congo is committed by "these people who did the genocide in Rwanda, by Hutu's who made the genocide in their country."

Christine Schuler Deschryver describes the process where militias enter a village, kill all the men, and sexually assault and brutalize the women. [8]

This is "femicide" says Deschryver, a charge repeated by Eve Ensler and echoed by Amy Goodman. "People can help me first of all being an Ambassador and talking about the problem going on in Congo because it's a silent war. They are killing, they are raping babies. It's like Darfur: Darfur started four years ago. But Congo started almost eleven years ago and nobody's talking about this femicide, this holocaust. It's a femicide because they are just destroying the female species."

Femicide? Congolese women sexually traumatized, Congolese men killed? It is a process of depopulation and ethnic cleansing.

Speaking from the Democracy Now! studios in New York City, Christine Schuler Deschryver describes a war involving African countries outside Congo, but she does not name Western interests involved.

Christine Schuler Deschryver describes her personal sacrifice to help the victims of Congo's wars. She states that she works in "administration, in her office." Until 2002, at least, Christine Schuler Deschryver was known for gorilla conservation, not human rights, in Congo.

Christine Schuler Deschryver is married to Carlos Schuler, a Swiss German working for decades in the Kahuzi-Biega National Park in South Kivu. Carlos Schuler and Christine Schuler Deschryver both work for GTZ- Deutsche Gesellschaft für technische Zusammenarbeit-a "German technological cooperation agency." Carlos negotiates with warlords for "conservation." Because of his gorilla conservation interests, Schuler has been described as "Dian Fossey's successor." Schuler has maintained very private relations with all military forces in the region, and there are questions about mineral plunder and military collaboration and GTZ's role in structural violence and warfare in Congo.

GTZ is a German government institution with a corporate structure. The GTZ Supervisory Board has representatives of four Federal [German] Ministries: the Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation and Development (BMZ), Federal Foreign Office, Federal Ministry of Finance, and Federal Ministry of Economics and Labour. Since 1998 the Supervisory Board Chairman has been State Secretary Erich Stather from the BMZ.

GTZ's involvement in Eastern Congo is notable, given the German links to the Lueshe mine in North Kivu, and the German embassy's role in exploitation, depopulation and genocide in Congo. One top GTZ executive appears to be linked to German corporate interests seeking to control the Lueshe mine, now controlled by their U.S./German competitors (see below). The German government has been understandably mute about plunder in Congo, and the presentation of Christine Schuler Deschryver's-a GTZ agent in Bukavu-as a champion of human rights is a perfect example of the twisted "charity" and "philanthropy" dumped on the Congolese people.

Like the rest of Congo, Kahuzi-Biega is rich in minerals coveted by corporations and governments that include German multinationals like Bayer-subsiary H.C. Starck-involved in coltan in Congo.

But the interests of Carlos Schuler and Christine Deschryver run much deeper than "gorilla conservation" and "human rights" activism in Eastern Congo. The Deschryver family is one of the elite families in Belgium. Christine's father, Adrian Deschryver, was one of the first "rangers" of the Kahuzi-Biega National Park. [9] The Deschryver family worked with the Mobutu dictatorship. The great patriarch was August Deschryver, Belgium's Minister to the Congo at transition, in 1960, a likely candidate involved in undermining and destroying the Patrice Lumumba government, and assassinating the man, in the twilight of Congo's Independence.

The Kahuzi-Biega National Park began as a Zoological and Forest Reserve gazetted in 1937 after over-hunting threatened to wipe Congo's big game off the map. Adrien Deschryver helped found the Kahuzi-Biega Park in 1970. [10] One of the first actions was to forcibly displace the huge pygmy population from the park. The pygmies were consulted only to find locations of elephants and gorillas, and then they were removed: they were lured, tricked, forcibly driven out, and some died refusing to leave. This is exactly what is happening in other parts of Congo today, involving USAID, GTZ, and big "conservation" and "humanitarian" interests like CARE International. [11] areas-were destroyed. GTZ and UNESCO, the United Nations Scientific and Cultural Organization, got involved in the 1980s, after UNESCO designated Kahuzi-Biega a "World Heritage Site"-clearly another mechanism designed by Western interests to establish cultural and geographic control over people and landscapes. When the GTZ sought to implement "community development" they did not consult with the pygmies to determine their true needs, or wants. The result was armed violence and death. There was no compensation, and the pygmies-forced out of their universe of knowing, the forest-were left homeless and destitute in a world they did not understand. In 2000 era discussions involving some "440 stakeholders" under the new mantra of participatory involvement, there were only two people of pygmy origin, but these were lauded as representation of all the pygmy peoples.

As one Congolese consultant wrote, "Over the two-month period of research into the situation of the Bambuti Pygmies and the protected areas in North and South Kivu-the Kahuzi-Biega National Park-none of the indigenous Bambuti, Barwa, Batwa and Babuluko [people] displayed any enthusiasm for or awareness of the Kahuzi-Biega National Park conservation project. This project has left them worse off than before it was introduced and implemented. The Pygmies have been expelled and driven out with neither indemnity nor other compensation. They have been cast aside. They belong nowhere." [12]

This is genocide.

Genocide is the congregation of femicide and homicide, the destruction of an entire people, and that is what is happening to people in Central Africa, regardless of their ethnicity.

The human rights of the pygmies in Eastern Congo are the most violated of the most violated on earth, thanks to the Belgian family Deschryver, UNESCO and the GTZ.

The Amy Goodman report ends with a plea by Christine Schuler Deschryver for funds to put a roof on a house for survivors of sexual violence. How to help? Give to UNICEF, she says, or to Eve Ensler's international organization "V-Day".

The Democracy Now! report about rape in Congo followed in rather interesting coincidence with a New York Times feature. Goodman opens her report noting that she interviewed Deschryver "last month" [September] in New York. But the Democracy Now! report appeared on October 8, 2007.

On October 7, 2007, in "Rape Epidemic Raises Trauma of Congo War," Jeffrey Gettleman reported on rape in Congo for the New York Times.

If Amy Goodman was shocked and horrified about Christine Schuler Deschryver's descriptions of the scale and nature of sexual violence in Congo, why did she wait so long to run the interview? Why did the Democracy Now! report follow one day after the New York Times feature? Coincidence? Or is the Democracy Now! report just another expedient piece of a coordinated propaganda strategy?

The Gettleman report was a travesty of deception in classic New York Times form. "Eastern Congo is going through another one of its convulsions of violence," Gettleman writes, "and this time it seems that women are being systematically attacked on a scale never before seen here."

In fact, the situation in Central Africa has been one steady "convulsion of violence" since, at least, the Rwandan Patriotic Front invasion of Rwanda from Uganda in 1990. Zaire exploded in 1996, and the killing and raping has never stopped. This author has consistently and repeatedly reported on massive rape, sexual mutilation, and slavery as weapons of war and depopulation in Central Africa since at least 2001, and these were widely reported by others before that. Now, barely a year after the "historic national elections" that brought President Joseph Kabila to power in October 2006, The New York Times is doing damage control.

"The days of chaos in Congo were supposed to be over," wrote Gettleman. "Last year, this country of 66 million people held a historic election that cost $500 million and was intended to end Congo's various wars and rebellions and its tradition of epically bad government."

Things don't just fall apart in Congo. "Epically bad government" and "chaos" are typically manufactured to serve powerful interests-the "shock doctrine" defined by Naomi Klein [13]-and are the result of epically bad reporting and the impunity that is insured by Western disinformation and propaganda campaigns. Hundreds of millions of dollars pumped into the 2006 electoral process, and much was stolen. But the elections exercise was not even a band-aid on the festering war in Congo. To describe the ongoing warfare in Eastern DRC as the most recent convulsion of violence is to feed the Western stereotype of the hopeless African condition and run cover for multinational plunder and depopulation, backing warlords, on and on.

Gettleman's choice of sources and experts is very interesting. One of these, also referenced by Amy Goodman, is Sir John Holmes, a British diplomat with a long history of support for predatory imperialism.

"The sexual violence in Congo is the worst in the world," said John Holmes, the United Nations under secretary general for humanitarian affairs, to the New York Times.

Holmes provides a tidy commentary about African savagery. What we don't learn from the New York Times is that Holmes previously worked for the British security firm Thomas De La Rue, one of the top companies in the world that prints money, security documents (e.g. passports) and postage stamps for 150 countries; currency instruments are used to entrench and maintain structural violence. Thomas De La Rue prints money for the Isle of Man, an offshore tax haven connected to money laundering and mercenaries Tony Buckingham and Simon Mann, and they have printed special currency notes for war-torn Sierra Leone. More significantly perhaps, Holmes was the British Ambassador in Lisbon, Portugal from 1999 to 2001, the period of war in Congo where Congolese warlord Jean-Pierre Bemba, partnered with Uganda, a close British ally, launched the Movement for the Liberation of Congo (MLC) rebellion.

Bemba has a villa in Portugal, and his criminal syndicate involves his brother-in-law, blood diamonds and mercenary partner Antony Teixeira, a Portuguese tycoon living in South Africa. Bemba's troops committed massive rape and sexual violence in DRC, and the Effacer Le Tableau campaign was a genocide campaign against pygmies, but Bemba has never been held to account.[14] U.N. Under Secretary General John Holmes is selectively used by the New York Times to legitimize their propaganda, but Holmes himself should be deposed about his role as an economic hit-man supporting plunder and money laundering.

"The sheer numbers, the wholesale brutality, the culture of impunity - it's appalling," says John Holmes, in empty platitudes.

A PORNOGRAPHY OF VIOLENCE

Jeffrey Gettleman goes on to attribute violence to "one of the newest groups to emerge" called "the Rastas, a mysterious gang of dreadlocked fugitives who live deep in the forest, wear shiny tracksuits and Los Angeles Lakers jerseys and are notorious for burning babies, kidnapping women and literally chopping up anybody who gets in their way." In fact, the Rastas have been operating in Eastern Congo for at least three years, have previously committed atrocities, and are not a "new group to emerge."

Gettleman has to explain away the violence in African terms, never the white multinational corporations, arms dealers, criminal Western syndicates or "conservation" organizations (they fund) occupying the soils of North or South Kivu provinces on vast tracts of land.

Further, these feature articles express some very white supremacist thinking about rape in Congo. "Because there has been no justice," Eve Ensler states, "because so few perpetrators have been held accountable for the crimes that they're committing, it's becoming as Christine [Schuler Deschryver] said to me when we were there, like a country sport: rape."

So, according to this description, Congolese men are universally castigated for "rape as sport," no matter that this is committed by armed forces backed, armed, and licensed by the West to commit massive sexual atrocities, or that Congolese men are killed outright when militias enter villages. As shown below, the Congolese militias and National Army serve a deeper, hidden, Western corporate agenda: organized white-collar crime. They are paid in kind for services provided to maintain and insure natural resource plunder and the acquisition and control of vast tracts of Congolese territory.

Eve Ensler's privilege and white supremacy here is illuminated by her feminist perspective, her feminist crusade, and it becomes acceptable for Eve Ensler-and Ms., Glamour, PBS, The Washington Post, Newsweek, etc.-to label all Congolese men as sexual predators. This, of course, is the chorus of the Western media to begin with-Africans are sexually licentious, they copulate like monkeys-only it transcends boundaries and becomes an African condition. Isn't that why they [those savages] are all HIV/AIDS positive?

Jeffrey Gentleman took it a step further with a direct quote by a Congolese doctor that describes men in Congo as primates. "There used to be a lot of gorillas in there," he said. "But now they've been replaced by much more savage beasts." Such language would not be tolerated by the New York Times to describe rape elsewhere. Rape as a weapon of war is happening in Afghanistan and Iraq, committed by US soldiers, but the depiction of savagery would never be applied. But here the propaganda system knowingly reduces the issue to sub-human animal behavior by black savages.

There are extensive case studies analyzing and exploring the systematization of sexual violence and the wounds it inflicts in warfare in Eastern Congo. [15] Institutions like Columbia and University of Denver have studied rape and war in eastern Congo for years-funded by private foundations and the euphemistically named United States Institute for Peace.

The United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, UNIFEM and other UN agencies have huge budgets dedicated to "humanitarian" reporting and research. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), alone, has a 2007 budget of $US 686,591,107, "roughly the same level as in 2006," with an additional $40,000,000 infusion announced by MONUC on October 22, 2007. OCHA merely coordinates 126 organizations, including 10 United Nations agencies and 50 international agencies.

The "humanitarian" misery industry is part of a system perpetuating, supporting, and facilitating a permanent state of emergency in Eastern Congo.

People know about sexual atrocities in Congo and they have known about it at the highest levels for years. The New York Times shares culpability in the proliferation of war in Central Africa; the Western media merely generates war propaganda.

WHERE IS ANDERSON COOPER (360)?

It is well known that orders come from military officers. The orders given call for mass rape and sexual violence as a means of terrorizing and destroying communities, with permanent psychological and physical effects on survivors. The chain of command determines what soldiers do and don't do. There are hierarchies, and soldiers include young boys and men conscripted into terror networks. To disobey orders is certain death in these militias, and escape is a deadly proposition. For thousands of men and boys in Central Africa the "least dangerous place to be" is in the military-be it a militia or national army. For thousands of women and girls in Central Africa the "least dangerous place to be" is wedded to a soldier or taken "captive" by him. Becoming a soldier, or "marrying" one, is a necessary and positive choice for many people. [16] The agency of Congolese men and boys and women and girls is therefore rendered invisible and neutralized by such generalizations and stereotypes pronounced by western elites both in and out of the "humanitarian" business sector. Further, by castigating all Congolese men, or all soldiers, the blame and responsibility are shifted away from officers and civil authorities who run these criminal networks, and who give orders to rape and plunder as policy. All of the rape stories in the recent propaganda front characterize rape as wanton sexual chaos, rather than weapons and instruments of warfare and social disintegration.

It is the standard message: African chaos, savagery, sexual licentiousness, and primitive, sub-human brutalization. This is the heart of darkness, after all, a place in the "middle of nowhere, a primeval jungle landscape where it is every man for himself, every woman for any man.

Eve Ensler further demonstrates the arrogance of whiteness and ignorance of events by effectively stating that the United States has said nothing about rape in Congo, because we are allies with Rwanda and Uganda, who suffered genocide and saw the so-called genocidaires flood into Congo, who graciously accepted them. In fact, the U.S. overthrew the government of Rwanda in 1994, and when Rwandan and Ugandan forces shelled refugee camps in Eastern Congo (1996) they followed this with a campaign of extermination where hundreds of thousands of women and children were hunted, raped, and massacred.

This genocide has not been named. Howard French, New York Times bureau chief in Nairobi in the 1990's, tried to name it, and he comes close in his lukewarm treatise on Western plunder-Africa: A Continent for the Taking-but his efforts were too little. French moved on to become bureau chief in China, leaving Africa behind, with no commitment to act on what he learned. Everyone has tried to bury the truth with the skeletons. The recent thrusts by the Clinton Foundation in Rwanda-dumping millions of dollars into "humanitarian" programs-are a perfect example.

The U.S. factions-the Rwanda Patriotic Front and Uganda People's Defense Forces that backed their invasion of Rwanda-committed massive rapes in Rwanda as well. From 1990 to 1994 the Ugandan/RPF invaders in Rwanda raped as policy, and Human Rights Watch covered it with their reports of mass rape attributed, universally and solely, to the Hutu genocidiaries. This is the political economy of rape and genocide.

Eve Ensler and Christine Schuler Deschryver regurgitate the accepted narratives and blame the victims of corporate and military plunder aligned with Anglo-American-Israeli interests. To her credit, Eve Ensler mentions SONY Playstation and cellphones as culprits, and she suggests action should be taken against corporations, but she blames the illegal mineral trade on the genocidal murderers from Rwanda, the Interahamwe (just as all violence in Darfur is blamed on Janjaweed, and all violence in Afghanistan is blamed on Taliban). But she states that "we don't know who" is involved behind or beside these. This cultural reductionism feeds the mainstream media discourses that perpetuate oppressions and consolidate Western power.

Many of the criminals involved were named in the United Nations Panel of Experts reports on illegal extraction of natural resources from Congo. Countless others have been named by numerous independent journalists, including this author, over, and over and over.

John Bredenkamp. Billy Rautenbach. George Forrest. Louis Michel. Paul Kagame. Yoweri Museveni. Salim Saleh. James Kabarebe. Walter Kansteiner. Maurice Tempelman. Philippe de Moerloose. Dan Gertler. Nienne Viscount Davignon. Bill Clinton. Simon Village. Ramnik Kotecha. Jean-Pierre Bemba. Romeo Dallaire.

Nothing is ever done. After the production of the United Nations Panel of Experts reports on the plunder of Congo's natural resources, nothing was done. Criminal syndicates lobbied to have their names cleared and the United Nations bucked under. Emboldened by toothless international legal instruments and spineless international leaders, the corporations and their criminal syndicates stepped up their operations. Plunder, depopulation, rape, sexual slavery-anything goes.

And the media provided its smokescreens: Anderson Cooper "360".

Eve Ensler has no idea what she is talking about and, on a certain level, like all the rest of us, Eve Ensler is another Mazungu whitey who has no business being in Central Africa at all, because she has no idea what has happened, or is happening, or why. Her white skin and feminist crusade act as a badge of credibility and insures her privileged access to Western media corporations that benefit from "chaos" and depopulation. When "peace" is discussed it revolves around Western "charity" and "goodwill," yet more than 100 years of Western involvement in Africa have culminated in permanent slaughter and depopulation across the continent. The raw materials continue to leave.

Christine Schuler Deschryver represents another face of privilege. When times got hard in 1996 she packed her suitcase and left with her two children for Belgium. She flies to New York and is interviewed on Democracy Now! Listeners in the U.S. believe she is a Congolese native, but she is a Belgian expatriate whose family is a mainstay of colonialism and neocolonialism in Congo. And the Congolese women are never allowed to fly to New York or to tell the deeper story of deracination in "the middle of nowhere," in Congo. What is the Deschryver family relationship to Philippe De Moerloose or Louis Michel or nienne Viscount Davignon or the other principal interlocutors in the Belgian money and power syndicates involved behind the scenes in Congo today?

To get a sense of what Glamour does not report-what the New York Times, Ms., Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, Newsweek, The Nation, BBC, National Public Radio and CNN's Anderson Cooper "360" will not tell us-take a look behind the scenes in eastern Congo and juxtapose the unreported realities with the personal stories of trauma and recovery told by Eve Ensler in Glamour magazine. While the mainstream corporate media always reduces these stories to a few simple facts, and a panoply of supposedly unfathomable black-on-black violence, there are always some skeletons to be found lurking in the shadows of white society.

THERE'S GOLD IN THEM (BLOODY) HILLS

The North and South Kivu provinces of the Democratic Republic of Congo remain awash in blood. Over the past decade hundreds of thousands of women have suffered sexual violence in these provinces as a weapon of war meant to terrorize local populations and gain control of natural resources. Sexual violence includes mutilations, rape and other forms of torture.

Rwandan-backed General Laurent Nkunda has occupied eastern DRC for several years, and was involved in atrocities, war crimes and crimes against humanity in Congo during the first (1996-1997) and second (1998-2004) Congo occupations by Uganda and Rwanda.

The United Nations Observers Mission in DRC (MONUC) makes possible the occupation of Congo by General Laurent Nkunda today. Nkunda is backed by the military regime of President Paul Kagame in Rwanda and by the baby-faced Jean-Pierre Bemba, the rebel warlord from DRC's Equateur province whose interests and ties in DRC go back to his dark alliance with the dictator Joseph Mobutu and his Western backers.

The U.S. and European interests backing General Laurent Nkunda run deeper than the blood in the fields and rivers of eastern Congo. The German Embassy in the Democratic Republic of Congo is involved in shady business deals, backing militias and plundering raw materials from Congo, and behind them is U.S. involvement. This has partially occurred through the military control of a mine called Lueshe, located in a village called Lueshe, in North Kivu, some 170 kilometers northwest of Goma. But it also involves coltan, cassiterite, diamonds and gold, and the economic benefits that accrue to those who control land and taxes.

One gold mining firm with vast landholdings in South Kivu province is Canada's Banro Corporation. Banro has control of four major properties, 27 exploration permits and 5730 square kilometers of gold mining concessions. [17] Banro operates only in the Democratic Republic of Congo, in the blood-drenched South Kivu province. Look at the size of their landholdings: . When we talk about International Criminal Tribunals, who are the real war criminals? What about Simon Village, Peter Cowley, Arnold Kondrat, John Clarke, Bernard van Rooyen, Piers Cumberlege and Richard Lachcik-the directors of Banro Corporation? [18] What is the definition of "white collar" crime? How does a company of white executives like Banro from Canada gain control of such vast concessions? Through bloodshed and depopulation with black people pulling the triggers.

What has changed since King Leopold's era?

NIOBIUM & THE POLITICS OF SCARCITY

In North Kivu province the Lueshe mine provides a well-documented example of the kinds of nefarious activities that all Western governments are involved with in Congo, and in Africa more generally, and these activities certainly apply to Banro and other corporations-this is how the system works, and who works it. The Lueshe Niobium mining scandal merely provides an excellent case study where the thief has been caught red-handed with his hands in the illegal minerals pot.

The Lueshe Niobium mine has been under the control of pro-Rwandan forces for the past eight to ten years, first under the Congolese Rally for Democracy (RCD) rebels allied with Rwanda and Uganda and Jean-Pierre Bemba, and now under the "protection" of General Laurent Nkunda. But Lueshe's history is deeply rooted in the controlling interests of the German government and its U.S. and European partners.

The rare earth metal, niobium or "niob" for short, formerly also known as Columbium, is found there, together with tantalum, in the mineral Pyrochlore. Niobium became extremely important within the last twenty years because of its enlarged range of application for aerospace and defense purposes. Niobium is mainly used as an alloying addition in the production of high quality steel used in the aircraft and space industries, as well as in medicine. It is also widely used in basic applications of machinery and construction and in quite large quantities in the production of stainless steel. Niob, like tantalum and columbium-tantalite or "coltan," is also coveted for the emerging and secretive "nanotechnology" sector-also pivotal to state-of-the-art and futuristic aerospace, defense, communications and biotechnology applications.

There are three principal niobium deposits in the world, all controlled by a company named Arraxa: one in Brazil, one in Canada and the Lueshe mine in DRC. The owner of Arraxa is the U.S. based company Metallurg Inc., N.Y. Metallurg Inc. is itself a subsidiary of Metallurg Holdings of Wayne, Pennsylvania, and Metallurg Holdings is one of many companies in the investment portfolio of Safegaurd International Investment Fund of (Philadelphia) Pennsylvania, Frankfurt and Paris. [19]

In 1982 Metallurg signed a mining convention with the Republic of Zaire, enabling them to exclusively extract all Pyrochlore at the Lueshe niobium deposit for the next twenty years. A company named SOMIKIVU (Société minière du Kivu) was established. Metallurg's 100% subsidiary, the German company GfE Nuremberg (Gesellschaft fuer Elektrometallurgie GmbH), became a 70 % shareholder.

By 1990, SOMIKIVU stopped all production, which was never much at all, because it was apparently insured by HERMES AG, backed by the German Government, to prevent production from the Lueshe mine in order to drive up and control the price of niobium mined and processed at the other sites outside of Congo/Zaire. It was also important to prevent any competitive venture from acquiring the mining rights and subsequently from actually operating the Lueshe mine.

According to available documents, employees of the German Embassy have personally benefiting from, and are involved in, the business of GfE/Metallurg. This involvement has included complicity in extortion, assault, murder, war crimes and crimes against humanity. This involvement includes complicity in sexual atrocities committed by the paid agents of white, Western corporations.

In 1999, after years of inactivity and lost incomes to the Congolese state-a very minority partner manipulated into a position of exploitation as usual-the Lueshe niobium mine was expropriated from its owners by Congo's new president Laurent Kabila and turned over to the firm E. Krall Investment Uganda (Edith Krall), under a Congolese subsidiary company E. Krall Metal Congo. Nonetheless, with the military backing of Rwanda, RCD rebels operated the mine from 1999-2005 with the help of German Embassy (Kinshasa) affiliate Karl Heinz Albers, also a close business partner of the Rwandan Patriotic Front Government of Paul Kagame. It is also alleged that mercenaries have been involved in securing the mine.

The new owners of E. Krall Metal Congo reportedly tried to visit their new mine in 2000, amidst some of the most serious and brutal fighting in the entire war. The officials were arrested by RCD military who immediately called Karl Heinz Albers, then a permanent resident in Kigali, Rwanda. According to documents provided by Krall, Albers explained that the RCD should not ask questions but "eliminate" the Krall group-kill them on the spot. The RCD Goma secret service chief apparently refused to execute this order and released the people of the Krall group. This action helped the Krall delegation to escape to Uganda but made the RCD secret service chief in Congo subject to assassination attempts by killers from Kigali. The RCD chief only saved his life by immediate emigration to Uganda, where he was nonetheless also subject to several assassination attempts reportedly ordered by Karl Heinz Albers.

Albers was reportedly selling coltan from the Krall concessions to the German firm H.G. Starck. From August 2000 to October 2001 Somikivu shipped some 669 tons of Pyrochlore concentrate to Rotterdam harbor in Amsterdam. After October 2001 shipments went to A&M Minerals in London, a company on the U.N. Panel of Experts blacklist who are alleged to have purchased illegally some 2,246 tons of Pyrochlore concentrate before 2004.

Dr. Johannes Wontka, German citizen and technical director of SOMIKIVU, informed the members of Krall M鴦l that while Krall may have the legal titles from Kinshasa to operate Lueshe, the SOMIKIVU (Karl Heintz Albers) gang had the power to do so, therefore they should in their own physical interest "disappear". Dr. Wontka reportedly requested a Major of the RCD army to kill the chief of the "Syndicate Global" the labor union leader of the workers in Lueshe who were on strike due to months of non-payment of salaries. Dr. Wontka reportedly requested that the RCD Major shoot the "whites" that would come soon to Lueshe-the technical delegation of Krall M鴦l who were on their way-and promised money for the job. By chance the RCD Major was the brother-in-law of the trade union leader whom he was tasked to shoot and therefore he neither shot him nor the "whites" he was meant to kill, but reported the case to the police.

The general prosecutor of North Kivu eventually confiscated the passport of Dr. Wontka, and Wontka, who tried to flee Congo with his family, was arrested at the border and brought to Goma, DRC. And then the German Embassy in Kinshasa cranked into gear.

THE POLITICAL ECONOMY OF AMBASSADORSHIPS

The German Ambassador to Kinshasa, Mrs. Doretta Loschelder, informed the public by giving press statements that German investors will not invest in Congo projects and that economic support by Germany will not be transferred to Congo if the authorities in the Democratic Republic of Congo are going to treat investors in the way authorities in Goma were treating the SOMIKIVU agent Dr. Wontka. Under this pressure, Dr. Wontka was released from prison and within 30 minutes fled Congo against orders of the police and immigration officials.

Mrs. Johanna K□□, employed at the ministry of foreign affairs of Germany until 2001, and serving at the German embassy in Kigali as Ambassador of Germany in Kigali, was until February 2004 a member of the board of KHA International AG, the holding parent company of the Karl Heinz Albers companies. Konig apparently visited the Lueshe mine with Rwandan military protection. The RCD were also operating the Lueshe mine under forced labor conditions, at one time reportedly involving prisoners from Rwanda accused of genocide by the Kagame regime.

The Krall complaints-well documented-have been brought to officials in Holland, Germany, Switzerland, England and the U.S., all of which have some financial interest or some link in the chain of exploitation. No action has been taken anywhere, and officials of the German Embassy in Kinshasa reportedly continue to benefit from the illegal exploitation of the Lueshe mine. The multinational firm PricewaterhouseCoopers is also invested in the companies exploiting Lueshe and profiting from war, slavery and depopulation in Congo.

At this time, the Karl Heinz Albers may have transferred his "rights" to Lueshe to one Julien Boilloit, a businessman in Kigali who has a big office in Goma and operates behind militias in the Kivus. Julien Boillot's partners reportedly include Mode Makabuza-a Congolese businessman with multiple interests in Goma. The governor of North Kivu has certainly been paid off.

The recent spate of "news" reports and broadcasts on sexual violence in Eastern Congo are part of a coordinated campaign. It is interesting that sexual violence became an issue when it did. Sexual violence is off the charts, but the appearance, slant, framing and timing of reportage suggests is being used to manipulate public sentiment to serve the interests of certain powerful actors at the expense of others. It is certainly a lever used against the Congolese government of President Joseph Kabila, and it may be that it is coordinated in response to Kabila's recent deals with China. After all, it has now been reported by the BBC that the Kabila government is working with the Hutu genocidaires, the FDLR-Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda-the ultimate evildoers. It doesn't matter that the Paul Kagame government's military and corporate machine has dealt with FDLR all along, when it serves their interests, to import terror and export raw materials. This is all very well-documented.

The Western public is unaware of these greater readings, and merely gobble up the news reports as examples of an equitable and humane Western media system that is attuned to tragedies, even if they were late to decry and report them. Western feminists are all over the rape story, but where should the outrage be directed?

Rape was off the agenda at the International Criminal Tribunal on Rwanda (ICTR) until Hillary Clinton showed up in Arusha, Tanzania-the city that became the economic beneficiary of the lucrative ICTR boondoggle-and pledged $600,000 to be paid after the first ICTR rape conviction. And then they had to find someone to pin rape charges on-but the RPF who committed the rapes were never at risk. It was Bill and Hillary's blood money, and another financial incentive used to whitewash the Clinton's role in genocide and covert operations in Central Africa. The Rwandan Patriotic Front led by Paul Kagame committed massive sexual atrocities from 1990 to 1994 in Rwanda, and throughout the RPF campaign in Congo, but these were covered up by Western reporters at the time and later blamed, universally, on the Hutus. [20] The establishment narrative on rape in Rwanda was dictated from the start by Human Rights Watch with their pro-RPF treatise Shattered Lives: Sexual Violence During the Rwanda Genocide, published in 1996. [21]

Who should help the victims of sexual violence in Congo? How about the German multinational corporation Bayer AG-whose subsidiary H.C. Starck was directly involved in the coltan plunder by the RPF. How about GTZ, involved in Congo (Zaire) since 1980 and the expropriation and exclusion of the pygmy's way of life. How about Nokia. Intel. Sony. Barrick Gold Corporation. Anglo-American Corp. Banro. Moto Gold. Belgian Philippe de Moerloose and his Damavia Airlines. Bill and Hillary Clinton and their diamond buddy, Maurice Tempelsman, and De Beers. Tempelsman and DeBeers have plundered Congo for more than fifty years. And how about Royal/Dutch Shell, another backer of the Kagame regime.

Add sexual violence to the list, sure, but Eve Ensler and the Western media propaganda campaign for "an end to sexual violence in Congo" must be placed in its proper context: white supremacy and the shock doctrine of global corporate plunder. In this context rape and depopulation are permanent conditions, the real killers get away with murder, and there is endless, brutal revenge by the victors. The victims get all the blame, and their suffering never ends. ~

Personal Juice Fasting Detoxification Programs address

the impact of accumulated stress and toxins on overall health. On a 7-Day Juice Fast & Detoxification Retreat these affects can be observed in many ways. Symptoms such as bad breath, skin manifestations, headaches, weight gain, general malaise, allergies, fungal infections, gastrointestinal conditions, sciatica, various forms of low back pain, irritability, anxiety, insomnia, and depression can all be indications of a system overloaded by mental and physical toxins. The Power of Organic Green Juice Fasting with supportive detoxification modalities has been clearly shown to turn this around.

Excellent Detoxification programs like those offered at Tree of Life strengthen ones health foundation and assist with the cleansing and revitalization process at progressively deeper levels. As a foundational part of the program, we offer fresh 100% organic green juices (4 per day) as a juice fast, 3 days of organic gourmet vegan live food, Kali Ray TriYoga, meditation, and a deep connection to nature. Spa treatments and medical support.

Greetings,

Everyone who commented on this issue is right that the modern knocking off of noses from statues is mainly a racial effort to de-Africanize the images. I just returned from Kemet last and I pointed out to my group almost everyday on the tour the systematic patterns of criminal defacement by both the early Christians on the one hand, and the modern archaeologists/ museum officials on the other, as the particular pattern of defacement by both groups is very distinct and easy to recognize. The early Christians were very callous in their widespread destruction of images and monuments, but they were not really concerned with simply noses, they were more often focused on disfiguring an *entire* image, particularly on wall reliefs.

Regarding statues in particular, noses were sometimes knocked off by early Christians, but a more widespread criminal act is the *modern* reshaping and re-carving of noses on both statues and wall reliefs. If you take a look at the bust in the Field Museum shown on CNN, you will notice that the nose is not completely knocked off; it is broken and crudely reshaped. Also notice that the modern conspirators systematically stripped the facial paint and left only the facial paint for the eyes and eyebrows to give the visitor the false impression that the rest of the statue was originally left without any paint. When visitors see this statue made of white limestone, they naturally assume that the image did not have the brown pigmentation on the face, which was certainly painted on this bust. The early Christians and Muslims never concerned themselves with selectively stripping facial paint and re-carving noses, this is the criminal work of modern conspirators.

<http://www.cnn.com/video/?/video/bestoftv/2009/08/18/ac.beat.mon.cnn>

Take a look at this example from a 2004 tour that I led in the British Museum. About 2:52 min. into the video, I explain the work of *modern* criminals in their attempt to change the racial identity of one of the relief images. This is a classic example of de-Africanizing an image.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-Vuh-O1pCMo>

The knocking off of noses is the most obvious form of vandalism, but the more widespread and subtle crime is the reshaping of noses and the stripping of facial and body paint on statues and reliefs by archaeologists and modern officials.

Advancing the work,

Manu Ampim

1. The first step in the process of the scientific method is to ask a question. This question should be based on an observation or a problem that you want to solve. For example, "Why do some plants grow faster than others?"

2. The second step is to do background research. This means finding out what you already know about the topic. You can do this by reading books, articles, or looking up information on the internet.

3. The third step is to form a hypothesis. A hypothesis is a statement that you think is true, but you need to test it. For example, "If I give my plant more water, it will grow faster."

4. The fourth step is to test the hypothesis. This means doing an experiment to see if your hypothesis is correct. You can do this by giving your plant different amounts of water and measuring how fast it grows.

5. The fifth step is to analyze the data. This means looking at the results of your experiment and seeing if they support your hypothesis. You can do this by making a graph or a table of the data.

6. The sixth step is to draw a conclusion. This means deciding if your hypothesis was correct or not. If it was, you can use this information to answer your question. If it wasn't, you can try again.

7. The seventh step is to communicate your results. This means sharing what you found with others. You can do this by writing a report or giving a presentation.

8. The eighth step is to repeat the experiment. This means doing the experiment again to see if you get the same results. This helps to make sure your results are reliable.

9. The ninth step is to apply the results. This means using what you learned to solve other problems. For example, if you learned that plants need a lot of water to grow fast, you can use this information to help a friend who is having trouble growing their plants.

10. The tenth step is to evaluate the process. This means thinking about how you did the experiment and seeing if you can do it better next time. You can do this by asking yourself questions like "What did I do well at?" and "What did I do poorly at?"

11. The eleventh step is to share your results. This means telling others what you found and how you did it. You can do this by writing a report or giving a presentation.

12. The twelfth step is to use the results. This means using what you learned to solve other problems. For example, if you learned that plants need a lot of water to grow fast, you can use this information to help a friend who is having trouble growing their plants.

13. The thirteenth step is to evaluate the process. This means thinking about how you did the experiment and seeing if you can do it better next time. You can do this by asking yourself questions like "What did I do well at?" and "What did I do poorly at?"

14. The fourteenth step is to share your results. This means telling others what you found and how you did it. You can do this by writing a report or giving a presentation.

15. The fifteenth step is to use the results. This means using what you learned to solve other problems. For example, if you learned that plants need a lot of water to grow fast, you can use this information to help a friend who is having trouble growing their plants.

16. The sixteenth step is to evaluate the process. This means thinking about how you did the experiment and seeing if you can do it better next time. You can do this by asking yourself questions like "What did I do well at?" and "What did I do poorly at?"

I just learned about this group a couple of days ago. Now that I've read some of the messages, it occurs to me that some of the people here might be interested in my book, "The Pharaoh's Barber", a murder mystery set in the court of Thutmose III. While a couple of Egyptian royal ladies are characters in the novel, the girl I consider the "heroine" is Tabubu, a young slave from the "southern lands" beyond Egypt's border. The clever Tabubu refuses to be a victim of her circumstances and becomes the keeper of an important family secret of the Thutmosids, besides. Here is the URL for book on Amazon.

Two words..."totally agree". Sometimes the truth hurts doesn't it. I wish that someone would say or do something that would shake our black men to "wake up"! I love them and I know they have the potential.....

My Dear Brothers and Sisters

The Article I wrote about Punk Black Males is over a year old and while I still find way I did about the shortage of real men in our race, I have not had a running discussion about it since I first wrote it. Upon a request, I forwarded it, not realizing that someone would want to challenge me on this, a year later. Be that as it may, I shall entertain these challenges for the good of the African race. I write so that you may know the truth and that the truth shall make you free.

If the Creator of the Universe were to waste its time looking at the status of the races and nations on planet earth, and finally got down to Africans and people of African descent, today our black males would be found at the bottom of the totem pole of all races. While the Creator hates excuses coming from those Divine spirits created in the Creators image, patience would allow us to submit the reasons why 70% of the African households are headed by African women. The Creator would let us explain why we are so weak as a race that it places us in a position that in less than a year our entire race of almost one billion could not only be reduced to slavery but be reduced to smoldering ashes or drowned in the bottom of the oceans, by any one of the stronger races on this planet.

I criticized all the different groups in our race in the article. No matter how intelligent; how African Centered; how spiritual; nor how wealthy, I called us all out because when the powerful races feel that in order for them to survive that they would need to make more room in these civilizations by getting rid of or exterminating us, none of the groups would be spared. And since the black males of our race have refused to do something as fundamental as heading the family, what kind of resistance or revolution could we wage if called to arms?

My beloved brothers and sisters, I have not written these or any words to the masses of our race to hurt anyone's feelings. I love my race just as I love myself, but I can not flatter you. Instead, I have sought through my writings to warn you. The Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey, who you know loved you, left these words for me to share with you. We are undergoing a period of silent murder and elimination all over the world, and the longer we take to get together, the quicker will the intention be carried out to its final realization. The Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey continues, Let us therefore rouse ourselves to see ourselves as others see us-our plight, our dilemma, our misery and poverty, and work hard to protect ourselves, and ensure a better way of life.

Our teacher the Honorable Marcus Garvey once prayed, God give us men, the urgency of our Cause demands it. If we are to be saved, and we must; if this great programme for Africa is to be carried out, and by God's help it will be, if our people are to be lifted up out of poverty, ignorance and frustration, then we must have men and women capable and efficient to lead and map out the course this race must take toward our goal. When your brother Shaka Barak said things about Black men, he hoped you would understand the seriousness of the age in which we live that my words illuminated. The Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey said, What we want really are men of prime courage, determined in heart and soul to carry the great Cause to victory. What cause you might ask? The Cause of Africa redeemed, the Cause of the emancipated black man the world over; because today he is a slave; if not a chattel slave, then a mental slave-slave to the white mans prejudices, hate and passion-denied a living wage, denied full employment, denied the education that would fit him for useful, scientific work. Hence the great need for service to emancipate him fully, and greater still is the need to emancipate his country and make him a man among men. My brothers and sisters, it was less than 24hrs after I forwarded this old article I had written about A Call To Arms Part I, Punk Black Males, some people came at me the wrong way and with the wrong understanding. Anyone can be born a male. Thats no accomplishment. I want our young and old males to be strong men and strong women so that we wont continue to be defeated by the men and women of other races. First, we must be honest and recognize all of our weaknesses as Black males and then do all we can to overcome them, as I strive to do for myself and my family everyday.

The Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey said, I wonder if you will think in terms of men and go out and be your own builders and architects. The race waits on you. It will never be greater than you make it and think of it. You haven't laid the foundation of your commercial system, your political system, yet you mimic the white man and say you are unemployed. There is nothing scarcely for him to do. He has already built all his banks, railways, ships; he has already defined the boundaries of his political system. He has no more cities to expand and you just follow him saying you are tired and you haven't laid one brick; you haven't sent one ship a thousand times across the ocean.

My brothers and sister, those of us who love you often become your greatest critics rather than always try to make you feel good through flattery.

In my conclusion, the Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey wrote these words, The Negro is dying out, and he is going to die faster and more rapidly in the next fifty years than he has in the past three hundred years. There is only one thing to save the Negro, and that is an immediate realization of his own responsibilities. Unfortunately we are the most careless and indifferent people in the world! We are shiftless and irresponsible, and that is why we find ourselves the wards of an inherited materialism that has lost its soul and its conscience. It is strange to hear a Negro leader speak in this strain, as the usual course is flattery, but I would not flatter you to save my own life and that of my own family.

Brothers and Sisters in that article I could have taken the opportunity of pointing out several of the groups I mentioned and declared an exception, especially those philosophies that I am aligned with, but I did not. The Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey continued, There is no value in flattery. Flattery of the Negro for another quarter of a century will mean hell and damnation to the race. How can any Negro leader flatter us about progress and the rest of it, when the world is preparing more than ever to bury the entire race? Must I flatter you when England, France, Italy, Belgium, and Spain are all concentrating on robbing every square inch of African territory The land of our fathers? Must I flatter you when the cry is being loudly raised for a white America, Canada, Australia and Europe, and a yellow and brown Asia? Must I flatter you when I find all the other peoples preparing themselves for the struggle to survive, and you still smiling, eating, dancing, drinking and sleeping away your time, as if yesterday were the beginning of the age of pleasure? I would rather be dead than a member of your race without thought of the morrow, for it portends evil to him that thinketh not. Because I cannot flatter you I am here to tell, emphatically, that if we do not seriously reorganize ourselves as a people and face the world with a program of African nationalism our days in civilization are numbered, and it will be only a question of time when the Negro will be as completely and complacently dead as the North American Indian, or the Australian Bushman.

Sisters and Brothers your brother Shaka Barak has presented to you the thoughts of the Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey, to support my assertions that we are in trouble all across the board. The Call To Arms was a call to think. If I have offended anyone by touching your precious ideology or philosophy take this warning to the head and not to the heart. Time will not allow me to go back and forth with you on this topic because of an impending schedule that will be very demanding. In the final analysis, if what I say or type is aligned with the teachings of the Honorable Marcus Mosiah Garvey then as a Garveyite, I am prepared to fight and die for my belief as I remain your humble servant,

A Call To Mind, Stop The Killing, Save The Children

Hoteph Beloved:

Take this as not a reply but a statement of Divine Fact concerning the present psychic of E people in America and thus as is passed down to our children

If you are Black and serious about the type of Spirit our Children is now expressing, because the fact that their Mind has become possessed with nothing but lies and deception about A and the World in general.

So if you Divinely Love your Children, then you would be wise to think about what is the course to take in order to change the life living direction our children have been influenced take in America.

The first thing Black Folks need to arm ourselves with, is with a Mind that motivate Black to Think Divinely and not irrational emotionally.

A call to arm must come two fold to Black People, one to be openly Divinely Spiritual and other must be privately physical, and the two method must compliment the life and safety children and their parents, as well as all serious Black Afrikans Descendants in America and rest of Diaspora America.

Now, in this Time, it is not the Time to flex false positive militarism to the Black World, and especially not to our Children, that is if we desire to save our Children from what lies in them, that will be more devastating to them than what you see them going through today.

This is not the Time for the flashing of corrupted ego with a desire to become influential conspicuous before the Black World, calling openly for a act to Arm, not specifying what of Arms are being required for you to pick up and have in your possession.

If you Divinely Love and is Truly concerned about the way that your children have been influenced to act in their young lives today, then the first order of business is to call for the parents and Black Afrikans to arm ourselves with our Ancient First Way Ancestors Mind method of Thinking.

Doing so, will qualify you Black People to know the value and importance that Reparation our Divine Spirituality is to be, in the process of Liberating our Children and Black people from the very environment that have some Black folks shenanigan around appearing to be militant impatience with the most intelligent process that will save the lives of our children. Such a way of life will put you in a position to reclaim Afrika and will be able to bring about reunification of the Black Afrikan Nation.

Now, you can not continue to function as a Human Being, using the Human Being Mind, and expect to be qualified to look inside the Spiritual Dynamics of your Black Body Life and able to know and understand why the necessity of the need for Black people to learn to Think our way out of the misery the life of our children are experiencing today.

There is as well, a more devastating misery that the parents of those children are experiencing, which is being experienced by all serious minded Black Afrikans.

No, you will not be able to look at the merit of using a Divine Spiritual approach to saving our children, because the requirement is for you to be qualified to Look as well as see, what the merit is, in using the Mind ability to Divinely Think our Way to our Liberation.

Now, in the process of Divinely Thinking and being able to look as well as to see why the call to Black people must be, first a call to arm ourselves with our Ancient Divine First Way Ancestors Mind, the mind they brought to this planet and passed on to you, the so call Black Afrikan, you who have allowed that Divine quality of Mind to be invaded with the Mind of the Human Being, our oppressors today.

With such a flawed use of a mind, it will not allow you Black so call Afrikans to know why it is that you must first reclaim your Ancient First Way Ancestors Mind, arm yourself with such a high powered caliber of a Divine Mind and you will come to be able to See clearly why the rebirth of your Divine Spirituality and the Demand of our Enslaved Ancestors Reparation is essential to us being able to save the Children of the Black Afrikan Nation.

Can You Understand That, Beloved.

Beloved, this much I can share with you in public, but there is another dimension to the steps that must be taken in order to secure our children freedom.

So, it is by us grandstanding on the falsity of our egotistical grandiose militaristic public call to Arm, not specifying the type and quality of Arms to be used in our endeavor to change the direction of the life path that our children is now traveling today, that is what is causing the confusing among our children today.

You see, it is the so call superficial "Punkness" of such a Militaristic Call to Arm, attacking the two most sacred weapons in the mental arsenal of Black Afrikan People, which are our Divine Spirituality and the Sacred Holiness of our Enslaved Ancestors Reparation, because by engaging in such an attack, you attack mother Afrika and the need for the Black Afrikans to become a United Black Nation again.

You See Beloved, When You Do Not Know What Is Divinely True And Real, A Foolish Appeal will only appeal to the foolish amongst us Black Afrikan People.

Do know, that I mean no disrespect to anyone, it is just that I have Divine Respect For The Divine Truth And Reality that is revealed to me and many others in communication with our Ancient Divine First Way Ancestors, which the Black Life is in need of knowing how to make that Divine connection today, that is if we are to seriously Save The Children Of The Black Nation.

Can You Understand That, Beloved?

Be Kind To Your Self, Beloved

Beloved Mighty warrior Shaka.

Divine Loving to you.

See the comments below at the below link in ref to your missive.

Beloved Sun Star Shaka, when it comes to black are Punks hiding behind REPARATION Spirituality, that I am not vibing with unless you are speaking about religious (artificial) spirituality which is different from true Spirituality.

REPARATION: Beloved Shaka, the majority of our people have no Divine relationship with Reparation and true Spirituality. They do not know the Divine meaning of both. The ones who do know the Divine meaning to Reparation and True Spirituality are so few, you can count them on one hand and have some fingers left over, and those are the ones the others full of profane parasite ego rebel/rebuke against. There are those who talk about Reparation and are clueless to what the Divine approach is to getting REPARATION, and when others know the Divine approach to getting REPARATION tell them the Divine approach and they do not act on the Divine approach, yes, the punk Profane parasite ego is causing them to not heed to the Divine approach and listen to the ones who knows the Divine approach, which can not be discussed in this form of communication.

Our True Elders (Generals) no longer have the physical strength to be physically be on the battlefield, they have the mental strength (teaching) that will strengthen the warriors both physically and mentally to do battle. When the students is ready the teacher will appear, but it must be the will of the students to learn.

We have many teachers among us, and only a few Master teachers in this dispensation of time and if we do not know who they are when they are right in front of our faces, we will be doing what we are doing now, no Harambee, (working together for progress), we will be doing what we are doing now for another 400-500 years if this planet is going to still be here. Our having the revelation of the Divine Sacredness of REPARATION And True Spirituality we are doomed, doomed, doomed. We might as well pick out our Tombstone. Better yet, forget the Tombstone. Why should we be remember as a people who was no Universal/Earthly good.

Beloved One, Know that REPARATION and True Spirituality is what will save the children of this people.

Beloved Mighty warrior Shaka, if I miss under/inner stand, help me.

Divine Loving RESPECT

Peace and I agree.

In this city dayton,ohio are some real cowards.

Right now there have been all these drug related killings.

All over this kkkrack.

In this city the syndrome of thuggism has taken over .

Black males need to study the book " Black on Black Violence and study it cover to cover

We can thank so-called black sell-out radio for promoting all this urban thuggery BS.

Black thugs don't even know that they are outdated and deemed obsolete by ole slavemast

I say it's mainly all these black males hiding behind distorted religion and this homothug,homosexual ,downlow BS.

I wonder why do black females and males like to read these BS downlow stories in these

type magazine.

I say get your guns up and let's do the " Drop Squad " .

-----
I disagree and the ancestors disagree with the two above being in the way.The above is wh save our children and our people.

Most of our people do not have a relationship with REPARATION and True Divine Spirit for if we did, we would be back on top of the world, doing our Divine right thing.

Religion is artificial spirituality.

As educated as you seem you personify the lashes on the backs of the slave struggle. Personify the remarks of hate and control we strive to be free from. Extending your finger in judgment makes you a false law of justice still blind folded with the tales that the master tells his people house nigga. Practice your lynch theory practice your speech in the mirror to rehearse your words of words so you can sleep comfortable. Talk in facts the fact that europeans have been the leading HIV carriers in the world since Reagan's Contras. Reports from reporters who are money and ratings not the news. You are built with the strength of the weakest weight. The way to hurt a man is to show him his personal error the way to hurt the level of hate we have encounterd is to take the hand of your own error and lead it to a better self. What of the thieves who stole this country or the terrors we house by down playing our own. They hide behind money and money, power, title, & position. One ethnic is not the punk but the bully who seeks a war with those who have a lack of words because words weren't there science those who practice families with hood manner because they know that if they do right they'll be shuned if they're wrong they'll be shuned. Find a way to rise and teach those you feel are troubled if your teachings do not stick with the students that doesn't close the class it challenges the teacher with other methods or those who wish to learn. Educate yourself to know the community know the community then dare administer your remedy. When things are torn down something is always erected in its place, what are you erecting in your destruction?

How is this guy able to say this???? WHY HASN'T HE DIED FOR BLACK PEOPLE ALREADY??!!! People need to stop judging others unless they put their money where their mouth is! Even then...they shouldn't talk, JUST DO!!! Black males are the strongest on the planet...BY DESIGN!!! Just because many black men are confused and don't know how to lead the "so-called" revolution, doesn't mean they are punks. ESPECIALLY MUSLIMS!!! IF THIS GUY THINKS MUSLIMS AREN'T FIGHTING FOR THEIR'S...HE'S NUTS!!!

A Call To Arms Part I

By Shaka Barak

Dedicated To Del Jones

Punk Black males hiding behind Religion, Spirituality, Hebrewism, Capitalism, Socialism, Communism, Pan Afrikanism, Nationalism, Integration, Miscegenation, Maat, Kemetism, Revolutionism, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism, Jehovahism, Civil Rights, Reparations, Repatriation while our children die. 100,000 murders of our children by our youth and others everyday not one Black man has died trying to defend one Black Childs life except for firemen and policemen and most of the time they dont know that the child in the burning building is Black. Punk Black males have figured out how the white man was raised off his all fours and taught to look up towards the sky by the African race, who are the original men and women. Punk Black men can tell the world that it was the African who built the first civilizations and gave art, science, math and literature to the world. Punk Black males can tell of the Genius of our race in peace and in war under our great leaders of the past. But these same Punk Black males cannot muster the strength to meet the manhood level of his counter parts today unless he is in the service of other races, as their dogs, that are told when to bark and bite and who to bark at and who to bite. Punk Black males say they will kill somebody about messing with their children and children but the funny thing is they havent killed anybody but their child and children are only messed with, but dead and dying if not physically but from the drugs and alcohol they consume.

These cowards, includes our elders who, are manning the ship of the destiny of the African race and are not living up to the standards of manhood produced by the leading and dominant races and nations on this planet. Bill Withers window raising granny and grandpas have abandoned their post and Jr. has run off with the shotgun they used to have at that window. Males who are not organized, not willing and therefore not able to defend our race parade themselves across tabloids, TV screens and you hear their female voices on radio stations, sometime in groups of five, ten, fifteen, twenty at a time, with no clue of what to do and afraid to do it if they knew. They can say Its glorious to die for a cause only in a Last Poets poem. Every race comes in its own time. Black Punk males so-called community, that has the fastest growing number of homosexuals are about to outnumber heterosexual males, and pimp slaps the Punks and then walks away with the communities money in a Black bag that they take to their own community. Black Punk males dont even know how to fight except prize fighters and martial artist but most cant fight, cant use a knife, cant shoot a weapon and this has bred a race of youth who resort to guns, but they cant fight, cause their Punk daddies that are around cant fight, box, use a knife or a gun. Punk Black males joined marches that call for putting down the guns when the whites who surround them and protect their marches all carry guns and wear vest and are ready to use their guns on the marchers if they got the chance. The other races make guns faster than you can ever collect and destroy them, in these phony gun collection drives that pay a gang banger $100 for an old gun that he can then buy three more guns with that same $100. Pretty soon in about 10 years the Punk Black males and so-called leaders will be dead and out of the way. The youth dont respect these leaders that push them into so called educational systems where not only are they not safe, but where most fail and drop out after they get their training to end up in jail. Punk Black males have shown our youth over and over how they are high paid speakers and brokers of our pain, who position themselves to be male whores in the name of civil rights and some revolutionary crap. Punk Black males are afraid of our youth so much that they dont drive in the hood at night and piss on themselves if five youth approach them from the front just walk up from behind them.

In Call To Arms Part II I will give solutions to the killing of our youth.

You rock. That's why Blockbuster's offering you one month of Blockbuster Total Access. Cost.

Hi

For many years people have wondered who were the dignitaries represented by the Olmec Stone heads. Using the Olmec writing I provide the names of the Olmec rulers represented by the stone heads.

Greetings,

Everyone who commented on this issue is right that the modern knocking off of noses from statues is mainly a racial effort to de-Africanize the images. I just returned from Kemet last week and I pointed out to my group almost everyday on the tour the systematic patterns of criminal defacement by both the early Christian on the one hand, and the modern archaeologists/ museum officials on the other, as the particular pattern of defacement by both groups is very distinctive and easy to recognize. The early Christians were very callous in their widespread destruction of images and monuments, but they were not really concerned with simply noses, they were most often focused on disfiguring an *entire* image, particularly on wall reliefs.

Regarding statues in particular, noses were sometimes knocked off by early Christians, but the more widespread criminal act is the *modern* reshaping and recarving of noses on both statues and wall reliefs. If you take a look at the bust in the Field Museum shown on CNN, you will notice that the nose is not completely knocked off; it is broken and crudely reshaped. Also notice that the modern conspirators systematically stripped the facial paint and left only the black paint for the eyes and eyebrows to give the visitor the false impression that the rest of the face was originally left without any paint. When visitors see this statue made of white limestone, they naturally assume that the image did not have the brown pigmentation on the face, which was certainly painted on this bust. The early Christians and Muslims never concerned themselves with selectively stripping facial paint and recarving noses, this is the criminal work of modern conspirators.

<http://www.cnn.com/video/?/video/bestoftv/2009/08/18/ac.beat.mon.cnn>

Take a look at this example from a 2004 tour that I led in the British Museum. About 2:52 min. into the video, I explain the work of *modern* criminals in their attempt to change the racial identity of one of the relief images. This is a classic example of de-Africanizing an image.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-Vuh-O1pCMo>

The knocking off of noses is the most obvious form of vandalism, but the more widespread and subtle crime is the reshaping of noses and the stripping of facial and body paint on statues and reliefs by archaeologists and modern officials.

Greetings, Diop in his book The African Origin of Civilization is referring to the Tomb of Seti I(KV 17)with the Table of Nations scene. Seti I is the father of Ramses II.

Prof. Ampim,

Isn't the tomb of Ramses II one of the thirteen or so (ref. lettter of Champollion the Younger to to his elder brother cited in Diop) having an illustration of the famous "Table of Nations" as the Euros call it?

Greetings Peter, thanks for your feedback. The BM has many examples of altered noses, lips, and other facial features. We edited the guided tour video down from about 5 hours to 90 minutes (three short clips are on YouTube). You went to the KV area at the right time because the Tomb of Ramses III was open in 1994-1995, and it was open recently until earlier this year. This important tomb is now closed again indefinitely.

Thank you, Prof. Ampim, for that illuminating video of your tour of the BM. I visited the BM in late June this year, and wish I had such a tour guide. When I toured the Valley of the Kings (VoK) back in 1995, I did have the good fortune of getting up a guide who was quick to point out the African iconography in the tomb of Ramses III, among many other examples.

YOUR AGE BY CHOCOLATE MATH

Don't tell me your age; you'd probably lie anyway-but the Hershey Man will know!

YOUR AGE BY CHOCOLATE MATH

This is pretty neat.

DON'T CHEAT BY SCROLLING DOWN FIRST!

It takes less than a minute .

Work this out as you read ...

Be sure you don't read the bottom until you've worked it out!

This is not one of those waste of time things, it's fun.

1. First of all, pick the number of times a week that you would like to have chocolate (more than once but less than 10)

2. Multiply this number by 2 (just to be bold)

A large, empty rectangular box with a thin black border, intended for a student to write their answer to the second question.

3. Add 5

4. Multiply it by 50 -- I'll wait while you get the calculator

5. If you have already had your birthday this year add 1759 .
If you haven't, add 1758..

6... Now subtract the four digit year that you were born.

You should have a three digit number

The first digit of this was your original number (i.e., how many times you want to have chocolate each week).

The next two numbers are

YOUR AGE! (Oh YES, it is!!!!!!)

THIS IS THE ONLY YEAR (2009) IT WILL EVER WORK, SO SPREAD IT AROUND WHILE IT LASTS.

Chocolate Calculator.

For many years people have wondered who were the dignitaries represented by the Olmec heads. Using the Olmec writing I provide the names of the Olmec rulers represented by the stone heads.

HIV/AIDS numbers in Africa are notoriously unreliable, and get pumped up for financial and political gain.

For instance, just using a scientific survey type, the HIV/AIDS prevalence in Sierra Leone was revised downwards from 7% to 0.9% back in 2004/2006. Quoting from the Washington Post:

" In West Africa, Sierra Leone, just then emerging from a devastating civil war, was found to have a national prevalence rate of less than 1 percent -- compared with an estimated U.N. rate of 7 percent. "

http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2006/04/05/AR2006040502517\_2.html?sub=new

The Washington Post's article was a follow-up to an article that appeared in the Boston Globe two years earlier:

Estimates on HIV called too high

New data cut rates for many nations

By John Donnelly, Globe Staff | June 20, 2004

http://www.boston.com/news/world/articles/2004/06/20/estimates\_on\_hiv\_called\_too\_high/

They're trying to hang on to their predictions for Southern Africa, although of course magically, the high numbers for Central, East and West Africa have disappeared with the introduction of scientific surveys, as opposed to surveys of women at antenatal clinics only.

The estimates are still too high, because the rigorous standards applied for *diagnosis* in the USA (2 positive ELISA screening tests, and 2 positive Western Blot confirmation tests) are not used in either survey type in Africa (just 1 ELISA). Elisas are very sensitive (which is why they're used first in diagnosis, and to screen the blood supply).

So don't fall off your chair because of hiv/aids prevalence numbers being thrown about.

They most certainly wrong, and they are wrong because they OVERESTIMATE hiv prevalence in Africa.

I saw Californias republican Gov. Mr. Swatzenigger at the funeral of Kennedy on Saturday. He was smiling and grinning like the world was his oyster and as if everything is well and merry in his financially busted state! At least former president Mr. George W Bush was somewhat contrite and unassuming, and keeping a very low out-of-sight profile. Did anyone see Mr. Cheney at the funeral? I would bet that Mr. Dick Cheney did not bother to attend, as he has more dire concerns in trying to maintain his 85 million dollars, which is invested in the private prison for pain and profit industry!

Where was Mr. Dick Cheney? Where was Mr. Dick Cheney?

Hmmm, I don't have Egyptian mummies in my data base, maybe you mean royal mummies.

The only interest I have in mummies is if they are connected to any Egyptian who was supposed to have encountered the Hyksos. I am interested in information written in tombs.

My quest at the present is Hyksos related information. I will remove any group in which Hyksos is not part of their topics. Let me know if you don't discuss Hyksos in your group.

Unless some one is a member of multiple groups, cross posting means nothing to them.

Asking questions in one group is like fishing with a net, you are trying to find answers to questions. Many times no one knows or bothers to reply.

Cross posting, is like fishing with a bigger net .. the odds are greater that some one might have an answer.

* Is this sketch supposed to include the Artemidose inscription?

* Is the actual original no longer in existence, the reason there are no photos of it?

Then there is the Rhind Papyrus, which tells of attacks on Heliopolis and Sile

New data cut rates for many nations

By John Donnelly, Globe Staff | June 20, 2004

http://www.boston.com/news/world/articles/2004/06/20/estimates\_on\_hiv\_called\_too\_high/

They're trying to hang on to their predictions for Southern Africa, although of course magically, the high numbers for Central, East and West Africa have disappeared with the introduction of scientific surveys, as opposed to surveys of women at antenatal clinics only.

The estimates are still too high, because the rigorous standards applied for *diagnosis* in the USA (2 positive ELISA screening tests, and 2 positive Western Blot confirmation tests) are not used in either survey type in Africa (just 1 ELISA). Elisas are very sensitive (which is why they're used first in diagnosis, and to screen the blood supply).

So don't fall off your chair because of hiv/aids prevalence numbers being thrown about.

They most certainly wrong, and they are wrong because they OVERESTIMATE hiv prevalence in Africa.

I don't have time to look at the page again right now but, while many things can be found on the Web-- not everything is there. I have the entire text in a book called "The Speos Artemidos Inscription of Hatshepsut and Related Discussions" by Hans Goedicke. The glyphs there are hand-drawn from an epigraphic copy made by Norman de Garis Davies in 1931. I have no idea what the state of the inscription is currently.

It's not very long--and says this: "Regnal Year 11, second month of Shomu: Heliopolis was entered. First month of Akhet, Day 23: this southern prince into Djaru. Day 25: It was heard tell that Djaru had been entered. Regnal Year 11, first month of Akhet, the birthday of Seth--a roar was emitted by the majesty of this god. The birthday of Isis--the sky poured rain."

Actually, the five "birthdays of the gods" fall just before the first day of the first month of the season of Akhet--and I don't know why the scribe mentioned them as an afterthought. It looks to me like some southern combatant was trying to take the strategic fortress of Djaru/Sile in order to keep the Hyksos from escaping to it or any possible allies from coming in. Djaru was known as "the gateway to Egypt".

Besides giving us 1000 seedlings for the day, Total Kenya Ltd through Eco Challenge have today sent to me Kshs 20,000.00 to help out with logistical arrangements.

We are mobilizing the residents, the children and their parents and we really need to be a float. On behalf of the management at KCDN, I must take on this early opportunity to sincerely thank Total Kenya Ltd and Eco Challenge for this support.

We need airtime, transport and other logistical arrangements.

We had also earlier received Kshs 3,000.00 in support Dr Bishop Mbagaya, and Kshs 2,000.00 from Ms Arinolah for the same course.

This involves all of us, and whosoever feels that he can support us, be free to communicate with the undersigned.

Many thanks as we engage more players to come on board.

Friends,

On 5th September 2009, we will be converging at KCDN offices at 8am to kick start the cleaning exercise on Komarock Canal.

We are pleased to announce that Total Kenya Ltd, through Eco Challenge, will be giving us 1,000 various types of seedling for a start. We will detail all the other forms of support they are giving to us.

City Council of Nairobi has mobilized her staff to join us for the event and they will provide technical support and water for the day. I was called in for an early morning meeting with the PI Department at the City Hall to ensure that the staff at City Hall participate in this exercise the best way they can.

I talked with the Sponsorship Manager at Safaricom and she was optimistic about their participation.

Housing Finance called us this morning and I went in for a meeting with the head of their Public Relations in the evening today. They will get back to me on the level of their support.

Barclays Bank at Haile Selassie called me last week and they are determining their level of involvement.

Together with all Friends of KCDN who have shown willingness to support this initiative, we will converge for the Ministerial address on Environmental Conservation at KCDN at 8am on 5th Sept. The Minister will be invited to address the gathering by the Town Clerk, Mr Phillip Kisia. We will then proceed to the site, and we want to set an example of what can be done when the people join hands with institutions that ought to provide these services.

We want to invite as many Corporates to step forward and claim a piece of the cake. They will then show-case what they can do to help make Nairobi a Cleaner place. In the process, they will be supporting our efforts at KCDN to mobilize the people on the need to take care of our environment.

We will give a daily brief on activities from Monday as the D-Day approaches. In the meantime, we are very thankful to all those Friends of KCDN, including the Minister of Environment and Mineral Resources, for having accepted to be part of this noble initiative.

If you are touched by what we are doing, do not hesitate to contact the undersign to offer the kind of support you can.

Peace and blessings to you all.

Can "aAmw" be the same as "Hyksos"? In the tomb inscription of the nomarch, Khnumhotep, there are the foreign people are styled "aAmw" and are shown wearing their "coats of many colors". Their leader is called "Abisha", a Semitic name.

#1 Is the hieroglyph in the upper left of this image, the word you call "aAmw"?

#2 I was told the word meant foreign rulers. When I asked how they could all be rulers, this particular person changed their translation to foreign ruler and it being a reference to one particular person in the image.

#3 Show which hieroglyph is translated to Abisha?

#4 The party doing the writing were Egyptians (not any outsiders).

NO one has a clue of the multitude of names Egyptians had.

Using the definition of the word Semite to mean one who spoke one of the middle east languages, it would not identify any population but it would be a set that would include All who spoke a middle east language.

There is no such thing as a Semitic name, unless such names are recorded in other lands and are a match.

It was not any foreigners depicted in the image who gave their name.

Any name given was given by Egyptians and what Egyptians decided to call them.

Names given were words that usually had some kind of given meaning.

#5 These were Egyptian (not Semitic) names.

As for the coats of many colors, there are more myths connected to this image.

Myth = information spread with no evidence to verify it. It is the stuff much of Egyptology is made of.

One such story is the image with the different color coats did not exist at the beginning of the 1900s. "The striped clothing" was added after 1900"

The only way to verify such a myth would be to find a photograph of the image before 1900 or have scientist examine the paint.

The point here is not, if the image has been altered or not, but it is the question, are people willing to accept myths only when it fits their agenda?

What is the reason to point out "the coats of many colors"?

Genesis 37:3 Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was the son of his old age: and he made him a coat of many colors.

The reason to inject the information about the many color coats is an attempt to tie these people in with the Israelites in a bible account. These embellishers leave out the part that not all had such coats, but this was exclusive to one specific person, and in fact when his brothers saw Joseph's exclusive coat ... Genesis 37:4 And when his brethren saw that their father loved him more than all his brethren, they hated him, and could not speak peaceably unto him.

#6 If this hieroglyph means foreign ruler, note they were called foreign rulers when they were only 'immigrants'

#7 This translation is supposed to mean foreign ruler? If this image is supposed to be that of the Israelites migrating to Egypt, they were a family of less than 80 people in the land of the Canaanites... less than 20 male adults who ruled the Canaanites?

#8 We are also told this is an image of the Israelites immigrating from Canaan. The theme of the surrounding images are that of herders/farmers. What part of the hieroglyph states these people were migrating from Canaan?

It appears that some 'researchers' neglect to look at all the images around this one particular segment. No stripped coats, but all dealing with animals/livestock... and for some reason the translations of the surrounding hieroglyphs are ignored ?

If the images do not appear here you might need to go to the album

Tyrone yes but, it goes deeper than that. The things told us that "sin" is (fornication, pre-marital sex, stealing, over eating, lusting, enjoying money)etc., has nothing to do with sin at all. We waste most of our lives feeling guilty or not enjoying the things we are told is "sin", therefore not fully enjoying life at all...so the "one" true "sin" is to miss the point of human existence.....which is to embrace life fully! Experiment with the so-called good and bad because until you experience the so-called bad, you won't appreciate the good! The bottom line is "there is no right or wrong, good or bad, there is only what works and what doesn't work! If something works or feels good for you..go for it! If it doesn't work or if it you don't get the feeling from it you seek to experience then let go! Pay attention to how you feel about things. Don't allow people to impose their beliefs on you! It is all about power and control.....Namaste

If this an unidentified group was forced to retreat because they were in a losing battle, they could not retreat by going toward the Egyptians.

Not just the Canaanites, but all the empires/tribes from Syria, Mesopotamia, Saudi Arabia, Hittites... Any army/traders from the north or east of Egypt would have come through the Sinai peninsula (where Ahmoses was said to have driven this unidentified group).

The direction any army retreats to, does NOT identify where they originally came from.

To speculate this unidentified group came from Canaan based on them being driven to Sharuhén, is quite the froggy leap.

Sharuhén would be the gate way to all empires north and east of Egypt

But you're never asking why.

Obviously, reporters never follow the story
'upstream' to use the mining term.

If you were asking why reporters never report on is backed by who, that is one thing.

However, a continuous recounting of atrocities while doing the same - not pointing out who owns the concessions, where the money goes and how Coltan ends up being traded on the London Metals Exchange, is doing the same thing as the average white reporter does.

By not following the money, and only recounting the atrocities, you are soliciting the racist interpretation of the exploitation of the DRC.

People in the condition of the average afr-am are effected (in my opinion) by not who is making and orchestrating the dealing in the congo,,,WHY? they don't care .

Afr-am don't care about the Clinton or the Bilderberg group .

But they do care about child murders and child slavery that's obvious in my opinion and so too get this message in their face my cause a mover/shaker in our community to get up and use his/her clout to do something ,,,,hell anything any tiny jester from our Afr-am community would be much appreciated.

- Barclays Bank Haile Sellassie Avenue Branch
- Safaricom Ltd
- APA Insurance Ltd
- Infill Academy

We will have the active participation of the residents of Komarock, the parents/guardians ; children in the KCDN Child Support Initiative, and many Friends of KCDN.

We will all assemble at KCDN where the Town Clerk will invite the Minister for Environment to address the people. This will be at exactly 8am. We will then move to the site bare knuckle to create some difference.

On this day, we will be talking less and tasking more.

Lets meet there, and thanks for all your support. We will list all the support we shall have received by 4th September.

Besides giving us 1000 seedlings for the day, Total Kenya Ltd through Eco Challenge have today sent to me Kshs 20,000.00 to help out with logistical arrangements.

We are mobilizing the residents, the children and their parents and we really need to be a float. On behalf of the management at KCDN, I must take on this early opportunity to sincerely thank Total Kenya Ltd and Eco Challenge for this support.

We need airtime, transport and other logistical arrangements.

We had also earlier received Kshs 3,000.00 in support Dr Bishop Mbagaya, and Kshs 2,000.00 from Ms Arinolah for the same course.

This involves all of us, and whosoever feels that he can support us, be free to communicate with the undersigned.

Many thanks as we engage more players to come on board.

Friends,

On 5th September 2009, we will be converging at KCDN offices at 8am to kick start the cleaning exercise on Komarock Canal.

We are pleased to announce that Total Kenya Ltd, through Eco Challenge, will be giving us 1,000 various types of seedling for a start. We will detail all the other forms of support they are giving to us.

City Council of Nairobi has mobilized her staff to join us for the event and they will provide technical support and water for the day. I was called in for an early morning meeting with the PI Department at the City Hall to ensure that the staff at City Hall participate in this exercise the best way they can.

I talked with the Sponsorship Manager at Safaricom and she was optimistic about their participation.

Housing Finance called us this morning and I went in for a meeting with the head of their Public Relations in the evening today. They will get back to me on the level of their support.

Barclays Bank at Haile Selassie called me last week and they are determining their level of involvement.

Together with all Friends of KCDN who have shown willingness to support this initiative, we will converge for the Ministerial address on Environmental Conservation at KCDN at 8am on 5th Sept. The Minister will be invited to address the gathering by the Town Clerk, Mr Phillip Kisia. We will then proceed to the site, and we want to set an example of what can be done when the people join hands with institutions that ought to provide these services.

We want to invite as many Corporates to step forward and claim a piece of the cake. They will then show-case what they can do to help make Nairobi a Cleaner place. In the process, they will be supporting our efforts at KCDN to mobilize the people on the need to take care of our environment.

We will give a daily brief on activities from Monday as the D-Day approaches. In the meantime, we are very thankful to all those Friends of KCDN, including the Minister of Environment and Mineral Resources, for having accepted to be part of this noble initiative.

If you are touched by what we are doing, do not hesitate to contact the undersign to offer the kind of support you can.

Peace and blessings to you all.

Heiroglyphic-Translation-0003

In discussions/debates, others often point out my ignorance (what I do not know)

ONLY if my point is based on my assertion of a particular knowledge, in which I am ignorant of, could my ignorance be a relative point.

Recently in a discussion about Egyptology, one pointed out my ignorance of hieroglyphics.

"If I couldn't read hieroglyphs, I certainly would *not* venture to have any opinions as to just what a tomb scene was or was not all about."

///

Up front, I always admit, I am totally ignorant about translations of hieroglyphs. Now the question, does this ignorance have any bearing on the many other assertions I make about Egyptology.

=====

I am totally ignorant about French, Russian, Hieroglyphs or Spanish, but I could say:

The French had a revolution in which heads rolled.

A Russian big shot family was murdered.

A guy sailed from Spain to the Americas ...

I could go into some detail, but the point is, I and millions of other people do have extensive information about events that were recorded in a language they are ignorant of because some one who knew how to translate, rendered the information into our own language.

Every thing I write is based on the translations of those who call themselves archeologist/Egyptologist.

If these 'experts' have accurately translated this information, then it would be as silly for me to learn to read German, in order to read a book that has already been translated into English.

The validity of what I write is based on the validity of the translation of the 'experts' who rendered it into English.

It is those "Egyptologist/experts" information that I examine, by their own words/publications.

When those who communicate in a foreign language are alive and willing to teach their language, learning to translate takes a while.

When those who communicated in another language attempt to hide their meanings or if they are long dead, then learning to translate is a matter of code breaking.

Code breaking consists of (a) finding patterns, (b) finding the same word in different context or if luck prevails (c) finding text of the unknown language with text of a known language (i.e. the Rosette Stone)

What is the value of some one who had great translation abilities, but what they wrote was based on what some other person wrote on the topic.

IF / WHEN their translation abilities have not been applied to their research/publications, then they have no more merit than any of millions of people who sit in front of a computer to copy and paste information they read off of some one else's web sites.

Of course we all have our own interest. Unless that 'expert' shares our interest they will know only parts of the things we discuss.

Unless they have been to all hieroglyphs, and photographed them all, then their translation abilities have no more knowledge of what Egyptians wrote than you do.

When they get their information from some web site or book, when they have not seen the actual hieroglyph, they are nothing more than any one else who puppets what they have read.

=====

My topic being the study of "Hyksos", I make the point there are about a dozen hieroglyphic sources used.

The points I make are such as:

The 'experts' say the word Asiatic is used in these multiple sources, but when I ask them to show me the set of glyphs that form the meaning Asiatic, then ask them if the same set of glyphs are used in all references, they do not reply.

Semitic, Asiatic, Hebrew ... depending who I am communicating with, these kind of words keep on popping up .. "The Egyptians called them A, B, C"

When I ask them to

* Show the line and the number of glyphs from the right the word is found over, I can see exactly what the word looks like in hieroglyphs.

When I am told the Egyptians identified them as Asiatic in different sources, I find what the word looks like, then my question is: where is this word Asiatic in all these different sources?

What I am ignorant, does not establish their own knowledge. If they can read hieroglyphs and the word Asiatic is found in multiple sources, then these experts can show us that word.

Do I assert the Egyptians never had any conflicts with any foreigners? NO

My ignorance is a bottomless pit. Pointing out what I do not know does not establish your own knowledge.

My quest is this:

* If you can point to physical artifacts found that were left in Egypt by foreigners and NOT Egyptians, provide your science that establishes that claim.

* If the Egyptians identified those from the 12th to the 18th dynasty as a population that came from the same place, expert translators, show us the source and the line this information is written on.

* If the Egyptians wrote that foreigners ruled any part of Egypt, expert translators, show us the source and the line this information is written on.

* If the Egyptians identified any of the enemy they fought against as kings, expert translators, show us the source and the line this information is written on.

Being an expert one could show where any existing Egyptian information is written.

Being a story teller that embellishes their version with non existent information, might be a reason to get lock jaw.

=====

I have separated my blog into individual post because I use so many pictures. Any one who will challenge/add to what I have written can start here

<http://hyksos-hoax.blogspot.com/2009/07/hys-chariots-horses.html>

And at the bottom of each page, click on newer post, to continue to the next post.

While I have no ability to read hieroglyphs, I know how translation works which I will discuss in the next post.

The bible has nothing to do with Egyptology, but because the intensive interest in the bible by millions of people for centuries, a translation method has been established so any novice can glean the knowledge of the experts.

In the past, only the priest had the text which was written in a language only they understood. It was unlawful to create a bible in a language of the commoners... after all if the commoners could read it for themselves, the top dogs importance would be decreased.

Greetings all.

Does any one know the Ancient Egyptian sources Diop used to arrive at the morphology of verb forms in his book. What AE book did he use?

AE examples:

AE feh go away

AE feh-es

AE feh-n-ef

AE feh-w

etc, etc.

Perhaps Prof Manu Ampim could help by pointing out the AE sources, as I cannot find the verb forms Diop uses.

Try asking Dr. T. Obenga his long time friend, associate and copresenter on many projects... maybe you can go from there.

Yes, there are several new things which I chose not to mention before the book was complete. I will discuss: (1)the ideas and motivation of the forger himself; (2) the new developments with the other strategically altered statues in rooms 32 and 42 in the Cairo Museum, which have been carefully placed there to support the Rahotep and Nofret forgeries; and (3) I will present a case on how the Mdw Ntr glyphs are very suspect.

| 29723|2009-09-03 13:22:03|Asar Imhotep|Re: Response to Asar 2|

GORE response: Let's stop you there. (1) I notice you do not have a KiNyaRwanda term for 'black', 'burnt' or some such. This weakens the logic of your argument.

ASAR: My argument was never that that was the Kinyarwanda word for black. My statement was that ikami was the name that they called ancient Egypt. You postulated that it may not be an ancient term for which I then gave various pronunciations for KM meaning black, charcoal or burnt in various African languages demonstrating that that pronunciation (i-kami) is a valid pronunciation of the term. Whether the various ethnic groups in Rwanda actually knew the meaning of the term is irrelevant as one does not have to the meaning of a place name to use it. Whats the meaning of Pakistan?

GORE: But comparing the Bambara forms from the Mande family with the Mbochi from Bantuand the presumably Afroasiatic Coptic is poor methodology.

ASAR: By what standard would this be poor methodology when it has been demonstrated time and time again shared vocabulary on many, many occasions by many different scholars between these various languages? Your method of comparison is to ignore obvious cognates because you dont see them in your failed efforts at proto-language comparisons. Regardless if in ones internet response someone hasnt provided you with proto terms, does not disqualify the obvious cognates and you have yet to falsify the data. I will demonstrate in a separate email just why the so-called proto comparisons collapse when it comes to African languages.

GORE: (3) One should first confirm the ancientness of the Bambara terms by comparing them with forms from other Mande languages.

ASAR: I have already written a paper for the list on the African Super Highway of Wisdom which makes that process unnecessary. If priests are travelling across the continent learning from each other, vocabulary terms will be shared. The simple fact that the cognate terms exist in various so-called unrelated languages speaks to its antiquity. One can not successfully argue that some random, rogue Egyptologist went into the villages and taught all of these Africans these terms in the past 50 years or so.

GORE: (3) Why has the vowel `a` in Mbochi become `e` in Mandjakou, Wolof and Mossi? You do not try to furnish an explanation presumably because you do not think it important. This creates a poor impression.

ASAR: This is irrelevant to the discussion. Its basic knowledge that vowels are passive and in the final analysis doesnt tell you much. For instance, I live in Houston, Texas. In Houston you hear the word HERE as in standard English. If I travel 200 miles north to Dallas, in various parts of the city, they say HUR; the same in St. Louis. When I go to Los Angeles, in certain parts of the city, I hear CHER; CHEA in Louisiana. What is the logical explanation of why it is /e/ in Houston, /u/ in Dallas and /h/ picks up a /c/ In California and Louisiana? Regardless of ones explanation of why and how the vowels changed in these various areas of the United States, one has to concede that HERE, HUR, CHER and CHEA are Cognate terms and the meaning and application are the same; just like IKAMA in Mbochi and KEMI in Mandjakou. The same logic applies to HAM in Hebrew and KAUMA in Greek. The comparative methods strongest argument is in the consonants and this you know very well.

GORE: `xem:...burn on the bottom (of food in a pan)`. The `k` and `x` sounds in Wolof are DISTINCTIVE, this means they are NOT pronounced the same way. You can see why I asked you about the sources. Again, poor impression.

ASAR: The X is a guttural sound that is in between an X and K. It is also pronounced as an H at times; especially among non-native speakers. The X is actually a CH sound like in loch. It is this same sound in the ancient Egyptian KHM or CHM which means to be hot, to be dry, to BURN (Budge 547a). The sounds k, kh/ch, and q are often interchangeable in the same language. For instance,

Egyptian [q = hill slope, kh = pool of water, placenta?, k = cup, km = charcoal]

Example 1

qm = to bring to an end, complete (Budge 770a)

khm, Khmi = to bring to an end, to make an end of (Budge 546a)

km = to bring to and end, to finish, to complete, the end, end of a moment (charcoal biliteral) (Budge 787b)

km-t = end of a period, completion (ibid)

kmi = finished products (ibid)

km = total (cup + owl) [this would be a loose connection between complete and total the jury is still out on this one] (ibid)

Koma = to bring to an end, finish, cease Kiswahili, Luvale-Bantu (proto-Bantu *ma)

Example 2

qmau = creator, god of creation (Budge 770b)

qma = to create, to fashion, to make, to beget, to form (Budge 770b)

khm = God of procreation, generative power (Budge 546b) [I equate this to Asar, see Osiris Decoded forth coming]

kmkm = a god (Budge 794b)

Example 3

km = to behave correctly (Budge 794b)

qm = to behave or act in a seemly manner (budge 770a) [seemly means appropriate or fitting]

We know that the /q/ is interchangeable with the /k/ sound in Egyptian because Budge has an entry QM (546a) for reed and he states that a variant spelling uses the burnt piece of charcoal biliteral KM. This may be very valuable in understanding what is meant by KM-t (Egypt) since QMI means Land of the South, lower Egypt (upper Kmt) (Budge 771b). QMI is the same rendering as IKAMI in Kinyarwanda for Egypt. Many more examples can be cited for the interchangeability in the Egyptian language between k/kh/q, but this would take me beyond the scope of this response. Needless to say, the same convention exists in Wolof with X (kh/ch) and K for XEM meaning burn of the bottom of food pan and KEM meaning burnt. Diop also notes that KEM means BLACK in Wolof and we see the same convention (black due to a process of burning which I addressed in the paper on Agglutination) in the Egyptian with KHM/QM = to burn, burnt and KM = black.

This is found all over Africa as symbolized by a burning piece of charcoal to mean charcoal, burn and black simultaneously. This is standard convention. It even exists in the Greek language as the word KAUMA means a burn, burn or heat. KAUMATIZO means to scorch (strong's dictionary). Another rendering is KAIOMAI in Greek meaning to burn. One should also note that KAUMA also means to be dry. KHM in the Egyptian also means to be dry (Budge 457a). KAUMA in the Greek also means firebrand, piece of burning wood (See Symmachus dictionary) just as in the Egyptian the charred piece of wood represents the consonants KM which means BLACK. The Greek KAUMA is where we get the term KUMA for the KUMA wood burning stoves (in other words a hearth). As a side note, the English word CALM ultimately derives from the Greek KAUMA which ultimately derives from Egyptian and other African languages of KAMA, KAUMA, IKAMA, etc. Here the word CALM is a result of the warm HEAT of the day; just as BLACK is the RESULT of FIRE BURNING or SCORTCHING a surface.

So again, you are going to have to explain to me how the Senegalese got the term XEM or KEM to mean burnt or black and it JUST SO HAPPENS to be phonetic and semantic equivalents in the Egyptian AND Greek languages. Either the Egyptians and the Greeks came to visit the Wolof people and introduced them to XEM/KEM, or as their oral tradition and other evidence rightly states they were at one time living in Egypt. The other aspects of your email are easily dealt with what I will present in the next email. You still haven't responded to Nyanza/Nyassa post.

Ancestrally,

Asar Imhotep

| 29724|2009-09-03 18:08:39|Asar Imhotep|Reply to Gore: Why Proto-Forms do not Bring Understanding of African|

Much debate has ensued concerning the viability and relevance of proto word forms in historical comparative linguistics. There are some linguists who base their whole lives work on proto forms. I argue that because of the limitations of the alleged proto word forms, linguists miss opportunities for greater understanding of terms, and their wider applications of African words because they refuse to think like African people in their research. Secondly, the very nature of European languages often distorts the meaning of African terms.

In linguistics a proto language is one that has been reconstructed by examining similarities in existing languages using the comparative method to try to deduce what a common ancestor language, no longer known, would have been like. A limiting factor of the comparative method, which seeks to reconstruct proto languages, regards the question of idealization, how much can we reconstruct and how close do our results come to the actual phonetic reality of the proto-language? No known language is dialect free, yet linguists reconstruct to an apex, a single node at each stage, giving the impression of a uniform system.

To accept a proto term or language as valid, one would have to ignore variation of terms and ignore the fact that different users use the different variants under different circumstances based on socio-historical divisions of the society. For example, a priest class versus the layman. A more specific example in English would be with the word LASER. The average person would say that a LASER is a device that emits light (electromagnetic radiation) which can be seen in a common CD Player or fictionally with the Star Wars lightsaber. A person who belongs to the priest class of computer programmer (like myself), or in the field of physics, knows its real etymology and meaning. The word LASER is an acronym that stands for Light Amplification by Stimulated Emission of Radiation.

If a linguist in the far off future was to trace its phonetic variations back to this time, and they just went off of what was in popular dictionaries, they would only have a limited understanding of the term and its etymology: just a narrow band of light. The acronym better explains exactly what a laser is as LASER doesn't refer to the light necessarily but more so to the process of how this narrow band of light is created (through stimulated emission). When the layperson thinks laser, they think of the light. When a scientist thinks laser, they are thinking of the process which produces the light. So if you were to reconstruct the proto form, whose definition has the priority? And will the comparative method even get you to the acronym?

The second major issue for the comparative method is language contact. Contact-induced changes cannot be shown in family trees because the tree is a picture of only those changes involving diversification from the so-called proto-language. If trees and tree-construction methods are based on evidence which necessarily excludes borrowing, then one has to factor out those loans. This becomes very problematic when dealing with African languages because of the African Super Highway of Wisdom which is thousands upon thousands years old. I have already treated this in a separate paper and will only state here that the African Super Highway of Wisdom involves wisdom seekers going from country to country undergoing initiations and teachings under various ethnic groups whose languages may not be related in any way. Because of this ancient African practice, tons of loan words have entered into the lexicon of various African languages and it is difficult, and I say impossible, to really ascertain from which group the actual word derived from; or if it is necessary that it be shared in all branches of the language family.

In the field of linguistics, some linguists only view a term to be cognate if it can be shown that there are regular correspondences in the initial or secondary consonants of a term. If a term is phonetically the same and has the same meaning, but the sounds do not recur regularly in one or more of the languages, it is not considered to be cognate to some. This would be a strong case for borrowing. For instance the Greek word theos and the French word deus (meaning God) are not considered by most linguists to be cognate because this is the only known instance where the initial th and d correspond. But what these linguists fail to realize is that regular correspondences is not a prerequisite for two terms to be cognate. Cognates are words that have a COMMON etymological origin.

If the Greek word theos is older than the Latin deus, (Italian dio, French dieu, Spanish dio) and they both belong to the Indo-European Language family, why wouldn't it be the case that someone of Greek origin introduced the term to the Latin or Proto-Latin speakers from which there it had its own changes? Theos and Deus is not something one just makes up randomly to mean something as specific as God. In all of the discussions of this classic example I have come across, they never even entertain the idea that people are not isolated groups who have no contact outside their political boundaries; that there is some invisible barrier keeping a Greek speaker from travelling and introducing a concept to some important person in Italy.

The regular correspondence hypothesis is not enough to establish cognancy, because if that were the case the English word THAT and the African Vernacular English (AVE) word DAT would not be cognate. There are only two instances where the English TH will become a D in the initial position in AVE: That and This (dat, dis). One wouldn't say a world like derefore (therefore). Although the TH and D do not correspond regularly, DAT is clearly THAT and are the same word therefore cognate. They both derive from proto-Indo-European **tar*. It's not like African-Americans made-up the word DAT and it just so happen to mean the word THAT in standard American English. DAT and THAT is not a chance correspondence by any stretch of the imagination: the same with the Greek Theos and Latin Deus. With this evidence, I posit that there should be considered two types of tree models: one for languages as a whole and another for individual lexical items that may be the result of borrowing or not. These are just a few of the issues that cloud the comparative method and reconstructing proto forms.

The third biggest challenge and I say the most important, in regards to African languages, is trying to interpret African terms in a European context. This has been a problem since ancient times. Even the Greek Hermetists recognized this dilemma. In the Corpus Hermeticum Book 16, the following is said:

Hermes, my master, in many a conversation, both when alone, and sometimes, too, when Tat was there, has said, that unto those who come across my books, their composition will seem most simple and [most] clear; but, on the contrary, as tis unclear, and has the [inner]

p. 267

meaning of its words concealed, it will be still unclearer, when, afterwards, the Greeks will want to turn our tongue into their own, for this will be a very great distorting and obscuring of [even] what has been [already] written.

2. Turned into our own native tongue, 1 the sermon (logos) keepeth clear the meaning 2 of the words (logoi) [at any rate].

For that its very quality of sound, the [very] power of the Egyptian names, have in themselves the bringing into act of what is said.

As far as, then, thou canst, O King (and thou canst [do] all things) keep [this] our sermon from translation; in order that such mighty mysteries may not come to the Greeks, and the disdainful speech of Greece, with [all] its looseness, and its surface beauty, 3 so to speak, take all the strength out of 4 the solemn and the strong the energetic 5 speech of Names.

The Greeks, O King, have novel words, energetic of argumentation [only]; and thus is the philosophizing of the Greeks the noise of words.

But we do not use words; but we use sounds full-filled with deeds.

The above is part of the section titled The Perfect Sermon of Asclepius (Imhotep) unto the King which is a document now believed to have been constructed during the times of the Roman occupation of Egypt sometime in the first century and it describes the feelings of the ancient Egyptian Sages about having their words and ideas translated into the Greek language. They understood then that the rich concepts of Africa could not be accurately translated into any known European languages and thus we have to always treat them as approximations.

The question is how is the European, speaking a European language, who does not live and engage inside an African reality, able to accurately translate African terms; to do any serious comparative studies to begin with? This is why to this date we still have Europeans translating Netcher as gods instead of causal forces of nature. Because they live outside an African cultural reality, they keep misinterpreting our terminology and then defining rules to govern their misinterpretation of our languages.

In regards to our subject of why we cannot solely rely on the comparison of proto forms in African languages, we will examine a critical text MUNTU by Jaheinz Jahn (1990:152). Jahn demonstrates why we cannot be myopic and attempt to narrow down African key concepts to one meaning and thinking that that one meaning is THE meaning of the term. Any true student of African culture and languages will know that unlike European languages, languages based on equation, African languages are elastic, dynamic and analogous. In speaking of the concept of Nommo to African speech, Jahn goes on to state:

So [Aime] Cesaire uses European words in an African way. For example, in Yoruba the mere word itself does not yet convey a concept or idea. The muntu who utters a word must first designate it by his utterance. It is he who gives it its immediate meaning, while giving a new interpretation to every word he speaks, and so finally giving the specific meaning to the vocable or the phoneme. Not only are the Yoruba highly conscious of the meaning of names, writes Beier, but they also like to interpret each word they use. They believe that every word is really a sentence that has been contracted through a series of elisions into a single word. Thus in Yoruba many words are open to different interpretations, Beier continues, and can therefore be used by different speakers in such a way as to evoke a different set of associations. For the European a word like God conveys a stable concept Dr. Idowu, in a lecture given at the University College, Ibadan, in 1957, gave five interpretations of the Yoruba word for God (Olodumare):

1. Olodu-Omo-Ere. The supreme one, offspring of the boa.
2. Olodu-Ma-Re. The supreme one, who remains constant.
3. Olodu Mo Are. The supreme one, wearing the crown
4. Olodu Kari. The perfect one.
5. Oludumare. The one to whom I must return.

The words wife or mother also convey stable concepts to Europeans. Most Yoruba people, however, using the word iyawo (wife) think of a story that is told in the Ifa oracle and which explains that it means suffering in the town of Iwo. The story says that Orunmila, the deity of the oracle, encountered much suffering in the town of Iwo and that later he was given a wife in recompense. Hence the word iyawo. On the other hand Mr. T.S. Sowande of Abeokuta has ventured another interpretation: iya (mother) is explained as one who draws an image and iyawomi (my wife) as one who draws my picture. Again iya mi (my mother) has been interpreted by Mr. Abolubode of Oshogbo as: From where I branch (the mother and her children likened to a river and its tributaries). Thus in the Yoruba language words cannot become cliché because they are constantly being reinterpreted and charged with new meaning.

The concepts expressed in this passage are part of the African substratum that unites African cultures. This practice is not exclusive to the Yoruba and it rightly explains why you have different spellings of the same word, with slightly, expanded, more modified meanings in the Egyptian language. If we have several definitions of the same word, in the same area, during the same time period, how can you accurately reconstruct a proto-form with a definite meaning? More so, how can one argue from the stand point, as Gore has, that someone is wrong in their interpretation and application of a word because it doesn't exactly match some proto-form created by a European who does not understand the real meaning of the terms.

A European would not put in a dictionary that the word iya mi means from where I branch. They would put the word mother as the entry when that doesn't accurately convey what is being said. Unless you were a practitioner of Ifa, you would not know the sacred Odu (verses) associated with Orunmila and his story of Iwo which is actually a city and not the name for a wife. The word iyawo is not speaking about the woman, but to the suffering that marriage brings: it relates to the hardships of marriage or obtaining a wife.

This is why I argue and will continue to argue, that if you are going to speak on African languages, you have to know the culture, the cosmology and the context associated with the terms under examination; otherwise you will always misinterpret something because one does not have a poetic ear.

African words always convey some deeper understanding of the phenomena the words are associated with. By staying on the surface level we will always miss what is really being said and this is what happens on a consistent basis by those who swear they know more about African languages than African people. So in regards to the various usages of KM all across Africa and trying to narrow it down to one definition, outside of its cultural, spiritual context, one will ALWAYS miss why the Wolof KEM and the Egyptian KHM/KM and the Greek KAUMA and the Mbochi IKAMA and in the Bambara KAMI and in the Dravidian KAMMI and GEM-GYM in the Dogon are all cognate terms. Anyone claiming that they are not the same word and concepts isn't serious and doesn't understand African people. If one doesn't understand that words (especially nouns) in African languages are sentences, then one will not be able to read Egyptian and therefore couldn't accurately reconstruct a proto form of the language to save their life. This is how one missed -anza as a root for lake chasing a "proto" form.

These are not points one can just dismiss and in order to counter these notions, brought about by African people, one would have to find primary documentation from a vast resource pool, created by African people to counter the claims made by the majority of African authors concerning the nature of their languages to date. I await such a feat.

The time has come and we must now move the process.

All arrangements have been put in place for the clean-up exercise along the Komarock Coast on Saturday 5th September. The youth [Kazi Kwa Vijana] were on hand yesterday and today to dig holes in anticipation of the tree planting exercise.

The Ward Manager Komarock Ward was with us yesterday to ensure that all arrangements were in place. The residents are looking forward to working with all Friends of KCDN in this exercise.

Eco Challenge, a Division of Total Kenya Ltd have been very supportive. Besides giving 1000 seedlings of various sizes, they also sent us Kshs 20,000.00 for logistical support. They really helped our process, even though we are still inviting more support from willing partners.

We had also received Kshs 3,000.00 from Bishop Dr Julius Mbagaya, President of the Bishops' Convention in Kenya and Kshs 2,000.00 from Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite, a Friend of KCDN.

We only have today and tomorrow for those Friends who are willing to support. I appreciate those who have been in communication with us about their support. The moment we receive the same, we will communicate.

We value all your support.

We will all converge at the bridge Phase 3a/3b as from 7.30am. Those who will have come to the office at 7am will join the rest on site for the exercise to commence.

This is our country, this is our land, let us make it clean.

Why Africans can't just leave the past behind and move forward (FinalCall.com) - The challenge to African governments to reject corruption and be responsible by the Obama administration is a legitimate call. Nonetheless, the outcome of U.S. foreign policy and past meddling in the continent's affairs begs another challenge that says, He without sin should cast the first stone.

NEWS ANALYSIS

True economic progress in Africa will depend on responsible governments that reject corruption, enforce the rule of law, and deliver results for their people, said Secretary of State Hillary Clinton while in Kenya during a visit to the Motherland that started Aug. 4.

Mrs. Clinton used the anti-corruption and Be Responsible anecdotes in several countries during her 11-day visit to Africa. The tour followed President Barack Obama's historic trip to Ghana in July where he covered the same themes in a continental message. Few will disagree with the noble words of U.S. condemnation of corruption, but in the fuller context of U.S. geopolitical dealings with Africa, analysts can argue the U.S. arguments are also hypocritical.

An example of such hypocrisy shrouded in nobility was the $17 million pledge Mrs. Clinton gave toward the eradication of systematic rape in the war torn Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC). According to a March 2005 Human Rights Watch report, during five years of armed conflict in the DRC, tens of thousands of women and girls were raped and subjected to sexual violence.

The report said victims whose cases Human Rights Watch documented were as young as three years old. In a number of reported cases, men and boys were also raped or sexually assaulted. In addition, the World Health Organization investigated incidents of rape in several DRC provinces and cities and concluded some 40,000 people had been raped, according to the Human Rights Watch report.

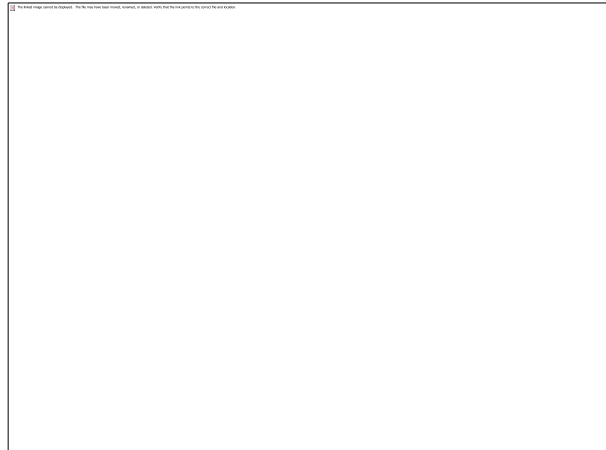

While visiting refugee camps for internally displaced people, including victims of sexual violence in eastern Congo, Mrs. Clinton was emotionally moved by accounts she heard from the victims themselves. The Secretary of State announced the financial aid package plus declared that those who commit rape are in violation of human rights laws.

Hardly anybody would argue against addressing sexual violence in the Congo, but a deeper look into the circumstances of the war that laid the groundwork for such heinous crimes brings you to the imperialistic doorsteps of America.

Since the 1990s the DRC has been involved in what has been described as Africa's World War a horrific conflict for control of Congo resources that began with a coup against former President Sese Seko Mobutu, who ruled Congo as a personal fiefdom and U.S. client state for 32 years, when the country was called Zaire. The name was changed to Democratic Republic of Congo after his ouster.

From the early 1960s, Mr. Mobuto was America's ally and neo-colonial pawn the CIA empowered in the plot to overthrow and assassinate Patrice Lumumba, Congo's first prime minister after colonial rule.

Naturally the U.S. will argue, as both Mr. Obama and Mrs. Clinton have, that those were the times of yore and Africans must move forward. But the question is how can Africa let yesterday go, when justice has not been rendered for the U.S. role in crimes against the continent? Perhaps the U.S. government isn't interested in being held to the rules of transparency and accountability she boldly preaches to the world.

The Obama administration is trying to stay away from that, but there is no way they can stay away from it fully because what they need is Congolese resources, they needed it before and they need it now, said Bahati Jacques, an analyst on the DRC for the African Faith and Justice Network.

The U.S. has gotten a lot of heat with regards to their responsibility in the tyranny of Mr. Mobutu in Congo because they protected him, as they watched him oppress the Congolese people, Mr. Jacques noted.

But as it became apparent Mr. Mobutu's rule was slipping, the U.S. aided in the process of his elimination by backing Rwanda and Uganda with finances and arms and using rebel forces led by Laurent Kabila, an anti-Mobutu leader since the 1960s.

Both Rwanda and Uganda were motivated to eliminate Mr. Mobutu because of his support for rebel groups who often attacked across border lines from bases inside Zaire. But furthermore towards the end, Mr. Mobutu simply became bad for business production of staple minerals like diamonds were down by half, cobalt production plunged from 18,000 tons to 3,000 tons, and copper fell from 450,000 tons to 30,000 tons in 1994, according to The Fate of Africa, a book on the history of 50 years of African independence by Martin Meredith.

The events of Mr. Mobutu's fall sparked the current bedlam that killed a reported six million Congolese and drew in armies from Rwanda, Uganda, Zimbabwe, Burundi and Angola. The U.S. pursuit of Mr. Mobutu's removal helped fuel the mass killings, sexual violence, displacement and resource plundering. However, as Sec. Clinton shed a tear for rape victims and called the guilty to justice, the U.S. government must admit complicity in the conflict and add a full reparations deal to the $17 million in aid.

While U.S. soft diplomacy is welcomed by many quarters of the world, the U.S. must also be truthful about its own record and criminal past on the continent and fostering wars, corruption, instability and human rights violations.

Yes, there are several new things which I chose not to mention before the book was complete. I will discuss: (1) the ideas and motivation of the forger himself; (2) the new developments with the other strategically altered statues in rooms 32 and 42 in the Cairo Museum, which have been carefully placed there to support the Rahotep and Nofret forgeries; and (3) I will present a case on how the Mdw Ntr glyphs are very suspect.

Academic stumbles upon previously unseen section of Codex Sinaiticus dating back to 4th century

By Jerome Taylor, Religious Affairs Correspondent

Wednesday, 2 September 2009

A page from the earliest surviving Bible, of which another fragment has been discovered in Egypt

-  enlarge

A British-based academic has uncovered a fragment of the world's oldest Bible hiding underneath the binding of an 18th-century book.

Nikolas Sarris spotted a previously unseen section of the Codex Sinaiticus, which dates from about AD350, as he was trawling through photographs of manuscripts in the library of St Catherine's Monastery in Egypt.

The Codex, handwritten in Greek on animal skin, is the earliest known version of the Bible. Leaves from the priceless tome are divided between four institutions, including St Catherine's Monastery and the British Library, which has held the largest section of the ancient Bible since the Soviet Union sold its collection to Britain in 1933.

Academics from Britain, America, Egypt and Russia collaborated to put the entire Codex online this year but new fragments of the book are occasionally rediscovered.

Mr Sarris, 30, chanced upon the fragment as he inspected photographs of a series of book bindings that had been compiled by two monks at the monastery during the 18th century.

Over the centuries, antique parchment was often re-used by St Catherine's monks in book bindings because of its strength and the relative difficulty of finding fresh parchment in such a remote corner of the world.

A Greek student conservator who is studying for his PhD in Britain, Mr Sarris had been involved in the British Library's project to digitise the Codex and quickly recognised the distinct Greek lettering when he saw it poking through a section of the book binding. Speaking from the Greek island of Patmos yesterday, Mr Sarris said: "It was a really exciting moment. Although it is not my area of expertise, I had helped with the online project so the Codex had been heavily imprinted in my memory. I began checking the height of the letters and the columns and quickly realised we were looking at an unseen part of the Codex."

Mr Sarris later emailed Father Justin, the monastery's librarian, to suggest he take a closer look at the book binding. "Even if there is a one-in-a-million possibility that it could be a Sinaiticus fragment that has escaped our attention, I thought it would be best to say it rather than dismiss it."

Only a quarter of the fragment is visible through the book binding but after closer inspection, Father Justin was able to confirm that a previously unseen section of the Codex had indeed been found. The fragment is believed to be the beginning of Joshua, Chapter 1, Verse 10, in which Joshua admonishes the children of Israel as they enter the promised land.

Speaking to The Art Newspaper, Father Justin said the monastery would use scanners to look more closely at how much of the fragment existed under the newer book binding. "Modern technology should allow us to examine the binding in a non-invasive manner," he said.

Mr Sarris said his find was particularly significant because there were at least 18 other book bindings in the monastery's library that were compiled by the same two monks that had re-used the Codex. "We don't know whether we will find more of the Codex in those books but it would definitely be worth looking," he said.

The library in St Catherine's does not have the laboratory conditions needed to carefully peel away the binding without damaging the parchment underneath but the library is undergoing renovations that might lead to the construction of a lab with the correct equipment to do so.

The Bible: A brief history

Although earlier fragments of the Bible have survived the passage of time, the Codex Sinaiticus is so significant because it is by far the most complete. The full text that has been discovered so far contains virtually all of the New Testament and about half of the Old Testament.

But whenever an ancient version of the holy book is found, it often raises questions about the evolution of the Bible and how close what we read today is to the original words of Christ and his early followers.

The Old Testament was written largely in Hebrew (with the odd Aramaic exception) but it is by no means a homogenous entity. Protestant and more recent Catholic versions of the Bible tend to use the Masoretic Text, a variation of the Hebrew Old Testament that was copied, edited and distributed by Jewish Masorete scholars between the 7th and 11th centuries. Earlier Catholic translations and the Greek and Russian Orthodox churches use the Septuagint, an ancient Greek version of the Hebrew text that was translated between the 3rd and 1st centuries BC.

In studying the early history of the New Testament, historians have about 5,650 handwritten copies in Greek on which they can draw, many of which are distinctly different. As Christianity consolidated its power through the first millennia, the four gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John came to form the key elements of the New Testament.

But other apocryphal writings were discarded along the way. The Shepherd of Hermas, for instance, is a Christian literary work of the 2nd century which appears in the Codex Sinaiticus and was considered part of the Bible by some early Christians but was later expunged. The most well-known apocryphal gospel is that of Thomas, a collection of 114 numbered sayings attributed to Jesus that was discovered in 1945. As it never refers to Jesus as "Christ", "Lord" or the "Son of Man" (and lacks any mention of the miracles attributed to Jesus in the other gospels) it is perhaps not surprising that it never made it into later versions of the Bible.

You know, Barack Obama has been accused of 'palling around with terrorists', but Hillary Clinton has been palling around with assassins - Maurice Tempelsman, who was personally involved in the murder of the Congo's first elected head of state, Patrice Lumumba.

The CIA, Maurice Tempelsman, African Blood Diamonds, Gilead, Barrick and Mobutu, etc.)

<http://aconstantineblacklist.blogspot.com/2007/11/cia-maurice-tempelsman-african-blood.html>

It is also interesting to remember why Patrice Lumumba was murdered. He was murdered, because he was seeking assistance in the development of his country, and the West was unwilling to help him do that. Therefore, he turned East. As a result, the CIA and the Belgians murdered him, and replaced him with Mobutu sese Seko, a dictator and kleptocrat from the army.

Not unlike father Bertrand Aristide in Haiti, who was escorted out of his homeland and flown to Africa, by American guards, and replaced by the head of the death squads and the country's leading drug trafficker.

Madeleine Albright described Aristide as 'a disappointment'. Obviously, to her, the head of the death squads and the country's leading drug trafficker did not disappoint. This is how she sees the future of the Haitian people.

It is hard to take advice on corruption from people like that, and not feel deeply cynical, even revolted.

And yet, Clinton, Holbrook and Albright all made it into Barack Obama's government.

And it is rank hypocrisy. Rape as a weapon of terror in the DRC is one of the means dictators and exploiters use to move people from one end of the country to another, so they can exploit local resources without opposition. That's all that is going on there.

So to stop rape in the DRC, we don't need a $17 million pledge, we need to have the soldiers returned to their barracks, and hold the people who gave the orders accountable, as well as the people who directly benefit from those activities.

Let me put it straight. Rape in the Congo is deployed specifically to steal the resources of the people of the DRC. Therefore, the remedy is to ensure that all the resources of the people of the DRC go to the people of the DRC. This is the only permanent solution. All natural resources must be sold only through national governments, and they must be paid market price for their materials.

Then the 'wars' would stop, the likes of Laurent Nkunda, Paul Kagame, and all the individuals who benefit from exploiting Africa would disappear, and most importantly, Africa would have the money to invest in other economic sectors - agriculture, manufacturing and infrastructure. There would be enough money for universal education and healthcare.

So that is the solution. Of course, Hillary Clinton is never going to go after her corporate backers, such as Maurice Tempelsman. Much easier to 'condemn atrocities', as if those happened in a vacuum, and not ask questions.

Behind the Numbers: Untold Suffering in the Congo

Adastra had close ties with Lazare Kaplan International Inc., the largest diamond brokerage firm in the U.S., whose president, Maurice Tempelsman, has been an advisor on African Affairs to the U.S. Government and has been the U.S. Honorary Consul General of the Congo since 1977 (8).

Maurice Tempelsman accompanied Bill Clinton during his African tour in 1998, and he sails with the Clintons off Martha's Vineyard. He serves on the International Advisory Council of the American Stock Exchange, and is a director of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute, a "scientific" front for his offshore diamond mining-raking the seabed into oblivion.

U.S. diamond magnate Maurice Tempelsman has profited from Katanga concessions since the Kennedy era. Lawrence Devlin, the old CIA station chief of Lubumbashi under Eisenhower, maintained Tempelsman's criminal rackets with direct ties to Zaire's former President Mobutu, and was subsequently employed by Tempelsman (16).

The World Court recently made a start by convicting Uganda and fining the government, but Rwanda, Burundi, Zambia, and Zimbabwe remain unaccountable for their direct pirating, as are the Western firms that purchased the minerals, and Western individuals supporting them. (The Kimberly Process, established with the support of academic and intelligence experts at Harvard University, is a perfect example of the gatekeepers policing their own gates: the huge, entrenched, but secretive interests like the Oppenheimer/DeBeers and Maurice Tempelsman owned companies are legitimized as dealers of "clean" diamonds; while the other, far less connected competitors and challengers of the status quo, including Congolese children sneaking into mines and being shot for "stealing" the diamonds off their own starving families' former lands, are demonized as dealers of "blood" diamonds.)

And it is rank hypocrisy. Rape as a weapon of terror in the DRC is one of the means dictators and exploiters use to move people from one end of the country to another, so they can exploit local resources without opposition. That's all that is going on there.

So to stop rape in the DRC, we don't need a $17 million pledge, we need to have the soldiers returned to their barracks, and hold the people who gave the orders accountable, as well as the people who directly benefit from those activities.

Let me put it straight. Rape in the Congo is deployed specifically to steal the resources of the people of the DRC. Therefore, the remedy is to ensure that all the resources of the people of the DRC go to the people of the DRC. This is the only permanent solution. All natural resources must be sold only through national governments, and they must be paid market price for their materials.

Then the 'wars' would stop, the likes of Laurent Nkunda, Paul Kagame, and all the individuals who benefit from exploiting Africa would disappear, and most importantly, Africa would have the money to invest in other economic sectors - agriculture, manufacturing and infrastructure. There would be enough money for universal education and healthcare.

So that is the solution. Of course, Hillary Clinton is never going to go after her corporate backers, such as Maurice Tempelsman. Much easier to 'condemn atrocities', as if those happened in a vacuum, and not ask questions.

Behind the Numbers: Untold Suffering in the Congo

Written by Keith Harmon Snow and David Barouski

Adastra had close ties with Lazare Kaplan International Inc., the largest diamond brokerage firm in the U.S., whose president, Maurice Tempelsman, has been an advisor on African Affairs to the U.S. Government and has been the U.S. Honorary Consul General of the Congo since 1977 (8).

Maurice Tempelsman accompanied Bill Clinton during his African tour in 1998, and he sails with the Clintons off Martha's Vineyard. He serves on the International Advisory Council of the American Stock Exchange, and is a director of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute, a "scientific" front for his offshore diamond mining-raking the seabed into oblivion.

U.S. diamond magnate Maurice Tempelsman has profited from Katanga concessions since the Kennedy era. Lawrence Devlin, the old CIA station chief of Lubumbashi under Eisenhower, maintained Tempelsman's criminal rackets with direct ties to Zaire's former President Mobutu, and was subsequently employed by Tempelsman (16).

...

The World Court recently made a start by convicting Uganda and fining the government, but Rwanda, Burundi, Zambia, and Zimbabwe remain unaccountable for their direct pirating, as are the Western firms that purchased the minerals, and Western individuals supporting them. (The Kimberly Process, established with the support of academic and intelligence experts at Harvard University, is a perfect example of the gatekeepers policing their own gates: the huge, entrenched, but secretive interests like the Oppenheimer/ DeBeers and Maurice Tempelsman owned companies are legitimized as dealers of "clean" diamonds; while the other, far less connected competitors and challengers of the status quo, including Congolese children sneaking into mines and being shot for "stealing" the diamonds off their own starving families' former lands, are demonized as dealers of "blood" diamonds.)

Anvil Expects to Get \$200 Million for Congo Mine by End of Year

Sept. 4 (Bloomberg) -- Anvil Mining Ltd. said it expects to complete a $200 million financing package for the construction of the Kinsevere copper mine in the Democratic Republic of Congo by the end of the year.

Hillary Clinton pals around with the murderer of Patrice Lumumba, and this is the woman who is lecturing Africa on corruption?

I don't think so.

STANDARDS FOR EGYPTOLOGY RESEARCH

How many thousands of researchers will repeat the same research over and over and over.

Wasting their resources to find that which is already found and available.?

In order to sort out endless mis-understandings / confusion:

An International Egyptology Standard

would expedite the needs for all Egyptology researchers to find existing information and to publish their own new information so it can be shared with the world.

In order for people using different standards to work with other standards, they must use conversion.

In the field of Egyptology there are so many different standards in different phases, it is chaos.

Cubits, Feet, Meters

Celsius, Fahrenheit, Kelvin

Acres, Hectares

The reason why carpenters can go into a house built years ago and find, fix or add new structures is the standards created.

The reason you can go to the store and get plumbing parts to replace your own, is because of parts being made with standard measurements.

When there are optional elements instead of a standard, the flow of information is hampered.

I would suggest a university in Egypt for the hub of An International Egyptology Standard organization.

Working with other universities around the world, to create an international standard that Egyptologist around the world would base their research on.

- a) Multiple spellings of the same name
- b) Different spellings for the same person
- c) Different Egyptians with the same names

a) When there are multiple spellings, the standard organization would pick which is the standard

b) When there are different spellings for the same person, the organization would pick the standard.

car

, automobile, motor vehicle

standard

, alternate, alternat

By the creation of an Egyptologist spell checker, any one could use their own word processor and dump their file in the program.

When the word processor encountered an alternate spelling, it would be replaces with the standard.

The man drove his automobile to the next down would become

The man drove his car to the next down.

There could be a standard symbol { what ever} to note the word was replaced with the standard.

c) When there were more than one Egyptian with the same spelling { Ahmose King/Military man), an alternate name would be assigned as the standard to one of them.

When the spell checker encountered a name that could be two different people, it would pause for the correction

Ahmose the King

Ahmose the military commander.

Just like a regular spell checker you would click on the correct choice.

PLACES WITH DIFFERENT SPELLINGS OR DIFFERENT NAMES

Not only are the same place given different names or different spellings, but there are also different places with the same names.

The spell checker would perform the same task, replacing alternate spellings with the standard and pausing to allow the author to chose the correct place when two places have the same names.

With this Egyptologist spell checker, it could also add other information to the places.

Information that would take hours in a large text to enter, would be done with the spell checker.

When ever the spell checker encountered the standard or alternate spelling of a place, it would create roll over text giving the global position of that place.

[ Roll over text = text that appears when you place the mouse over a word ]

STANDARD MAP

Any one who has ever created maps, knows if you try to draw all the detail of lots of places, the text gets so small, it can not be read.

The map I suggest begins with an outline of Egypt with the major locations on it. With pixels representing a particular global position.

When the spell checker created the standard for a place on the map, that place would become a link.

If that link was clicked on, the map would appear with that place in Egypt would appear.

When future publishers created books ... when professors taught Egyptology, the standard spellings would be taught.

STANDARD GLYPHS

There are people downloading font software and creating fonts for glyphs daily. By the creation of standard glyphs, made public domain, by all researchers using the same glyph fonts, their hard copies could use finger print technology to be read and the typed text could create a universal ASCII code that could be shared in a common data base.

To get from hieroglyphics to translations, the standard would be created first by transcribing existing hieroglyphics to a computer file.

Once any hieroglyphic had been transcribed, future researchers would not have to view poorly photographed images in an attempt to even figure out which glyphs were on the actual source.

I recently asked about one hieroglyphic source that people are talking about all over the internet. When I finally found some who knew where the source was, they said you could no longer make out the writing.

It appears that most 'Egyptologist' go to tombs or such locations and pick a small area of interest. Before they vanish, it is essential for every remaining hieroglyphic source to be photographed in high definition, or it will be lost forever.

=====

The Egyptologist standard dictionary I suggest would

- * Replace all alternate persons names with the standard

- * Give the option of which person it was when more than one person had the same name.

- * Replace alternate place names with the standard, give the location of that place in a roll over text.

All of this (and more) could be done after any author finished their work, by simply pasting their text into the dictionary program.

Below are two working examples. By moving the cursor over the purple/yellow icon, you can see the text.

Hypothetical text entry would be pasted in the dictionary with out the references and come out with the standard words and references.

The Crew Commander  Ahmose son of Abana, the justified; he says. I speak to you, all people.

King Tuts' tomb is in  The Valley of the Kings.

It is the same icon but the bottom displays text and can take you to a map.

We Need UNITY as ONE PEOPLE regardless of Our Racial, Religious and Economic Backgrounds in Order for REPARATIONS to be successful No Matter how much work th into it and no matter how justified that it would be.

We Need TODECLARE OURSELVES AN INDIGENOUS NATION, Collectively Sp Independently of Any One Group or Organizational Affiliationsbased on Race and/or Reli such as The NAACP, The Nation of Islam, The SCLC, The Moorish Science Temples of America, etc. etc. etc.!

The same goes for the politically inclined BlackPeoples in the Democratic, Republican, Libertarian and Independent Parties.

The N'COBRA and CAAR-RULAProjectsare the Most Viable and Sincere movements th Iknow of that emphasizes this most important aspect of reparations. That we do this for ou as Human Beings here in thisCountry and NOT because of Some Religious Beliefs such :
Christianity, Islamor Buddhism or just based on some one Group's organizational teaching
These White Caucasians here could be Orientals, Arabs or Mexicans for all I care The Fac
The Matter is that They Violated Our Human Rights

by De-Humanization, De-Socialization and Then The UnjustCriminalization of Black/Bro

Dark-Skinned Human Beings here in the Western Hemisphere particularly the USA.

It seems that we have let so many ideologies and divisions separate us so much by causing doubts and confusions that many peoples appear to forget that REPARATIONS is not about money, cars, personal power, positions, titles or advancing some political or religious group's ambitions or recognition among black peoples and the American public. Reparations is about REPAIRING ourselves Spiritually, Psychologically and Physically which by having the Money/Finances (which is now a Basic Necessity in this Country and The World at Large) to use for Our Own Afrocentric/ Afroasiatic Education, Health Care and Industries.

The basis of declaring ourselves a Indigenous Nation has been set out by both the PG-RNA and The Washita Nation of Muurs. This is a real basis such as anthropology, archaeology, ethnology, genealogy, biology and the human sciences.!

Not some religious, political, capitalist, socialist, purely racialists points of view. These are not evidences to be accepted for such a matter as Reparations and Nationhood which really deals more so with The Destruction of A Whole Group Of Peoples Native Ways of Life in BOTH the Spiritualities, The Physics and The Sciences of Such.!

We as Black Americans have done more to hold back reparations and legal recognition of ourselves by White Americans, Hispanic Americans and The Rest of the World by our own " trek " in the World of The Human Wilderness it seems. We also have to want to let go of the habits and false educations that we cherish so much that were recieved from the chattel slavery, eurocentric teachings, programmings and conditionings. Many of us have taken these false beliefs, dangerous habits and extreme ignorances as a natural development especially where our acceptance by white peoples and our work for their companies are seen as necessary for the survival of ourselves and families.!

It is a dangerous, suicidal, self-perpetuating way of maintaining White American Dominance over the overall and everyday lives of the millions of Black Americans here and has at its base The Voluntary Assent of Black Peoples for Dependency On White Americans Just as White Americans have planned all along.!!!

It seems that Black American Leadership and Black Society are going along with the plan full-speed even now but the recent Financial Crisis Might Be Enough To Break such a insane state of Egoism, Self-Righteousness and Functional Insanity.!

The only reason that White Americans are up in Arms over Health Care Reform is that they know that if Black Peoples had our OWN Money, Cultural Education and Healthcare we would not need them anymore and would excel past them in the ways of life. Either that or they would have to change from their barbaric, savage, white supremacy ways in a hurry in order to keep up and adjust to the new reality or the real reality I might say.

As there are many, many elements associated with the issue let me just say this. For those who are afraid, scared and doubtful the Independency of Black Americans by having Reparations and Land would NOT lead to a separation of the races or a race war no worse than what we already have going on now and you can thank white folks prejudices and discriminations for that.!

It would simply make us the dominant and governing force in areas and territories that we are already a majority in and have a traditional connection and background within which to operate with each other as well as the other groups in this country.

What it would lead to is that Black Americans would have our own Towns, Villages, Municipalities, Counties, Cities and Whole States within which to form Organized Societies

Among Ourselves so that we can make out of ourselves the very best peoples that we possibly can or that is humanly possible.!

That Is All.

Please read Professor Marcus Rediker's essay "Inside Auburn Prison" at counterpunch. org
Honorable Elijah Muhammad (may peace be upon Him) correctly identified America's prison concentration camps. Even though the Reparations Movement has been diligently working the United Nations for more than fifteen years to establish Human Rights and secure Reparations for all 250 million slave descendants in the western hemisphere, no American college now has a course on this Movement. The elites who run these institutions, including my alma mater Harvard College, have no interest whatsoever in awakening students to the realities of ethnic and forced assimilation which have been brutally imposed by the U.S. government on Afrodescendants for centuries. The vast majority of students remain unaware of the fact that the USA blatantly violates U.N. Covenants and the fact that Reparations means far more than financial restitution for 310 years of chattel slavery and another 144 years of brutal oppression. Reparations also means Restoration of Afrodescendants to our original language, original religion, original culture and the power to govern ourselves in our own Nation on some part of Earth that we can call our own. Is Professor Marcus Rediker interested in opening the door at the University Of Pittsburgh so that one of our scholars can deliver a lecture on Reparations?

Attachments :

How many thousands of researchers will repeat the same research over and over and over.

Wasting their resources to find that which is already found and available.?

In order to sort out endless mis-understandings / confusion:

An International Egyptology Standard

would expedite the needs for all Egyptology researchers to find existing information and to publish their own new information so it can be shared with the world.

In order for people using different standards to work with other standards, they must use conversion.

In the field of Egyptology there are so many different standards in different phases, it is chaos.

Cubits, Feet, Meters

Celsius, Fahrenheit, Kelvin

Acres, Hectares

The reason why carpenters can go into a house built years ago and find, fix or add new structures is the standards created.

The reason you can go to the store and get plumbing parts to replace your own, is because of parts being made with standard measurements.

When there are optional elements instead of a standard, the flow of information is hampered.

I would suggest a university in Egypt for the hub of An International Egyptology Standard organization.

Working with other universities around the world, to create an international standard that Egyptologist around the world would base their research on.

- a) Multiple spellings of the same name
- b) Different spellings for the same person
- c) Different Egyptians with the same names

a) When there are multiple spellings, the standard organization would pick which is the standard

b) When there are different spellings for the same person, the organization would pick the standard.

=====

car

, automobile, motor vehicle

standard

, alternate, alternat

By the creation of an Egyptologist spell checker, any one could use their own word processor and dump their file in the program.

When the word processor encountered an alternate spelling, it would be replaced with the standard.

The man drove his automobile to the next down would become

The man drove his car to the next down.

There could be a standard symbol { what ever } to note the word was replaced with the standard.

c) When there were more than one Egyptian with the same spelling { Ahmose King/Military man), an alternate name would be assigned as the standard to one of them.

When the spell checker encountered a name that could be two different people, it would pause for the correction

Ahmose the King

Ahmose the military commander.

Just like a regular spell checker you would click on the correct choice.

PLACES WITH DIFFERENT SPELLINGS OR DIFFERENT NAMES

Not only are the same place given different names or different spellings, but there are also different places with the same names.

The spell checker would perform the same task, replacing alternate spellings with the standard and pausing to allow the author to chose the correct place when two places have the same names.

With this Egyptologist spell checker, it could also add other information to the places.

Information that would take hours in a large text to enter, would be done with the spell checker.

When ever the spell checker encountered the standard or alternate spelling of a place, it would create roll over text giving the global position of that place.

STANDARD MAP

Any one who has ever created maps, knows if you try to draw all the detail of lots of places, the text gets so small, it can not be read.

The map I suggest begins with an outline of Egypt with the major locations on it. With pixels representing a particular global position.

When the spell checker created the standard for a place on the map, that place would become a link.

If that link was clicked on, the map would appear with that place in Egypt would appear.

=====

When future publishers created books ... when professors taught Egyptology, the standard spellings would be taught.

STANDARD GLYPHS

There are people downloading font software and creating fonts for glyphs daily. By the creation of standard glyphs, made public domain, by all researchers using the same glyph fonts, their hard copies could use finger print technology to be read and the typed text could create a universal ASCII code that could be shared in a common data base.

To get from hieroglyphics to translations, the standard would be created first by transcribing existing hieroglyphics to a computer file.

Once any hieroglyphic had been transcribed, future researchers would not have to view poorly photographed images in an attempt to even figure out which glyphs were on the actual source.

I recently asked about one hieroglyphic source that people are talking about all over the internet. When I finally found some who knew where the source was, they said you could no longer make out the writing.

It appears that most 'Egyptologist' go to tombs or such locations and pick a small area of interest. Before they vanish, it is essential for every remaining hieroglyphic source to be photographed in high definition, or it will be lost forever.

The Egyptologist standard dictionary I suggest would

- * Replace all alternate persons names with the standard
- * Give the option of which person it was when more than one person had the same name.
- * Replace alternate place names with the standard, give the location of that place in a roll over text.

All of this (and more) could be done after any author finished their work, by simply pasting their text into the dictionary program.

=====

Below are two working examples. By moving the cursor over the purple/yellow icon, you can see the text.

Hypothetical text entry would be pasted in the dictionary with out the references and come out with the standard words and references.

The Crew Commander  Ahmose son of Abana, the justified; he says. I speak to you, all people.

King Tuts' tomb is in  The Valley of the Kings.

It is the same icon but the bottom displays text and can take you to a map.

Friends,

Come join us as we clean the Komarock Canal and plant trees along the same tom at 7am. Your support and presence will make the all needed difference.

We will all converge at KCDN at Komarock Phase 2, pick the seedlings that have to our offices by Eco Challenge, then move to the site.

The Town Clerk and the Minister for Environment will catch up with us in progres engage in community work for only 2 hours; from 7.30am till 9.30am.

The members of the Environment Committee Komarocks Residents Association le Simon Mulwa, the Assistant Chief Komarock Mr. David Omedo and the Ward Ma Kariuki were at KCDN this morning to supervise how the work is progressing. The on site to continue with digging and clearing.

Let us join in and give the kind of support we can. If you might not make it but you support us, send your support to the undersigned and we will make mention of you

We can now roll our sleeves and move into the trenches.... .

Healthcare Bill expected soon from Senate panel

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont.

By RICARDO ALONSO-ZALDIVAR, Associated Press Writer 9-4-09

WASHINGTON Signaling it's time for action, the Senate's chief negotiator on a health care bill told his colleagues he won't wait much longer for a Republican compromise.

"I am committed to getting health care reform done done soon and done right,"

Finance Committee Chairman Max Baucus, said in a statement. He is considering making a formal proposal soon to the small group of Senate negotiators who call themselves the "Bipartisan Six."

Baucus, a Democrat from Montana, held a nearly two-hour teleconference on Friday with the other five negotiators from his committee. The group has been struggling for months to come up with an acceptable bipartisan bill.

While he was careful to leave the door open to a long-sought deal, Baucus clearly signaled the time has come for him to move ahead.

President Barack Obama plans to address a joint session of Congress on Wednesday to boost health care reform, a key element of his ambitious domestic agenda.

The president, meanwhile, is trying to placate some unhappy House members who fear he's too eager to compromise with Republicans and conservative Democrats to get a bill.

In a call from Camp David, the presidential retreat in the Maryland, Obama spoke to leaders of the Congressional Progressive Caucus and other liberal-leaning House groups.

Caucus leader Lynn Woolsey, D-Calif., said the lawmakers expressed their commitment to creation of a government-run plan to compete with private health insurers. On Thursday, they sent Obama a letter saying they could not support a health bill that lacked such a public option.

Sesh: Thoughts about Writing and Self-Publishing for Warrior Scholars
September 17, 2009 (7:30PM - 9:00PM /EST)

Sesh is the oldest known name for those individuals we now mistakenly call scribes. In ancient Kemetic society, it was a title bestowed on those individuals whose profession it was to record our truths, explain our vision and defend the Way of our people against the confusion of others. It remains a most honorable calling, involving the incredibly beautiful struggle of mastering independent Afrikan thought. Only those who refuse to be spiritually, psychologically and physically intimidated by this anti-Afrikan environment qualify to follow the path of a sesh. This lecture is for and about those who aspire to this path. It is also a heartfelt call for serious, conscious Afrikans to build independent publishing and distribution companies for us. If we are to develop as self-defining, self-determining, powerful people, we must create institutions which will champion strong, dynamic Afrikan centered interpretations of reality. Only in this way will our literature and thinking remain firmly rooted in the uncompromised traditions of our Ancestors.

Today from VOA:

Voice of America Fri, 04 Sep 2009 14:27 PM PDT

Southern African political sources said Friday that Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe is likely to come under heavy pressure from his fellow regional heads of state when they meet in summit next week in Kinshasa, capital of the Democratic Republic of Congo.

ASAR: Unless you were a practitioner of Ifa, you would not know the sacred Odu (verses) associated with Orunmila and his story of Iwo which is actually a city and not the name for a wife. The word iyawo is not speaking about the woman, but to the suffering that marriage brings: it relates to the hardships of marriage or obtaining a wife.

I forgot to add to this section that this interpretation is actually 2-fold. Not only does it metaphorically speak on the sufferings of marriage, it also speaks on the notion that a wife is what brings comfort to a marriage/hard times. It is the woman who brings balance in times of hardship. But there are various African proverbs that speak to the troubles of marriage. For instance:

- Many marriages make a man's tongue double - Akan
- When a woman enters into marriage, she takes her mother along (with her) -Akan
- He is not silly, only inexperienced, such a person calls marriage love. - Baganda
- Marriage is like a harbor, it does not take long to break. - Chinyanja
- A pigeon and his wife do not know what they are saying when they complain. - Ovambo
- Good spouses seldom marry each other. - Shona

The following is a wisdom poem compiled by Dr. Kykosa Kajangu in his work Wisdom Poetry. Wisdom Poetry is just a collection of African proverbs uniquely woven in a manner that resembles a poem. Here are the collection of proverbs:

Creating yearnings when far away,

Inspiring fear when up close,

Just like rain

Marriage is like rain:

You start by asking,

When will it rain?

After the second rain,

You say: "That is enough."

After the third rain,

"I can't take this shit anymore."

Marriage is a war

That you wage on yourself

In the beginning,

Marriage is sweet like honey,

In the middle

It becomes sour like lemon,

In the end,

It is bitter like pepper.

Marriage is a war

That you wage on yourself

An old man said:

"I have been through eight marriages,

The present is my ninth marriage,

I have never been mistreated

The way I am catching hell now."

This old man is not silly,

Just a fool who thinks that marriage means love.

Marriage is a war

That you wage on yourself

Marriage is something on fire:

If you don't add water into

The cooking pot,

You will only get ashes.

Marriage is a basket

That is carried by the wise,

When a fool carries it,

It falls down.

There are hundreds of proverbs that are more optimistic about marriage. But this was shown to demonstrate the dynamics of how marriage is viewed in the African context.

Subject: [Ta_Seti] Reply to Gore: Why Proto-Forms do not Bring Understanding of African Lexical Items

Much debate has ensued concerning the viability and relevance of proto word forms in historical comparative linguistics. There are some linguists who base their whole lives work on proto forms. I argue that because of the limitations of the alleged proto word forms, linguists miss opportunities for greater understanding of terms, and their wider applications of African words because they refuse to think like African people in their research. Secondly, the very nature of European languages often distorts the meaning of African terms.

In linguistics a proto language is one that has been reconstructed by examining similarities in existing languages using the comparative method to try to deduce what a common ancestor language, no longer known, would have been like. A limiting factor of the comparative method, which seeks to reconstruct proto languages, regards the question of idealization, how much can we reconstruct and how close do our results come to the actual phonetic reality of the proto-language? No known language is dialect free, yet linguists reconstruct to an apex, a single node at each stage, giving the impression of a uniform system.

To accept a proto term or language as valid, one would have to ignore variation of terms and ignore the fact that different users use the different variants under different circumstances based on socio-historical divisions of the society. For example, a priest class versus the layman. A more specific example in English would be with the word LASER. The average person would say that a LASER is a device that emits light (electromagnetic radiation) which can be seen in a common CD Player or fictionally with the Star Wars lightsaber. A person who belongs to the priest class of computer programmer (like myself), or in the field of physics, knows its real etymology and meaning. The word LASER is an acronym that stands for Light Amplification by Stimulated Emission of Radiation.

If a linguist in the far off future was to trace its phonetic variations back to this time, and they just went off of what was in popular dictionaries, they would only have a limited understanding of the term and its etymology: just a narrow band of light. The acronym better explains exactly what a laser is as LASER doesn't refer to the light necessarily but more so to the process of how this narrow band of light is created (through stimulated emission). When the layperson thinks laser, they think of the light. When a scientist thinks laser, they are thinking of the process which produces the light. So if you were to reconstruct the proto form, whose definition has the priority? And will the comparative method even get you to the acronym?

The second major issue for the comparative method is language contact. Contact-induced changes cannot be shown in family trees because the tree is a picture of only those changes involving diversification from the so-called proto-language. If trees and tree-construction methods are based on evidence which necessarily excludes borrowing, then one has to factor out those loans. This becomes very problematic when dealing with African languages because of the African Super Highway of Wisdom which is thousands upon thousands years old. I have already treated this in a separate paper and will only state here that the African Super Highway of Wisdom involves wisdom seekers going from country to country undergoing initiations and teachings under various ethnic groups whose languages may not be related in any way. Because of this ancient African practice, tons of loan words have entered into the lexicon of various African languages and it is difficult, and I say impossible, to really ascertain from which group the actual word derived from; or if it is necessary that it be shared in all branches of the language family.

In the field of linguistics, some linguists only view a term to be cognate if it can be shown that there are regular correspondences in the initial or secondary consonants of a term. If a term is phonetically the same and has the same meaning, but the sounds do not recur regularly in one or more of the languages, it is not considered to be cognate to some. This would be a strong case for borrowing. For instance the Greek word theos and the French word deus (meaning God) are not considered by most linguists to be cognate because this is the only known instance where the initial th and d correspond. But what these linguists fail to realize is that regular correspondences is not a prerequisite for two terms to be cognate. Cognates are word that have a COMMON etymological origin.

If the Greek word theos is older than the latin deus, (Italian dio, French dieu, Spanish dio) and they both belong to the Indo-European Language family, why wouldnt it be the case that someone of Greek origin introduced the term to the Latin or Proto-Latin speakers from which there it had its own changes? Theos and Deus is not something one just makes up randomly to mean something as specific as God. In all of the discussions of this classic example I have come across, they never even entertain the idea that people are not isolated groups who have no contact outside their political boundaries; that there is some invisible barrier keeping a Greek speaker from travelling and introducing a concept to some important person in Italy.

The regular correspondence hypothesis is not enough to establish cognancy, because if that were the case the English word THAT and the African Vernacular English (AVE) word DAT would not be cognate. There are only two instances where the English TH will become a D in the initial position in AVE: That and This (dat, dis). One wouldnt say a world like derefore (therefore). Although the TH and D do not correspond regularly, DAT is clearly THAT and are the same word therefore cognate. They both derive from proto-Indo-European **tar*. Its not like African-Americans made-up the word DAT and it just so happen to mean the word THAT in standard American English. DAT and THAT is not a chance correspondence by any stretch of the imagination: the same with the Greek Theos and Latin Deus. With this evidence, I posit that there should be considered two types of tree models: one for languages as a whole and another for individual lexical items that may be the result of borrowing or not. These are just a few of the issues that cloud the comparative method and reconstructing proto forms.

The third biggest challenge and I say the most important, in regards to African languages, is trying to interpret African terms in a European context. This has been a problem since ancient times. Even the Greek Hermetists recognized this dilemma. In the Corupus Hermeticum Book 16, the following is said:

Hermes, my master, in many a conversation, both when alone, and sometimes, too, when Tat was there, has said, that unto those who come across my books, their composition will seem most simple and [most] clear; but, on the contrary, as tis unclear, and has the [inner]

p. 267

meaning of its words concealed, it will be still unclearer, when, afterwards, the Greeks will want to turn our tongue into their own,for this will be a very great distorting and obscuring of [even] what has been [already] written.

2. Turned into our own native tongue,1 the sermon (logos) keepeth clear the meaning2 of the words (logoi) [at any rate].

For that its very quality of sound, the [very] power of the Egyptian names, have in themselves the bringing into act of what is said.

As far as, then, thou canst, O King(and thou canst [do] all things)keep [this] our sermon from translation; in order that such mighty mysteries may not come to the Greeks, and the disdainful speech of Greece, with [all] its looseness, and its surface beauty,<sup>3</sup> so to speak, take all the strength out of<sup>4</sup> the solemn and the strongthe energetic<sup>5</sup> speech of Names.

The Greeks, O King, have novel words, energetic of argumentation [only]; and thus is the philosophizing of the Greeks the noise of words.

But we do not use words; but we use sounds full-filled with deeds.

The above is part of the section titled The Perfect Sermon of Asclepius (Imhotep) unto the King which is a document now believed to have been constructed during the times of the Roman occupation of Egypt sometime in the first century and it describes the feelings of the ancient Egyptian Sages about having their words and ideas translated into the Greek language. They understood then that the rich concepts of Africa could not be accurately translated into any known European languages and thus we have to always treat them as approximations.

The question is how is the European, speaking a European language, who does not live and engage inside an African reality, able to accurately translate African terms; to do any serious comparative studies to begin with? This is why to this date we still have Europeans translating Netcher as gods instead of causal forces of nature. Because they live outside an African cultural reality, they keep misinterpreting our terminology and then defining rules to govern their misinterpretation of our languages.

In regards to our subject of why we cannot solely rely on the comparison of proto forms in African languages, we will examine a critical text MUNTU by Jaheinz Jahn (1990:152). Jahn demonstrates why we cannot be myopic and attempt to narrow down African key concepts to one meaning and thinking that that one meaning is THE meaning of the term. Any true student of African culture and languages will know that unlike European languages, languages based on equation, African languages are elastic, dynamic and analogous. In speaking of the concept of Nommo to African speech, Jahn goes on to state:

So [Aime] Cesaire uses European words in an African way. For example, in Yoruba the mere word itself does not yet convey a concept or idea. The muntu who utters a word must first designate it by his utterance. It is he who gives it its immediate meaning, while giving a new interpretation to every word he speaks, and so finally giving the specific meaning to the vocable or the phoneme. Not only are the Yoruba highly conscious of the meaning of names, writes Beier, but they also like to interpret each word they use. They believe that every word is really a sentence that has been contracted through a series of elisions into a single word. Thus in Yoruba many words are open to different interpretations, Beier continues, and can therefore be used by different speakers in such a way as to evoke a different set of associations. For the European a word like God conveys a stable concept Dr. Idowu, in a lecture given at the University College, Ibadan, in 1957, gave five interpretations of the Yoruba word for God (Olodumare):

1. Olodu-Omo-Ere. The supreme one, offspring of the boa.
2. Olodu-Ma-Re. The supreme one, who remains constant.
3. Olodu Mo Are. The supreme one, wearing the crown
4. Olodu Kari. The perfect one.
5. Oludumare. The one to whom I must return.

The words wife or mother also convey stable concepts to Europeans. Most Yoruba people, however, using the word iyawo (wife) think of a story that is told in the Ifa oracle and which explains that it means suffering in the town of Iwo. The story says that Orunmila, the deity of the oracle, encountered much suffering in the town of Iwo and that later he was given a wife in recompense. Hence the word iyawo. On the other hand Mr. T.S. Sowande of Abeokuta has ventured another interpretation: iya (mother) is explained as one who draws an image and iyawomi (my wife) as one who draws my picture. Again iya mi (my mother) has been interpreted by Mr. Abolubode of Oshogbo as: From where I branch (the mother and her children likened to a river and its tributaries) . Thus in the Yoruba language words cannot become cliché because they are constantly being reinterpreted and charged with new meaning.

The concepts expressed in this passage are part of the African substratum that unites African cultures. This practice is not exclusive to the Yoruba and it rightly explains why you have different spellings of the same word, with slightly, expanded, more modified meanings in the Egyptian language. If we have several definitions of the same word, in the same area, during the same time period, how can you accurately reconstruct a proto-form with a definite meaning? More so, how can one argue from the stand point, as Gore has, that someone is wrong in their interpretation and application of a word because it doesn't exactly match some proto-form created by a European who does not understand the real meaning of the terms.

A European would not put in a dictionary that the word iya mi means from where I branch. They would put the word mother as the entry when that doesn't accurately convey what is being said. Unless you were a practitioner of Ifa, you would not know the sacred Odu (verses) associated with Orunmila and his story of Iwo which is actually a city and not the name for a wife. The word iyawo is not speaking about the woman, but to the suffering that marriage brings: it relates to the hardships of marriage or obtaining a wife.

This is why I argue and will continue to argue, that if you are going to speak on African languages, you have to know the culture, the cosmology and the context associated with the terms under examination; otherwise you will always misinterpret something because one does not have a poetic ear.

African words always convey some deeper understanding of the phenomena the words are associated with. By staying on the surface level we will always miss what is really being said and this is what happens on a consistent basis by those who swear they know more about African languages than African people. So in regards to the various usages of KM all across Africa and trying to narrow it down to one definition, outside of its cultural, spiritual context, one will ALWAYS miss why the Wolof KEM and the Egyptian KHM/KM and the Greek KAUMA and the Mbochi IKAMA and in the Bambara KAMI and in the Dravidian KAMMI and GEM-GYM in the Dogon are all cognate terms. Anyone claiming that they are not the same word and concepts isn't serious and doesn't understand African people. If one doesn't understand that words (especially nouns) in African languages are sentences, then one will not be able to read Egyptian and therefore couldn't accurately reconstruct a proto form of the language to save their life. This is how one missed -anza as a root for lake chasing a "proto" form.

These are not points one can just dismiss and in order to counter these notions, brought about by African people, one would have to find primary documentation from a vast resource pool, created by African people to counter the claims made by the majority of African authors concerning the nature of their languages to date. I await such a feat.

The Zimbabwean government and taxpayers?

This is what this entire dispute was about, and to make an awkward case for the idea that Zimbabwe 'is not a democracy' and 'Mugabe

Their only slogan is 'Mugabe must go'.

They even claimed that 'this has nothing to do with landreform'. Or that Robert Gabriel Mugabe, co-signer of the Lancaster House Agreement, is 'not a real liberation fighter'.

Lies, lies, lies.

This is the MDC in a nutshell: Opportunists who saw their rise to power through ZANU-PF blocked, rhodesians with bloody histories of killing and torturing liberation fighters, and foreign funding from the UK and US.

Marc Taylor,

> lets help our cousins in the Congo work on this...

Absolutely.

It is worthwhile also, to remember the central place the Congo has played in the Bantu Migrations. The Luba/Lunda people came through the Congo, and now live in the DRC, Angola and Zambia. The Bemba kingdom are a split-off of the Luba Empire. The Chewa (Malawi), Shona (Zimbabwe) all have their origins in the Kola region of the DRC.

So in many ways, the Congo is the heart of the African continent, and Africa is not going to be economically or politically independent without it. The Congo should be the engine of manufacturing in Africa.

What can we do. What is needed, is continent wide and international legislation, that puts the benefits of extractive industries (mining) in the hands of national governments, and does not allow anyone to come to power who will give or negotiate those materials away, which is what is happening now on a rampant scale.

The institutions to approach about that, are SADC (the Southern Africa Development Community), the AU (Africa Union), and the government of South Africa (the ANC), and outside of africa, the World Trade Organisation (WTO).

We need to start by getting on board as many existing organisations as we can, to start a united front to get resources back in the hands of governments.

There is a radio station called Uhuru Radio (www.uhururadio.com), and it would be interesting to contact them.

It will be very easy to make them understand that the exploitation of the Congo is not simply a women's issue, that men are getting killed too, and that the torture these women underwent, was a form of terrorism that had the explicit purpose of driving out the general population of the Eastern DRC to secure the exploitation of the Coltan mines. Sheryl Crowe is smart and it will be very easy to make her understand the bigger picture.

Komarock Community Arboretum 5th September 2009

On 5th September 2009, we all converged at Komarock to clean the Komarock Canal and trees along the same Canal. And what a show it was? We were sharing a comprehensive plan of action and report with our strategic partners.

Besides KCDN and the KCDN Team, we had Mr. Robert Mutuma from the Eco Challenge [Total Kenya Ltd], Ms Anne Kagumba, the CAO City Inspectorate, Mr. Reginald Okumu Tribe Kenya Initiative and formerly, chairman of the Institution of Surveyors of Kenya, Mr. Grace Wanjiru, Divisional Commander, City Inspectorate Embakasi Division, Mr. Peter J Ward Manager Komarock Ward, Ms Mellen Kinaru, Secretary General Komarock Residents Association, Mr. Elijah Kombo [PhD Talking], Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite, Friends of Komarock and many parents/guardians and children.

On behalf of KCDN, I must thank Total Kenya Ltd for having enabled us to make this day a success. Besides giving us 1,000 seedlings for the event, they gave us Kshs 20,000.00 to cover our logistics. We must also thank Bishop Dr Julius Mbagaya, President of the Baptist Convention for sending to us Kshs 3,000.00, Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite, Kshs 2,000.00, Otieno R Sungu Kshs 2,000.00 and Mr. Reginald Okumu Kshs 1,000.00.

We must also thank Komarock Residents Association and the parents in the KCDN Child Support Initiative for turning up in large numbers. We had close to 700 parents in the KCDN Initiative taking part. Special mention must be made of the City Council of Nairobi through Ward Manager Mr. Kariuki who availed staff and equipment to enable the clean up exercise to be a success.

This was the first step into making the Canal a Community Arboretum. We have a lot in our hands now, and we will appeal to several Friends to come on board and help us. We will have 10 personnel to ensure that the seedlings are watered and that the grounds are made into a garden envisage. This will cost us Kshs 5,000.00 per day, and we only appeal to more Friends, Institutions and individuals, to come on board and help us out. We were sharing a comprehensive plan of action and report with our strategic partners led by Total Kenya Ltd.

We will invite the companies to take charge of only 100 metres of the canal and help in our efforts at Environmental Conservation. We will also invite willing individuals to help as much as they can.

In the next 6 months we want to show case what partnership can achieve for us, and we invite your support to help turn this mass of a mess into Komarock Community Arboretum. In the appeal, we will work closely with Eco Challenge, Friends of Eco Challenge and the City Council of Nairobi to ensure our dream becomes a reality. This dream includes a well done landscape with trees and golden showers, seats at the Arboretum, which Mr. Reginald Okumu has promised to contribute to, a public toilet, a library and much more.

If you are willing to work with us in this programme, kindly get in touch with us through the Eco Challenge Team at Total Kenya Ltd, or reach out to the undersigned. We make public all the support that we get.

Many thanks to all of you.

Marc Taylor,

> lets help our cousins in the Congo work on this...

Absolutely.

It is worthwhile also, to remember the central place the Congo has played in the Bantu Migrations. The Luba/Lunda people came through the Congo, and now live in the DRC, Angola and Zambia. The Bemba kingdom are a split-off of the Luba Empire. The Chewa (Malawi), Shona (Zimbabwe) all have their origins in the Kola region of the DRC.

So in many ways, the Congo is the heart of the African continent, and Africa is not going to be economically or politically independent without it. The Congo should be the engine of manufacturing in Africa.

What can we do. What is needed, is continent wide and international legislation, that puts the benefits of extractive industries (mining) in the hands of national governments, and does not allow anyone to come to power who will give or negotiate those materials away, which is what is happening now on a rampant scale.

Check out my latest film: The Xia Dynasty:First African Empire of China.

I call these early colonizers of China Africans because they came from Africa. A good example of the use of the proper term to identify people is the case of America. The first people to live here were Amerinds. Today Europeans dominate North America. Although we call these people Americans, they are Europeans who practice a European culture.
The Blacks of Xia came from Africa. And practiced an African culture. Therefore I call the peoples of Asia who can be dated to the Kushite-Group C dispersal/migration out of Africa after 3500BC: Africans.

These companies are most likely involved in criminal activities. they are not merely reluctant bribe payers, but are actively involved in crimes, with the military. And they all avoid paying taxes, probably not always legally.

The companies that are involved in the Congo deserve to be taken to The Hague.

However none of it compares to actually paying African countries market price for their raw materials. That is $1 trillion per year - bigger than any fair trade, reparations or marshall plan can ever be.

Peace Phamily

Due to the recent post on African Classical History concerning Robert K. G. Temple's book THE Sirius Mystery, I wanted to lend support to Temple's notion that the Greek God Helios (the sun) derives from the Egyptian god-force HERU. In an earlier email I postulated that the Indo-European words from the Sun could have derived from the Egyptian word HERU. I also posited that the word HERU is the source of the word ZULU. So I decided to expand that aspect of the previous email/paper and am providing it as a download for your critique.

Just visit my website and it is on the home page. Just right click the link and click "save as" to download to your desktop. If you have Adobe Reader plugin in your browser, you can view the pdf document on the web. I know people have not been able to download from Yahoogroups, so I think this is the best way to get the document. Look forward to your feedback.

We are sponsoring a tribute in honor of the late scholar, Dr. Ivan G. Van Sertima here in the Oakland-San Francisco Bay Area. Van Sertima's scholarship and contributions in Africana Studies represent one of the most important legacies in the last quarter of the 20th century. His classic book, They Came Before Columbus (1976), and his Journal of African Civilizations (1979-1994) are two significant publications which provided proof of African contributions to the world, and they successfully changed many of the mainstream myths about Black people.

The white farmer's demand for compensation is an unabashed manifestation of a criminal mind-

We need to learn to reinterpret the whites' version of history by substituting the word "gangstered" for the word "conquered" in order to gain a clear understanding of the psychology of those who currently rule the world.

Hieroglyphic-Translation-0004

If these photos do not appear, you may need to go to the Yahoo Group where I stored them in the file area:

It may be hard to imagine what I am saying with out the images

Some info I just read on hieroglyphics:

Hieroglyphs change throughout history.

The most archaic type of glyphs were used in the Predynastic and Early Dynastic eras.

By the Old Kingdom another type of ancient Egyptian language

Demotic was another type of Egyptian language (Rosetta Stone)

There have been mistranslating and transliteration regarding what many [if not all] tomb texts, pyramid texts, and other documents

Modern Egyptologists and linguists now work re-translating many of these texts and documents.

End

Translation of an unknown language is done by finding patterns or examining the same word in it's context.

There is some knowledge of what ancient Egyptians used to do by things they created by their hands, but to know what actually happened in any event, hinges on the ability to read the hieroglyphs.

I have read the remarks of many about their ability to read hieroglyphs, but even those who claim to read hieroglyphs seldom create their papers/information from hieroglyphs.

The key to creating a translation system is by the establishment of standards such as are used in religious books.

The entries in the bible have specific reference marks.

Book Genesis ... 2 Kings...

Hieroglyphs could be given standard "BOOK NAMES"

HIEROGLYPHIC TITLES

By the creation of a standard set of fonts for all glyphs.

Assigning each glyph a number

Any one who learned the standard system could create any line of hieroglyphs by typing numbers

If you typed 333, 9, 17, 1034 in a file, the results would be 0333 0009 0017 0134 in the ASCII file, any number typed would become a 4 digit number

Every number when read would produce it's assigned glyph

The first 25 glyphs of a source would create 100 digits (4 digits per glyph)

This number sequence would become the long title of the hieroglyph.

Humans aren't great associating a string of numbers, so the standard organization would assign a standard human friendly name as the alternate name.

The numbers for the computer, the word associating name for humans.

After the standard was created, any alternate name would be considered an error, like misspelling.

Hieroglyphic titles - Rosetta, Khamose, Ahmose01, Ahmose02

.. Genesis, Kings 1, Kings 2

In order for all researchers to be on the same page, they must have a standard set of references:

Those who transcribed hieroglyphs would use the standard writing system

( Just like medical or legal writers, there must be a standardized writing system)

Most hieroglyphic sources will have "1 page" wall, stela.. but when it had multiple pages like a papyrus..

KingsList

:2:3

Rosetta:17

Hieroglyphic title: line down from the top

=====

Because of the world interest in the bible for centuries, great developments have been made in standards.

Genesis

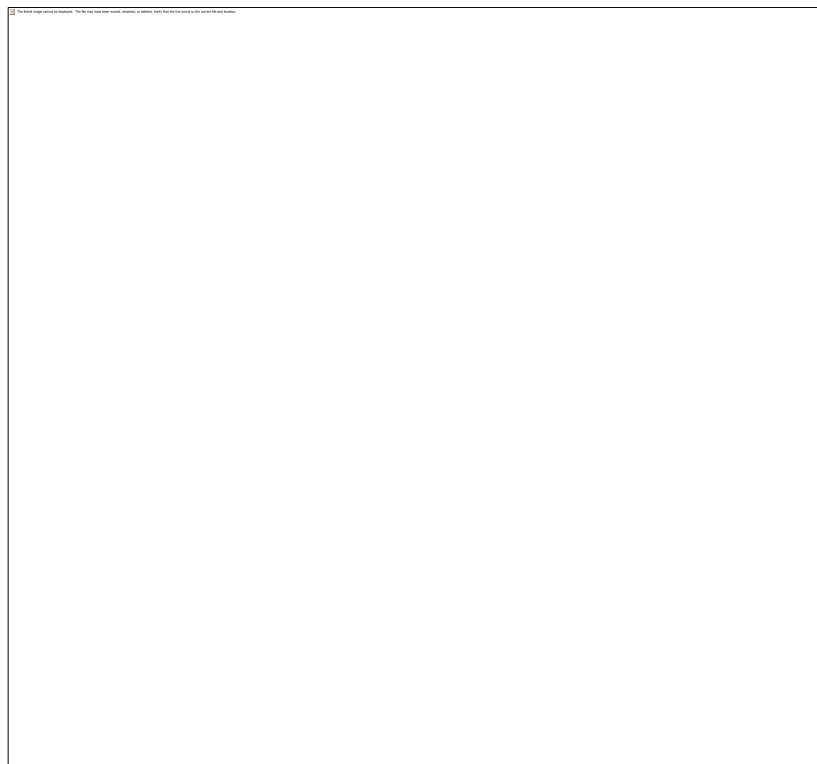

46:10

A - Top is the text before translation

B - Is the translation reading from right to left (as in the original middle east languages)

C - Is the translation reversed in the sequence we Europeans are accustomed to.

NOTE there are more words in the translation than in the original text. This is typical for hieroglyphic translations also.

http://tech.groups.yahoo.com/group/EncEg\_Hieroglyphics/files/Translate-example.jpg

Some time in history some one came up with the Strong's' numbering system. Because people did not know the text of Hebrews, they came up with assigning Hebrew words with numbers.

The single word top right assigned the number 1121 and this single word = And the sons of

With a Strong's' dictionary in your software, you can see the actual translation.

Because a standard reference system has been created for the bible, any one can site a reference and any one else in the world can see exactly what they are eluding to.

IF something actually exists in that text, any writer can write their information, giving the source of their information.

There is no need to quote the whole translation. When an author states specific information exists in a text, they need only give the reference and put it into their own words, such as the following examples

Leviticus 24:10 In the Exodus Israelites were still producing children with Egyptians.

Ezra 9:1 The Israelites never stopped producing their families with the Egyptians.

Genesis 41:45 The Egyptian girl Asenath produced the tribe of Joseph

1 Chronicles 2:34 An Israelite took an Egyptian servant to be the husband of his daughter.

1 Kings 7:8 Solomon built a house for his Egyptian wife.

Genesis 46:1-34 Israel had 53 grandchildren, only 1 of them was a female. The grandsons of Israel had only Egyptian girls to produce their families. All future generations of Israelites would be descendants of Egyptians.

POINT: IF the information actually exists in any text, then the author can document their source with the reference.

=====

What good would it be to have the ability to translate hieroglyphics, if that author does NOT use the hieroglyphs in the preparation of their papers?

You can read any supposed information about ancient Egypt, BUT these authors never site their hieroglyphic reference.

* "Salitis was the 1st king of the 15th Dynasty." <> Ok, give the hieroglyphic source and line where Salitis is identified as a king?

* "Avaris was the Hyksos capital" <> Ok, give the hieroglyphic source and line where the Egyptians stated Avaris was the Hyksos capital.

* Nefertiti was the wife of Amenhotep IV / Akhenaten <> Ok, give the hieroglyphic source and line where Nefertiti was the wife of Akhenaten

IF an Egyptologist who actually has factual knowledge that any said information actually does exist in the hieroglyphs, they can give THE SOURCE AND THE SPECIFIC LINE WHERE THAT INFORMATION EXISTS

With or with out a standard reference system, any one who actually has knowledge of any information in hieroglyphics, can identify the source and give the specific line that information is written.

Those who can not site the specific source in the hieroglyphics are no different than any novice who parrots what they read in some book or some web page.

I suppose one reason many do not site the actual source and location is because it will not let them get away with embellishing their mythical information.

"An Egyptian was the servant of an Amalekite" ... "Joshua's coat caught on fire" ... any one who wanted to make up any thing is free to do so, but if you are a researcher and not a sheep, you will ask the question, where is that information written?

If I intended to share information with you that actually existed, I would simply add the source... 1 Samuel 30:13.

=====

I would expect mythology, gossip, fairy tales to be spread on any topic on the internet, but for those who think of themselves as scientist/researchers, they would document every thing they wrote.

Hieroglyphic source, line down

... this information states ...

Some people get angry with me when I ask them for the source of information, when no such source exists. It is what they have been taught and because they have been conditioned to believe it, they continue to believe it EVEN after they know such information does not exist in the hieroglyphics.

I would imagine an international standards organization in which accepted ONLY documented information.

Hieroglyphic Title: the title assigned to any hieroglyphic source.

Page when more than one exists

Line that particular information is given.

I suggest an organization which works on a scientific level, not university graduates who embrace Aladdin's magic lamp and create their own mythology with non existent information.

Hieroglyphic source, line down

this information states ...

By the creation of standardized titles for hieroglyphics, the international organization of Egyptologist could communicate with out confusion .

I will show the use of ASCII numbers later.

Boycotting is against my personal philosophy, I prefer active actions as opposed to passive actions.

Word History: Charles C. Boycott seems to have become a household word because of his strong sense of duty to his employer. An Englishman and former British soldier, Boycott was the estate agent of the Earl of Erne in County Mayo , Ireland . The earl was one of the absentee landowners who as a group held most of the land in Ireland . Boycott was chosen in the fall of 1880 to be the test case for a new policy advocated by Charles Parnell, an Irish politician who wanted land reform. Any landlord who would not charge lower rents or any tenant who took over the farm of an evicted tenant would be given the complete cold shoulder by Parnell's supporters. Boycott refused to charge lower rents and ejected his tenants. At this point members of Parnell's Irish Land League stepped in, and Boycott and his family found themselves isolated without servants, farmhands, service in stores, or mail delivery. Boycott's name was quickly adopted as the term for this treatment, not just in English but in other languages such as French, Dutch, German, and Russian.

Hillary Clinton pals around with the murderer of Patrice Lumumba, and this is the woman who is lecturing Africa on corruption?

I don't think so.

That used to be 'Voice of the CIA' when there still was a cold war.

They're the most arrogant bunch of racists you have ever met. They truly believe that they are the master race, and that Africa will fall apart the second they leave. Of course, they're also lying hypocrits, so they will never actually leave and for instance go and farm in Australia, where they would actually have to work for a living, with no free 'staff' to cater to their every whim.

Compensation for whites is all the 'willing buyer, willing seller' land reform program was all about. The British government said - rather not it's kind of expensive. So who else is supposed to pay them? The Zimbabwean government and taxpayers?

This is what this entire dispute was about, and of course they can't run a villification of Zimbabwe on the platform of white privilege, so they try to make an awkward case for the idea that Zimbabwe 'is not a democracy' and 'Mugabe hates gays and jews' (even though it was his Israeli/Jewish friend ben-Menashe who entrapped Morgan Tsvangirai into saying he would be ok with the assassination of President Mugabe) and 'there is police brutality' (happily ignoring the elections in Kenya which killed 1,500). Their only slogan is 'Mugabe must go'.

They even claimed that 'this has nothing to do with landreform'. Or that Robert Gabriel Mugabe, co-signer of the Lancaster House Agreement, is 'not a real liberation fighter'.

Lies, lies, lies.

This is the MDC in a nutshell: Opportunists who saw their rise to power through ZANU-PF blocked, rhodesians with bloody histories of killing and torturing liberation fighters, and foreign funding from the UK and US.

That's the MDC.

Excerpts:

[Questioner] Without disclosing 'what Obama is thinking', do the zetas foresee the administration making a move towards either disclosure or overt preparation for the poleshift sometime before the end of this calendar year? People are seeing highway signs marked "Containment Area", plus all the railroad cars that were supposedly built to house human prisoners are being shuttled around, plus the recently-disclosed announcement that nuclear materials are in fact transiting around the country in 18-wheeled tractor-trailers. Thinking the government is about to do 'something' to them is a reasonable reaction to these signs, whether they're ignorant hatemongers at tea parties and town halls or rational middle-of-the-road centrists. What do the zetas have to say about these signs and portents of things to come?

[Zeta response] These rumors and signs are nothing new! We have addressed this in the past, explaining that the US government, the US military, fears their own soldiers, not so much the citizen. Soldiers can revolt, and they are armed. They fear a coup, a rebellion. Whether Obama will disclose the alien presence or the presence of Planet X is in the hands of man, and likewise violates our rule of honoring his request that we not splay his thoughts out for the public to read every Saturday night.

[Questioner] This question is mostly about the soul and how they grow. Ted Kennedy, did his accidents have anything to do with the fact that he felt so strongly about health care? Unless I'm wrong I believe he spent months not mobile with a broken back. Things like that are very traumatic, in a way that people can't relate unless they've experienced something similar, and keeps a person very aware of the pains others are going through every minute of everyday.

[Zeta response] Personal experiences always influence a human and the incarnating soul during an incarnation, but it was not his personal experiences that motivated him. One only has to look at the many countries that treat all their citizens, humanely, to see the glaring discrepancy the US presents. A huge percentage of US citizens are uninsured and face personal bankruptcy if any serious illness presents. His stage was in the Senate, which has tried many times to correct this discrepancy and failed. It was a natural fit for a lion of the Senate.

Komarock Community Arboretum 5th Septemb

On 5th September 2009, we all converged at Komarock to clean the Komarock Canal and plant trees along the same Canal. And what a show it was? We were sharing a comprehensive plan of action and report with our strategic partners.

Besides KCDN and the KCDN Team, we had Mr. Robert Mutuma from the Eco Challenge [Total Kenya Ltd], Ms Anne Kagumba, the CAO City Inspectorate, Mr. Reginald Okumu from Tribe Kenya Initiative and formerly, chairman of the Institution of Surveyors of Kenya, Ms Grace Wanjiru, Divisional Commander, City Inspectorate Embakasi Division, Mr. Peter Kariuki, Ward Manager Komarock Ward, Ms Mellen Kinaru, Secretary General Komarock Residents Association, Mr. Elijah Kombo [PhD Talking], Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite, Friends of KCDN and many parents/guardians and children.

On behalf of KCDN, I must thank Total Kenya Ltd for having enabled us to make this day a success. Besides giving us 1,000 seedlings for the event, they gave us Kshs 20,000.00 to enable our logistics. We must also thank Bishop Dr Julius Mbagaya, President of the Baptist Convention for sending to us Kshs 3,000.00, Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite, Kshs 2,000.00, Mr. Otieno R Sungu Kshs 2,000.00 and Mr. Reginald Okumu Kshs 1,000.00.

We must also thank Komarocks Residents Association and the parents in the KCDN Child Support Initiative for turning up in large numbers. We had close to 700 parents in the KCDN Initiative taking part. Special mention must be made of the City Council of Nairobi through the Ward Manager Mr. Kariuki who availed staff and equipment to enable the clean up exercise to be a success.

This was the first step into making the Canal a Community Arboretum. We have a lot in our hands now, and we will appeal to several Friends to come on board and help us. We will engage 10 personnel to ensure that the seedlings are watered and that the grounds are made into what we envisage. This will cost us Kshs 5,000.00 per day, and we only appeal to more Friends, Institutions and individuals, to come on board and help us out. We are sharing a comprehensive plan of action and report with our strategic partners led by Total Kenya Ltd.

We will invite the companies to take charge of only 100 metres of the canal and help in our efforts at Environmental Conservation. We will also invite willing individuals to help as much as they can.

In the next 6 months we want to show case what partnership can achieve for us, and we invite your support to help turn this mass of a mess into Komarock Community Arboretum. In this appeal, we will work closely with Eco Challenge, Friends of Eco Challenge and the City Council of Nairobi to ensure our dream becomes a reality. This dream includes a well done landscape with trees and golden showers, seats at the Arboretum, which Mr. Reginald Okumu has promised to contribute to, a public toilet, a library and much more.

If you are willing to work with us in this programme, kindly get in touch with us through the Eco Challenge Team at Total Kenya Ltd, or reach out to the undersigned. We make public all the support that we get.

Many thanks to all of you.

Thanks Bro.

Our immediate challenge is to invite Friends of KCDN to again step forward and help us sustain the work we have started.

Our Friends have been very supportive and I know, they will enable us financially, and with that support, our team on site will be strong enough.

In 6 months we will have tasked enough to ensure that the Arboretum is being opened to public use.

We can do it, let us do it.

Ndugu Oto,

This is what we have been saying all along, Talking less and Tasking more. If the MAU issue was dealt with the same way, we would be at the point of starting to conserve it, but as it is, talking is doing more on the Mau issue and many others that need conservation.

Let us do our little bits in the conservation efforts that we can instead of procrastinating.

We, the friends of KCDN will walk with you on this matter even as we talk less and Task more, in 6 months time, we will look back and see an example of what Talking less and Tasking more can do.

Keep the spirit, the journey has just begun.

Otieno Sungu.

This is so deep, thank you very much. Some words can be so deceptive and have gotten a lot of people killed or locked up for one reason or another. Sometimes I feel so detached from life here in the U.S., it is such a difficult place to live with all the racism and screwed up language or wording at any given time. This may sound odd but, there are times when I wish I were in some

ASAR: Unless you were a practitioner of Ifa, you would not know the sacred Odu (verses) associated with Orunmila and his story of Iwo which is actually a city and not the name for a wife. The word iyawo is not speaking about the woman, but to the suffering that marriage brings: it relates to the hardships of marriage or obtaining a wife.

I forgot to add to this section that this interpretation is actually 2-fold. Not only does it metaphorically speak on the sufferings of marriage, it also speaks on the notion that a wife is what brings comfort to a marriage/hard times. It is the woman who brings balance in times of hardship. But there are various African proverbs that speak to the troubles of marriage. For instance:

- Many marriages make a man's tongue double - Akan
- When a woman enters into marriage, she takes her mother along (with her) -Akan
- He is not silly, only inexperienced, such a person calls marriage love. - Baganda
- Marriage is like a harbor, it does not take long to break. - Chinyanja
- A pigeon and his wife do not know what they are saying when they complain. - Ovambo
- Good spouses seldom marry each other. - Shona

The following is a wisdom poem compiled by Dr. Kykosa Kajangu in his work Wisdom Poetry. Wisdom Poetry is just a collection of African proverbs uniquely woven in a manner that resembles a poem. Here are the collection of proverbs:

Creating yearnings when far away,

Inspiring fear when up close,

Just like rain

Marriage is like rain:

You start by asking,

When will it rain?

After the second rain,

You say: "That is enough."
After the third rain,
"I can't take this shit anymore."
Marriage is a war
That you wage on yourself
In the beginning,
Marriage is sweet like honey,
In the middle
It becomes sour like lemon,
In the end,
It is bitter like pepper.
Marriage is a war
That you wage on yourself
An old man said:
"I have been through eight marriages,
The present is my ninth marriage,
I have never been mistreated
The way I am catching hell now."
This old man is not silly,
Just a fool who thinks that marriage means love.
Marriage is a war
That you wage on yourself
Marriage is something on fire:
If you don't add water into
The cooking pot,
You will only get ashes.
Marriage is a basket
That is carried by the wise,
When a fool carries it,
It falls down.

There are hundreds of proverbs that are more optimistic about marriage. But this was shown to demonstrate the dynamics of how marriage is viewed in the African context.

Subject: [Ta_Seti] Reply to Gore: Why Proto-Forms do not Bring Understanding of ## African Lexical Items

Much debate has ensued concerning the viability and relevance of proto word forms in historical comparative linguistics. There are some linguists who base their whole lives work on proto forms. I argue that because of the limitations of the alleged proto word forms, linguists miss opportunities for greater understanding of terms, and their wider applications of African words because they refuse to think like African people in their research. Secondly, the very nature of European languages often distorts the meaning of African terms.

In linguistics a proto language is one that has been reconstructed by examining similarities in existing languages using the comparative method to try to deduce what a common ancestor language, no longer known, would have been like. A limiting factor of the comparative method, which seeks to reconstruct proto languages, regards the question of idealization, how much can we reconstruct and how close do our results come to the actual phonetic reality of the proto-language? No known language is dialect free, yet linguists reconstruct to an apex, a single node at each stage, giving the impression of a uniform system.

To accept a proto term or language as valid, one would have to ignore variation of terms and ignore the fact that different users use the different variants under different circumstances based on socio-historical divisions of the society. For example, a priest class versus the layman. A more specific example in English would be with the word LASER. The average person would say that a LASER is a device that emits light (electromagnetic radiation) which can be seen in a common CD Player or fictionally with the Star Wars lightsaber. A person who belongs to the priest class of computer programmer (like myself), or in the field of physics, knows its real etymology and meaning. The word LASER is an acronym that stands for Light Amplification by Stimulated Emission of Radiation.

If a linguist in the far off future was to trace its phonetic variations back to this time, and they just went off of what was in popular dictionaries, they would only have a limited understanding of the term and its etymology: just a narrow band of light. The acronym better explains exactly what a laser is as LASER doesn't refer to the light necessarily but more so to the process of how this narrow band of light is created (through stimulated emission). When the layperson thinks laser, they think of the light. When a scientist thinks laser, they are thinking of the process which produces the light. So if you were to reconstruct the proto form, whose definition has the priority? And will the comparative method even get you to the acronym?

becomes very problematic when dealing with African languages because of the African Super Highway of Wisdom which is thousands upon thousands years old. I have already treated this in a separate paper and will only state here that the African Super Highway of Wisdom involves wisdom seekers going from country to country undergoing initiations and teachings under various ethnic groups whose languages may not be related in any way. Because of this ancient African practice, tons of loan words have entered into the lexicon of various African languages and it is difficult, and I say impossible, to really ascertain from which group the actual word derived from; or if it is necessary that it be shared in all branches of the language family.

In the field of linguistics, some linguists only view a term to be cognate if it can be shown that there are regular correspondences in the initial or secondary consonants of a term. If a term is phonetically the same and has the same meaning, but the sounds do not recur regularly in one or more of the languages, it is not considered to be cognate to some. This would be a strong case for borrowing. For instance the Greek word theos and the French word deus (meaning God) are not considered by most linguists to be cognate because this is the only known instance where the initial th and d correspond. But what these linguists fail to realize is that regular correspondences is not a prerequisite for two terms to be cognate. Cognates are word that have a COMMON etymological origin.

If the Greek word theos is older than the latin deus, (Italian dio, French dieu, Spanish dio) and they both belong to the Indo-European Language family, why wouldnt it be the case that someone of Greek origin introduced the term to the Latin or Proto-Latin speakers from which there it had its own changes? Theos and Deus is not something one just makes up randomly to mean something as specific as God. In all of the discussions of this classic example I have come across, they never even entertain the idea that people are not isolated groups who have no contact outside their political boundaries; that there is some invisible barrier keeping a Greek speaker from travelling and introducing a concept to some important person in Italy.

The regular correspondence hypothesis is not enough to establish cognancy, because if that were the case the English word THAT and the African Vernacular English (AVE) word DAT would not be cognate. There are only two instances where the English TH will become a D in the initial position in AVE: That and This (dat, dis). One wouldnt say a world like derefore (therefore). Although the TH and D do not correspond regularly, DAT is clearly THAT and are the same word therefore cognate. They both derive from proto-Indo-European **tar*. Its not like African-Americans made-up the word DAT and it just so happen to mean the word THAT in standard American English. DAT and THAT is not a chance correspondence by any stretch of the imagination: the same with the Greek Theos and Latin Deus. With this evidence, I posit that there should be considered two types of tree models: one for languages as a whole and another for individual lexical items that may be the result of borrowing or not. These are just a few of the issues that cloud the comparative method and reconstructing proto forms.

The third biggest challenge and I say the most important, in regards to African languages, is trying to interpret African terms in a European context. This has been a problem since ancient times. Even the Greek Hermetists recognized this dilemma. In the Corpus Hermeticum Book 16, the following is said:

Hermes, my master, in many a conversation, both when alone, and sometimes, too, when Tat was there, has said, that unto those who come across my books, their composition will seem most simple and [most] clear; but, on the contrary, as tis unclear, and has the [inner] meaning of its words concealed, it will be still unclearer, when, afterwards, the Greeks will want to turn our tongue into their own, for this will be a very great distorting and obscuring of [even] what has been [already] written.

p. 267

2. Turned into our own native tongue, 1 the sermon (logos) keepeth clear the meaning2 of the words (logoi) [at any rate].

For that its very quality of sound, the [very] power of the Egyptian names, have in themselves the bringing into act of what is said.

As far as, then, thou canst, O King (and thou canst [do] all things) keep [this] our sermon from translation; in order that such mighty mysteries may not come to the Greeks, and the disdainful speech of Greece, with [all] its looseness, and its surface beauty, 3 so to speak, take all the strength out of4 the solemn and the strongthe energetic5 speech of Names.

The Greeks, O King, have novel words, energetic of argumentation [only]; and thus is the philosophizing of the Greeksthe noise of words.

But we do not use words; but we use sounds full-filled with deeds.

The above is part of the section titled The Perfect Sermon of Asclepius (Imhotep) unto the King which is a document now believed to have been constructed during the times of the Roman occupation of Egypt sometime in the first century and it describes the feelings of the ancient Egyptian Sages about having their words and ideas translated into the Greek language. They understood then that the rich concepts of Africa could not be accurately translated into any known European languages and thus we have to always treat them as approximations.

The question is how is the European, speaking a European language, who does not live and engage inside an African reality, able to accurately translate African terms; to do any serious comparative studies to begin with? This is why to this date we still have Europeans translating Netcher as gods instead of causal forces of nature. Because they live outside an African cultural reality, they keep misinterpreting our terminology and then defining rules to govern their misinterpretation of our languages.

In regards to our subject of why we cannot solely rely on the comparison of proto forms in African languages, we will examine a critical text MUNTU by Jaheinz Jahn (1990:152). Jahn demonstrates why we cannot be myopic and attempt to narrow down African key concepts to one meaning and thinking that that one meaning is THE meaning of the term. Any true student of African culture and languages will know that unlike European languages, languages based on equation, African languages are elastic, dynamic and analogous. In speaking of the concept of Nommo to African speech, Jahn goes on to state:

So [Aime] Césaire uses European words in an African way. For example, in Yoruba the mere word itself does not yet convey a concept or idea. The muntu who utters a word must first designate it by his utterance. It is he who gives it its immediate meaning, while giving a new interpretation to every word he speaks, and so finally giving the specific meaning to the vocable or the phoneme. Not only are the Yoruba highly conscious of the meaning of names, writes Beier, but they also like to interpret each word they use. They believe that every word is really a sentence that has been contracted through a series of elisions into a single word. Thus in Yoruba many words are open to different interpretations, Beier continues, and can therefore be used by different speakers in such a way as to evoke a different set of associations. For the European a word like God conveys a stable concept Dr. Idowu, in a lecture given at the University College, Ibadan, in 1957, gave five interpretations of the Yoruba word for God (Olodumare):

1. Olodu-Omo-Ere. The supreme one, offspring of the boa.
2. Olodu-Ma-Re. The supreme one, who remains constant.
3. Olodu Mo Are. The supreme one, wearing the crown
4. Olodu Kari. The perfect one.
5. Oludumare. The one to whom I must return.

The words wife or mother also convey stable concepts to Europeans. Most Yoruba people, however, using the word iyawo (wife) think of a story that is told in the Ifa oracle and which explains that it means suffering in the town of Iwo. The story says that Orunmila, the deity of the oracle, encountered much suffering in the town of Iwo and that later he was given a wife in recompense. Hence the word iyawo. On the other hand Mr. T.S. Sowande of Abeokuta has ventured another interpretation: iya (mother) is explained as one who draws an image and iyawomi (my wife) as one who draws my picture. Again iya mi (my mother) has been interpreted by Mr. Abolubode of Oshogbo as: From where I branch (the mother and her children likened to a river and its tributaries) . Thus in the Yoruba language words cannot become cliché because they are constantly being reinterpreted and charged with new meaning.

The concepts expressed in this passage are part of the African substratum that unites African cultures. This practice is not exclusive to the Yoruba and it rightly explains why you have different spellings of the same word, with slightly, expanded, more modified meanings in the Egyptian language. If we have several definitions of the same word, in the same area, during the same time period, how can you accurately reconstruct a proto-form with a definite meaning? More so, how can one argue from the stand point, as Gore has, that someone is wrong in their interpretation and application of a word because it doesn't exactly match some proto-form created by a European who does not understand the real meaning of the terms.

A European would not put in a dictionary that the word iya mi means from where I branch. They would put the word mother as the entry when that doesn't accurately convey what is being said. Unless you were a practitioner of Ifa, you would not know the sacred Odu (verses) associated with Orunmila and his story of Iwo which is actually a city and not the name for a wife. The word iyawo is not speaking about the woman, but to the suffering that marriage brings: it relates to the hardships of marriage or obtaining a wife.

This is why I argue and will continue to argue, that if you are going to speak on African languages, you have to know the culture, the cosmology and the context associated with the terms under examination; otherwise you will always misinterpret something because one does not have a poetic ear.

African words always convey some deeper understanding of the phenomena the words are associated with. By staying on the surface level we will always miss what is really being said and this is what happens on a consistent basis by those who swear they know more about African languages than African people. So in regards to the various usages of KM all across Africa and trying to narrow it down to one definition, outside of its cultural, spiritual context, one will ALWAYS miss why the Wolof KEM and the Egyptian KHM/KM and the Greek KAUMA and the Mbochi IKAMA and in the Bambara KAMI and in the Dravidian KAMMI and GEM-GYM in the Dogon are all cognate terms. Anyone claiming that they are not the same word and concepts isn't serious and doesn't understand African people. If one doesn't understand that words (especially nouns) in African languages are sentences, then one will not be able to read Egyptian and therefore couldn't accurately reconstruct a proto form of the language to save their life. This is how one missed -anza as a root for lake chasing a "proto" form.

These are not points one can just dismiss and in order to counter these notions, brought about by African people, one would have to find primary documentation from a vast resource pool, created by African people to counter the claims made by the majority of African authors concerning the nature of their languages to date. I await such a feat.

Following our appeal for more support, we want to thank Ms Teresia Kanyenya for send via Mpesa Kshs 2,000.00 to support our efforts with the Komarock Community Arboretum. Teresia called me all the way from Isiolo at 14.09hrs and told me that they are working on a similar project in Isiolo. And that she was impressed with what she saw.

Thank you very much Teresia.

Her concern was the same; can we come together as Kenyans and help make a difference.

There are more people who saw the photos that we posted and truly confirmed that at KCDN we have surely Moved From Talking to Tasking. We need all your collective support to enable it.

If you believe that we are doing a good job, say it and if you can, join us. Your support will let more Kenyans see the need to Stop Talking and start Tasking. It is time we moved on.

If you want to support us financially, reach us via Mpesa on 0724 365 557, via Western Union Money Transfer, via MoneyGram, or cash transfer to our account. We will give you the details.

Sincerely, we cannot do it without you.

Komarock Community Arboretum 5th September 2009

On 5th September 2009, we all converged at Komarock to clean the Komarock Canal and plant trees along the same Canal. And what a show it was? We were sharing a comprehensive action and report with our strategic partners.

Besides KCDN and the KCDN Team, we had Mr. Robert Mutuma from the Eco Challenge [Total Kenya Ltd], Ms Anne Kagumba, the CAO City Inspectorate, Mr. Reginald Okumu from Tribe Kenya Initiative and formerly, chairman of the Institution of Surveyors of Kenya, Ms Grace Wanjiru, Divisional Commander, City Inspectorate Embakasi Division, Mr. Peter Kariuki, Ward Manager Komarock Ward, Ms Mellen Kinaru, Secretary General Komarock Residents Association, Mr. Elijah Kombo [PhD Talking], Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite, Friends of KCDN and many parents/guardians and children.

On behalf of KCDN, I must thank Total Kenya Ltd for having enabled us to make this day a success. Besides giving us 1,000 seedlings for the event, they gave us Kshs 20,000.00 to enable our logistics. We must also thank Bishop Dr Julius Mbagaya, President of the Baptist Convention for sending to us Kshs 3,000.00, Ms Arinolah Elizabeth-Nite, Kshs 2,000.00, Mr. Otieno R Sungu Kshs 2,000.00 and Mr. Reginald Okumu Kshs 1,000.00.

We must also thank Komarocks Residents Association and the parents in the KCDN Child Support Initiative for turning up in large numbers. We had close to 700 parents in the KCDN Initiative taking part. Special mention must be made of the City Council of Nairobi through the Ward Manager Mr. Kariuki who availed staff and equipment to enable the clean up exercise to be a success.

This was the first step into making the Canal a Community Arboretum. We have a lot in our hands now, and we will appeal to several Friends to come on board and help us. We will engage 10 personnel to ensure that the seedlings are watered and that the grounds are made into what we envisage. This will cost us Kshs 5,000.00 per day, and we only appeal to more Friends, Institutions and individuals, to come on board and help us out. We were sharing a comprehensive plan of action and report with our strategic partners led by Total Kenya Ltd.

We will invite the companies to take charge of only 100 metres of the canal and help in our efforts at Environmental Conservation. We will also invite willing individuals to help as much as they can.

In the next 6 months we want to show case what partnership can achieve for us, and we invite your support to help turn this mass of a mess into Komarock Community Arboretum. In this appeal, we will work closely with Eco Challenge, Friends of Eco Challenge and the City Council of Nairobi to ensure our dream becomes a reality. This dream includes a well done landscape with trees and golden showers, seats at the Arboretum, which Mr. Reginald Okumu has promised to contribute to, a public toilet, a library and much more.

If you are willing to work with us in this programme, kindly get in touch with us through the Eco Challenge Team at Total Kenya Ltd, or reach out to the undersigned. We make public all the support that we get.

Many thanks to all of you.

Asar, just a quick thought.

An interesting read, connecting Heru with Zulu. Perhaps this might be useful to consider. The Indo-European word for Sun is interesting as its etymology seems to lie further down South. In Zulu and other Southern-Bantu languages, SA means to dawn, become light, become morning. It is for this very reason the Kiswahili-Bantu word Saa means time. Moreover we have the word SANA from Tsonga-Bantu which means a ray of sun, sunbeam, or a burst of light or sunshine or reflected brightness. Tsonga-Bantu SANA obviously derived from SA is similar to Kiswahili-Bantu CHANA or TANA. These words mean sun in Proto-Bantu. It does appear that the Indo-European word for sun has its lexical cognate in the languages of Southern Africa.

To be further analysed.

Due to the recent post on African Classical History concerning Robert K. G. Temple's book THE Sirius Mystery, I wanted to lend support to Temple's notion that the Greek God Helios (the sun) derives from the Egyptian god-force HERU. In an earlier email I postulated that the Indo-European words from the Sun could have derived from the Egyptian word HERU. I also posited that the word HERU is the source of the word ZULU. So I decided to expand that aspect of the previous email/paper and am providing it as a download for your critique.

| 29779|2009-09-07 09:49:20|Asar Imhotep|Re: Heru, Zulu and the Greek Helios|

What's being revealed here lends support to the notion that the earliest settlers to become the "Indo-Europeans" were in fact Black African people. Because by comparative standards, two unrelated languages shouldn't have the same word for sun. In many of Obenga's works he disassociates the various words for sun (sol, sunne, helios) from any African language because he is comparing Sol with Ra(re). From my research, the actual term Ra isn't referring to the sun, but again, the light from the sun; and more specifically "white light." From being in priestly circles, what is being alluded to is the masculine nature of light. Masculine because it propagates forward forever into eternity (in a "phallus" way).

This is standard interpretation all across Africa. By understanding this concept we can understand how in Yoruba Obatala (King of White Light) is Ra (ala) AND Osiris in the Egyptian. We know that the 'god' Khepera is another form of Ra. By comparison the Yoruba word A-Ke-Bi-Ala (kh-p-ra) is a praise name for Obatala.

A - Kη- B̃-

- Praise name for the Spirit of the King of White Cloth (Obŵlŵ meaning, "Radiant White."

Here we see the term Ra (ala) is referring to the light and not the sun. It speaks to the sun's illuminating essence. Everywhere there is "ra" it means light (white) and not the sun. The same with Heru (Zulu, Osoro, etc.) it is the light from the sun that is being referred to. And in this case it seems to be more expansive as it can refer to anything that pierces and traverses the heavens: light just being one such phenomenon. So your rendering of SA meaning "to become dawn, to become light, to become morning" would in many respects keeping with this tradition. We know in special cases R has become S in many languages. This has been the case in the Germanic languages:

E.g. Gothic, mā [mʰʰza] "greater" (English more, Dutch meer, German mehr, Swedish mer) ~ mā [mʰʰs] "more, rather".

More research may or may not reveal a connection between SA and RA (ala). We know the symbol for Ra meant time in the Egyptian. For those familiar with modern Astrophysics will understand how important the notion of light is to the formation of time (change). This is expressed in all African cosmologies. It should be noted as well that Time and Space are one, known in Egypt as AT (moment) and TA (space) (TA also means time as well). In Zulu it is known as UMKATI (space) and ISIKATI (time).

I'm weary on some proto-forms that try to ascertain meaning of key African concepts because they are rarely, if ever, done on the basis of African philosophical concepts and methods for articulating language.

africanclassicalhistory@yahoogroups.co.uk

To believe what GORE is saying you would have to suspend the belief that although the Greeks and Egyptians had contact with each other, the Greeks being initiated by Egyptians, and some spiritual concepts were ultimately adopted into the Greek spiritual system, that the Greeks and the Egyptians didn't speak to each other; that they only communicated through pictures and sign language.

We would also have to suspend the belief that the Egyptians know more about their history than we do. That the Egyptians were lying when they said some conquering Shemsu Herw kings took over what is now Egypt and we would have to believe that no body was occupying any of the lands that the so called conquerors conquered. You can't conquer a land (unite two lands) if there is no body there to conquer. With that bit of common sense out of the way, GORE has to answer how is it that the conquering southerners that created pharaonic Egypt allowed all of the nomes to keep their 'gods' and traditions, but these same people didn't keep their languages and voluntarily decided to adopt the 'Egyptian' language because it was so much more better than theirs.

In other words, we are to believe that the Egyptian language is actually a monolithic language, that none of the native vocabulary made it into the indigenous script. This same logic would deny the obvious African words used in modern English. He admitted he doesn't know much about the Egyptian language and it shows. If he did, he can see how the Egyptian script patterns exactly like the Yoruba method of constructing concepts. I mentioned before in a previous response the following renderings of Oludumare:

1. Olodu-Omo-Ere. The supreme one, offspring of the boa.
2. Olodu-Ma-Re. The supreme one, who remains constant.
3. Olodu Mo Are. The supreme one, wearing the crown
4. Olodu Kari. The perfect one.
5. Oludumare. The one to whom I must return.

Notice how the same word is rendered differently on the consonants? If we were to write this in the Egyptian script, all we would see is ldmr (actually rdmr). The only exception would be the K in OluduKari. I didn't even add Dr. Epega's rendering of Oludumare as "owner of the everlasting odus," or "the being that expands or moves forward forever." All of these renderings refer to the same concept, but have different applications. This same convention exist in the ancient Egyptian. For the consonents NKH which is given as ANKH has various meanings and applications:

1. ankh - swear, oath
2. ankh - person
3. ankh - captive
4. ankh - garland
5. ankh - mirror
6. ankhw - provisions
7. ankhw - blocks
8. ankhw - the living

These are not the same words and are not pronounced the same. I tend to agree with Ra Un Nefer's postulation that aspects of the language were tonal and here is his reason why:

1. a-au-au - grave, tomb
2. a-au-au - to come
3. a-au-au - to slumber, sleep
4. a-au-au - to punish, to do harm
5. a-au-au - to bespatter, to make a charge against
6. a-au-au - foreign interpreter

You have to explain how an ancient Egyptian is going to know the difference in terms, if all of the words sound alike. One would reply that the context would let us know what is meant. This wouldn't be the case if all of the words in the sentence could be rendered another word. In other words, in conversation no one has time to try and figure out the "context" of each word as it is being said. That is ineffecient and makes communication impossible. In Twi one would say Me Ba to mean "my son" when the Ba is accented. When the Me is accented the phrase means "I (am) going."

This is the major feature in African languages. It's the intonation that makes the difference. This is why the Egyptians never abandoned the script. They knew more about African linguistics than modern linguists. Their reason and method was practical, not for argumentation. They understood that the majority of the African languages at their heart are mono-syllabic and by agglutinating words we can bring about greater meaning. To do an accurate "proto" form of any of the African languages, you have to break it down to its mono-syllabic form. Otherwise you miss how the word came to be. As Jaheinz noted, "Not only are the Yoruba highly conscious of the meaning of names, writes Beier, but they also like to interpret each word they use. They believe that every word is really a sentence that has been contracted through a series of elisions into a single word."

Time and time again we have demonstrated this feature in Egyptian and this is the key to understanding the Egyptian language. Awo Fatumbi in his Litergical Dictionary of Ifa states the following which I think is key to understanding Egyptian, by way of Yoruba.

"Olatunde Sproye in his book Yoruba without Tears states there are one hundred and twenty-six combinations of vowels and consonants used as the basis for the Yoruba Language.

ba be bi bo bu da de di do du fa fe fi fo fo fu ga ge gi go gu gba gbe gbi gbo gbu ha he hi ho hu ja je ji jo ju ka ke ki ko ku la le li lo lu ma me mi mo mu na ne ne ni no nu pa pe pi po pu ra re ri ro ru sa se si so su ta te ti to tu wa we wi wo wo wu ya ye yi yo yu

All Yoruba words are a combination of these fundamental sounds. One of the rules of Yoruba language construction is that portions of a word can be doubled for a change in emphasis, for example; ba (expansive power) baba (father) babagba or baba baba (grandfather). Doubling a word refers to its source or parent, for example Dada (Spirit of Vegetation) would be the parent of da (create). Repeating the word da (create) suggests recreation or the power of vegetation to continuously go through the process of birth, growth, death and rebirth."

Notice there is a philosophy behind the method. Words in African languages are conscious constructions and anyone who attempts to apply meaning outside of its philosophical context will always miss the point and never "get it."

I am still awaiting on his explanation on why Gore thinks Egypt was a mono-language society when the Egyptians themselves said they were not.

Dr Winters: This phenomena can easily be explained through nativisation. The process of a foreign word is nativized by speakers once they adopt a new language.

This phenomena can easily be explained through nativisation. The process of a foreign word is nativized by speakers once they adopt a new language.

Gore you make it appear that Indo-European languages are easy to study and that a one-to-one correspondence between IE terms . This not necessarily the case. Dr. Anna Morpurgo Davies, has made it clear that "less than 40% of the words with Indo-European etymology". According to Dr. Davies, 52.2 % of the Greek terms in Dictionnaire Etymologique de la langue Grecque (1968) have an unknown etymology. The mixed nature of the Greek language results from the early settlement of the Aegean from Africa. Given the linguistic history for ancient Greece your conclusions may actua relationship between Egyptian and Greek and make Asar's discussion of an of some Greek words valid. This validity for an Egyptian origin for some Greeks supported by the evidence that Egyptians formerly lived in Greece. The Egyptians established many colonies in ancient Europe. The Egyptians called Melampodes or "Blackfeet". The Egyptians were also called Danaans in Greek history. According to Hyainus in Fabula, and Apollonius Rhodius when the Danaans came they were a combination of diverse African tribes. When the Danaans came to Greece they took away part of Argolis from the Canaan. Danaans took the Mysteries of Themoporia and the oracle of Dodona to Greece. This supported by the discovery of an inscribed stone in the Peloponnese that had Egyptian it dating to the Vth Dynasty of Egypt. Greek traditions speak of Egyptian colonies Cecrops who settled Atica, Danaus the brother of Aegyptus was the founder of Aegyptus is alleged to have taught the Greeks agriculture and metallurgy Cecil Torr in Memphis and Mycenae , discussed the inscriptions of Amemhotep from Mycenaean tomb at Ialysos in Rhodes and an 18th Dynasty scarab dating to the same a result of the discovery of these artifacts Torr speculated that there were relations Egypt and Greece between 1271 and 850 B.C. The discovery of Torr was only the tip of the iceberg. Since the discovery of these 19th Century, archaeological evidence of Egyptians in Greece during the 2nd millennium also been reported by J.D.S. Pendlebury, William A. Ward, and S.W. Manning . Pendlebury provides a detailed discussion of the Egyptian material found at Lacom Thebes in Boeotia, and Athens. Pendlebury like Torr, believes that there were close between Greece and Egypt between the 12th and 7th centuries B.C. Pendlebury's Aegyptiaca, has been excellently followed up by N. J. Skon Jedele, in dissertation on Egyptian artifacts found in Greece. This dissertation provides even more examples of Egyptian artifacts found in Greece than those recorded by Pendlebury years ago. Manning gives a well balanced discussion of the Egyptian material found in the Aegean dating between the Old Kingdom and Dynasties 10 and 11. The work of Hankey and indicate that there is archaeological evidence for Egyptians in ancient Greece, contrary false claims of Lefkowitz in Not Out of Africa.

The textual and archaeological evidence supports an Egyptian presence in Greece and the view IE speaking Greeks and Egyptians formerly lived in intimate contact. Contact would have promoted bilingualism since Egyptian civilization had much to offer to Greeks. During a period of bilingualism IE speaking Greeks probably adopted many Egyptian culture items. Terms which betry the Egyptian rather than Greek origin for select Greek words leads me to believe that Asar's suggestion that Helios may be derived from Egyptian solid linguistic, historical and archaeological grounds given the fact that much of language is not IE in origin.

This is from a book called The Sirius Mystery by Robert K G Temple (De is a book of varying scholarly strength and conclusions. An example of a r and conclusion can be seen on p116 (2nd paragraph)where we read:

"Now we recall that in Egyptian the letter `l` and the letter `r` are entirely in have the same hieroglyph. Consequently, Heru could just as reliably be He and puts a Greek ending on it one gets Helios! And the same word means Egyptian religion (early) and the Greek religion (early)."

He is right in identifying that the words sound similar. He is also right in s Heli-os is an ending and not part of the root. He is even right in deducing t falcon or hawk deity has very obvious solar aspects in Egyptian religion. I is correct to say the sounds for `l` and `r` are interchangeable in Egyptian b enough about the Egyptian language. Was he right to put forward the theor between Heli-os and Heru? I would say yes. That`s not the same as saying

But the main problem with his theory is it shows no awareness of the Indo-E the cognates for this very word `sun` that can be shown to have recurrent o this is something we can demonstrate with the small knowledge of Greek t We know a `hexagon` has six sides and we know a `hexagesimal` system i based on the number `six`. It takes little imagination to conclude the Greek something like `hex-`. The Latin for `six` was `sex`. All these words look l words descended from the same ancestral word in an ancestral language. In European .

This means the Greek `h` corresponds to the English `s` at the beginning o `s` corresponds to the English `s`. We would expect English words beginn cognates in Latin also beginning with `s` but to have cognates in Greek beg recap English `s` = Latin `s` = Greek `h`. Let`s put this to the test:

The English word `sun` in Latin is `sol`. So far so good. The Greek word i fits the pattern we would expect if the English, Latin and Greek words were confirm this by comparing the word for the English `seven` with Latin `sep` `hepta`. So we have three examples of English `s` = Latin `s` = Greek `h`. highly unlikely to occur by chance. These patterns are used to reconstruct ancestor language from which English, Latin and Greek are all descended.

The patterns, however, are fatal for the theory that the Greek Helios derives from Heru. We could, however, still try to argue that the Egyptians reached the speakers and passed the word to them. I do not know what the reconstructed ancestor word is but from what I know of how sounds develop the ancestor word cannot begin with an `*h`. This means even if we tried to pursue that line of argument we have to explain why the Proto-Indo-European word for `sun`, if borrowed, sounds less like Heru than the Greek descended word thousands of years later. This is of what we would expect.

It would be interesting to subject some of Bernal's evidence to the same tests.

Greetings Gore

This going back and forth leads to nowhere because you ignore my central premise and you argue irrelevant information as if it has any bearing on my thesis. So to help you to understand where I am coming from and where my research is focused, I need you to answer a couple of questions for me. I don't need any nonsense about what European anthropologists have to say about anything. I want your explanation; demonstrate for me independent thought.

Okay, let's begin. Here are my basic arguments:

1. By the Egyptians own records, various tribes already existed all along the Nile before unification.
2. The archeological record supports this testimony
3. Egyptian records state that Egypt became a political entity through war
4. Unlike European conquerors of later times, the ruling Egyptians allowed the people in each nome to keep their culture, customs and ancestral deities.
5. This practice was extended to the 'Middle East' after the 18th dynasty conquests in to that area
6. Not only that, the ruling 'Egyptians' incorporated many of the local customs, rituals and deities into the main pantheon and culture of political Egypt
7. With that in mind, it would be erroneous to think for a second that local vocabulary did not make it into the grander lexical pool today called the 'Egyptian language.'
8. By the Egyptians own records, many wars were fought over territory by local and in later times, foreign powers
9. By various anthropological and geological accounts, many droughts occurred during pharaonic times.
10. Two things happen during war and famine: people migrate or die

11. There are no written records in history that would suggest all of the ancient Egyptians died and no longer exist
12. Therefore, we have to ask ourselves some critical questions. How many indigenous Egyptians stayed and how many fled during times of upheaval and famine?
13. When it comes to the question of migrations, where did they move to? Did they go south into Ethiopia, Sudan and Kenya? Did they go into West Africa? Did they migrate to North Africa? Did they all migrate in the direction of their opposition in the Middle East and into Europe?
14. We know human beings migrate during times of war. Some are lost in the war, others make it out. Some traditions are kept, some are not in the new locations.
15. With that said, how can we identify the remnants of the people who escaped in various times of the 3000 year political history of Egypt?
16. One tool is language. The other is through signs and symbols.
17. We know that Egypt was not a monolingual society, so it is impossible to trace an exact match anywhere on the planet for a full cognate language for ancient Egyptian. This is why it consider a so-called 'isolate' in the so-called Afro-Asiatic family of languages.

With these basic assumptions, Gore, I would like for you to explain to me the following: Why do we find these same symbols across Africa?

Dogon Womb of all Signs and developmental path of life and the sun

Yoruba path of Odu and "four moments of the sun"

Kongo "four moments of the sun"

Aristotle's Four Humor's

Egyptian Diagram of Opposites

Egyptian "four moments of the sun"

I can demonstrate this same symbolic philosophy all over the continent, but we're going to keep this simple. How do you account for the same symbol, with the same meaning and same purpose and function in Egypt, Kongo, Mali, Nigeria and ancient Greece? Before you even think that it is "possible" by some supernatural "chance correspondence," to say that each one of these cultures could have thought of these symbols, with the same function, the same purpose and iconography independently and on their own, is like saying it is also possible for the Khoisan to independently invent the Autobots logo and associate it with the same story line..

Then after you successfully explain that, I want you to explain how these symbols ended up in the ancient writing scripts of west Africans?

Igbo Script and Egyptian

Mande Script and Egyptian

Before we can start dealing with your questions of linguistics and what you think I don't know, I need you to explain (or explain away or avoid like you usually do) these "symbolic cognates" in these various regions of the continent. Tell me how each of these major cultures independently came up with these signs and symbols. From your answer I will be able to gauge your symbolic literacy and whether you even bothered to study African culture and philosophy. I will be able to see if you get all of your information from foreign anthropologists or do you actually engage with African people in living African systems.

And please, no skating around the questions. Just answer them and if you don't know, say you don't know. I look forward to your reply. And I will address your other messages as well.

Wanted to share this with the group. Some of his premises are in alignment with other African teachings and works written by African people. Some parts of his analysis, from his Egyptian informant Dr. Abd'El Hakim Awyan I have to question. From what I can gather about Awyan is that he is a descendant of later comers, probably during the Hellenic era who retained some of the teachings. This I can tell by the vocabulary he uses. I have Mehler's second book, and read most of his first. Good general premise. What upsets me however is he thinks him and Awyan actually started a new study called "Kemetology." None-the-less, I think it is worth a peep and a more critical assessment will be done in the near future. But here is the link to the video lecture on Google Video

Summary of Video

Egyptologist Stephen S. Mehler has spent over 30 years researching the answers to these questions: Was there a advanced prehistoric civilization in ancient Egypt? Who were the people who built the great pyramids? Who carved the Great Sphinx? Did the pyramids serve as energy devices and not as tombs for kings? Mahler believes the answers are "Yes!" An indigenous oral tradition still exists in Egypt, he has been able to uncover and study it with the help of a living master of this tradition, Abd'El Hakim Awyan. He has also been given permission to share these teachings -presented heretofore in fragments by other researchers-to the Western World, teachings that unfold a whole new understanding of ancient Egypt.

Talk about putting the fox in charge of the hen house

President Obama recently selected Michael Taylor, former chief lobbyist for Monsanto, as the new food safety czar at the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA).

Think about that: The former lawyer and lobbyist for the company that manufactured Agent Orange will now make decisions about our nations food supply.

Taylor is the man most responsible for getting recombinant bovine growth hormone (rbGH) approved for use in dairy cows. Thats the stuff that fattens the cows to dangerously obese sizes, getting them ready for slaughter faster (By the way Monsanto produces the growth hormone).

|

The Mau Circus 8th September 2009

For a long time now, we have been discussing the Mau issue.

It all started when evidence of the destruction could not be down played anymore. The rivers were drying up; the cattle were dying for lack of water; our taps became dry for lack of water; KPLC started rationing power because they did not have water in their dams; our animals all migrated to other countries because we did not have water; Even the Wildebeests did not do their yearly tricks this year.

All these because Mau had been invaded and those who sold Mau off could not hide the ramifications of their act any more. We could all see for ourselves the effects of their rule.

But as all this happen, our leaders are busy planning for a kill; a kill out of our plight. As they do always, they know we are a Talking Nation, and they know how to deal with us, because they know we are gullible.

Have you paused for a while to ask yourself why the Government wants Kshs 38 Billion to effect evictions on Mau?

To the Government, Kshs 38 Billion is some small money. Just take this walk down with me so that we can justify this Kshs 38 Billion which the Government wants to beg for as Kenyans are still living in camps; as more Kenyans go hungry because our politicians sold all our strategic grain reserves;

1] The police force that we will use to effect the Mau evictions are people in the pay roll of the government as we speak. They will not be new recruits and as such, they need no new considerations. They will just be doing what we pay them to do.

2] The officers tasked with handling this job are government employees. They need no new pay packages besides what they are earning currently. They will be doing what we are paying them to do.

3] The Rangers who will protect the forest after the evictions are people already working for the government. They will need no new pay to enable them do what we are already paying them to do.

4] The Ministry staff from the Ministry of Environment, Forestry, Lands, Water, Office of the Prime Minister and Office of the President are people already in employment. They will be doing what we are paying them to do.

5] The seedlings that we need to re plant at Mau should come from the Kenya Forestry Research Institute, a government body with personnel in employment as we speak. If they have failed in their mandate to do their work, we have many Friends of the Environment who are willing to give seedlings for free.

6] The lawyers who will be looking at the documents if need be are from the State Law Office, and they are officers already in our employment.

I do not need to list more of the basics. My concern is simple; what do we need this Kshs 38 Billion for if all the key players are people or institutions that we are already funding through the exchequer? We do not need Kshs 38 Billion to save Mau. It is the politicians that need this money to serve themselves.

What do we need this money for? Kenya is the only country where a billion makes no sense. They talk of a billion as if it was some piece of bread, and they care less, for we are gullible. Soon they will outgrow the billion syndrome and move to trillion, and all commissions and agencies they create to mint money will have their budgets in trillion.

Lastly, if someone causes you all this kind of suffering, do you say thank you to them by paying them off? I join Hon Bill Ole Ntimama in demanding action, action now and no payment to these people.

They can go back to where they came from.

Odhiambo T Oketch

Hieroglyphic inscriptions exist for a king called /SArk/, which _may_ have been the king identified in the Ptolemaic period by Manetho as 'Salitis' (as we don't have Manetho's original work (we know it only from Josephus), we don't know from which source he acquired the name "Salitis"). Note the various problems with how the throne name, /sxai.n-ra/ has been attributed to more than one king.

Nefertiti's association with Akhenaten is clear from the repeated representations of the two together and the fact she is consistently referred to as the /Hmt nsw wrt/ "Great Royal Wife (of the king)" in such representations. In addition, she possesses the title of /Hmt nsw wrt mrt.f/ "Great Royal Wife (of the king) whom he loves", /Hmt nsw aA.t/ "Great Wife of the King" and /Hmt nsw aA.t mrt.f/ "Great Wife of the King whom he loves", all in reference to Akhenaten.

> IF an Egyptologist who actually has factual knowledge that any said information actually does exist in the hieroglyphs, they can give THE SOURCE AND THE SPECIFIC LINE WHERE THAT INFORMATION EXISTS.

I know of no Egyptologist who wouldn't do this. Most glyphs and transliterations are published in just about every Egyptological article, which are very citeable. Perhaps you should read more.

All of the above citations give imagery of the actual glyphs, citing their location and reproducing the images of the wall reliefs and inscriptions themselves. If you have not bothered to research it (and reading about it on the Internet is not research overall, BTW), you cannot claim that it has never been thoroughly published as to where these claims come from.

All of the above cite where every inscription can be found, in some cases, reproduce the inscription in glyphs (Sethe's works do this, as well as Helck, Schafer and Grapow), and then provide transliteration and translations.

There are also an additional 150+ other publications containing various Urkunden reproductions and translations, according to the Annual Egyptological Bibliography (although now there are probably more, since the version I have of the AEB ends for year ending 1997).

If you want to know where an inscriptions is, what it reads, etc., get a copy of the appropriate _Urkunden_.

Why recreate the wheel?

There is already a version of Egyptian glyph transliteration, to be found here

<<http://www.geocities.com/TimesSquare/Alley/4482/EEFTransl.html>>, which is from the Egyptologists Electronic Forum (EEF), open for all to read and use. In Egyptological terms, it's called "Maneul de Codage."

The way to use Manuel de Codage, which is the ASCII version of this transliteration, can be found here:

(Manuel de Codage for every glyph sign)

Glyphs are already numbered under the Gardiner sign list system, which contains over 6500 glyphs. There are any number of computer software programs which can reproduce glyphs effectively using this sign lists system, including WinGlyph (Pro and Basic), MacScribe, Visual Glyph, and so on.

Translation-Communication

I often read there were 'Semitic words' written by the ancient Egyptians?

The use of the word Semite is mostly used to identify Jews. The ramification being they are descendants of an old guy named Shem.

We have all had thousands of ancestors from different families or nationalities.

No one is an exclusive descendant of any specific ancestor but they are a composite of every ancestor they ever came from.

=====

Semite definition associated with the bible:

Semites

Encyclopedia: Semites, term first used toward the end of the 18th century for peoples listed in the Bible (see Genesis 10:21-32) as descended from Shem, the eldest son of the biblical patriarch Noah.

Today, however, the term Semite is a linguistic, not a racial, classification; it refers to peoples who spoke or speak any of the Semitic languages. Ancient peoples grouped under this term include those who inhabited Aram, Assyria, Babylonia, Canaan (including the Hebrews), and Phoenicia. Among modern peoples speaking Semitic languages are the Arabs and Jews, particularly in Israel.

The original homeland of the Semites is not definitely known. Scholars think it probably was in southwestern Asia, and some even locate it specifically in Arabia. Evidence uncovered by archaeologists indicates that Semitic-speaking peoples were scattered over Mesopotamia before the establishment of urban culture there; and it is thought that waves of Semitic nomads, beginning presumably in prehistoric times, successively swept over the deserts westward into the Fertile Crescent. Today, the Semitic-speaking peoples (chiefly Arabs) are concentrated in the Middle East and Northern Africa. (Egypt)

Their influence has been extended by the Arabs into Africa south of the Sahara and eastward to the subcontinent of India.

Microsoft Encarta Encyclopedia 2004. 1993-2003 Microsoft Corporation. All rights reserved.

According to the bible the Israelites came from Chaldeans (ancient Iraqis) and they produced their descendants with Ham such as Ammonites, Amorites, Amorites, Ashdod, Canaanites, Egyptians, Hittites, Hivites, Jebusites, Midianites, Moabites, Perizzites.. and MORE !

The Israelites could no more be Semites than they could be Hamites

The Israelites could not be a different race than any other Asians they encountered, because the Israelites were NOTHING BUT A COMPOSITE of the other Asians they encountered.

Semite definition of a people which spoke a language of the near east.

The term Semite is a linguistic; it refers to peoples who spoke or speak any of the Semitic languages. Ancient peoples grouped under this term include those who inhabited Aram, Assyria, Babylonia, Canaan (including the Hebrews), and Phoenicia. Among modern peoples speaking Semitic languages are the Arabs

The linguistic definition of the word Semite is abstract. The population included in this definition of Semites, spoke dozens of DIFFERENT LANGUAGES.

This term Semite is a SET and with in the set were a multitude of SUBSETS ... People who spoke a 'Semitic language' in one are could not understand those who spoke a 'Semitic language in another area'.

Using the word Semite to identify any middle east tribe/empire is like saying the boy busted my balloon, when there are a hundred boys in the play ground.

When any authors write the Egyptians wrote Semitic words, ask them which of dozens of Semitic languages do you mean?

The only possible meaning of Semitic language would be some unidentified language of some unidentified population in the middle east.

=====

Names = descriptions ... meanings

In early Europe the first/last name format was not used. Like in the middle east, names had meanings.

Miller.. this person worked as a Miller

Smith.. black smith

It is quite fun to see what people named themselves.

Native Americans also used descriptions as their names. How many names could there be? How many ideas could people conceive to identify themselves with?

If you read things such as the bible, you can look to see names given. Israel had 12 sons and they were all given different names. Some names could be repeated but others were just names given as a description.

I Samuel 4:20-22 Ichabod

How many Egyptians existed after the first 1000 years? Any one who has ever done a family tree study understands the explosive rate of population increase in a few generations.

Life expectancy would have little impact. If the life expectancy was only 35 years old, by that time women would have produced their children.

No condoms, no birth control, no women's lib. How many Egyptians existed after 1000 years?

The idea that these millions of Egyptians would have conformed and all taken pat names like modern day populations, is a stretch of the imagination.

Look at all the names of the Pharaohs ... an array of names.

Names

of ancient times did not take on the form of modern day names. Names were words that had some meaning.

What is a Semitic, European, Canaanite or Arabic name? .. the "Arabic name" below sounds something like Wada-gal-me-le (to me)

Clicking on the pic will play the girl's "Arabic name"

It is an MP3 file. It will take a few seconds if you have a dial up connection.

You can also go to the site where I have the sound file stored.

If you were to place this girl's name on your wall for visitors to see, would it be an "Arabic name"

=====

Translation is not the replacement of words in another language with words in your own language.

Communication is the use of signs, sounds or symbols to render information.

Some times it takes more words in one language to present the same information than the words needed in another language.

Translation is the rendering of meanings (not words) from one language to another.

A question we can begin with is, were the Egyptians communicating with any foreigners. Could the Egyptians understand what foreigners were saying?

* IF the Egyptians could not/did communicate with any foreigners, what they called those foreigners was Egyptian words, with Egyptian meanings... this would blow the assertion that these were "Semitic names".

* If the Egyptians could/did communicate with foreigners to communicate information TO Egyptians, then they would have used Egyptian words/meanings to write on their walls.

The Egyptians did not write in their tombs with the intent of Hittites, Canaanites or Phoenicians to come in and read.

What the Egyptians wrote in hieroglyphics, was written to communicate information to Egyptians.

Any names the Egyptians wrote on their walls, was what it meant to Egyptians who read it.

If you were could communicate with one who spoke Arabic, and knew what the word meant, to identify her name to your English speaking friends, you would use the text of the English that held the meaning in English.

On your wall you would exchange the Arabic for the English text, Beautiful Rose and you would change the pronunciation Wada-gal-me-le with Beautiful Rose.

Names in ancient times had specific meanings. If any foreigner was named, Strong Bull, Wise Owl, Cunning Jackal or Happy Hippo... when the Egyptians wrote it on their walls, it would have Hieroglyphic words that had Egyptian meanings.

The Egyptians used hieroglyphic text to write "Asiatic/Semitic words" NO, the Egyptians used hieroglyphic text to write Egyptian words to communicate information TO Egyptians.

This is great. Let us mobilize Kenyans to take charge of our Environment.

We all know our politicians are in it for the money. Let us shame them by demanding accountability. Like they want Kshs 38 Billion for Mau, let them explain to us what this money will do.

We cannot pretend to be paying people who are already in the payroll of our government, institutions that are already being funded from the Exchequer.

The politicians are in big business with Mau, not to conserve her heritage, but to mint mega bucks out of it.

Too much for the zeal with environmental conservation from these guys.

WELCOME TO SLUM CLEAN UP EXERCISE

Organized by Bunge la Mwananchi and CHW/VHC Huruma

Date: 12th Septemeber 2009

Venue: meet at Huruma Sports ground

Bunge las Mwanchi Huruma/Mathare network in conjunction with CHW/VHC Huruma have organized a community cleanup campaign in Mathare slums. The cleanup exercise which shall bring together 300 households will involve: lessons on importance of clean environment, garbage collection and burning of the dirty and unclogging of sewerage ducts.

The cleanup activity is a tool being utilized by Bunge la Mwananchi to mobilize households and general community together to besides cleaning up, discuss issues of governance, accountability and the state of grassroot people. Before the cleanup activity we shall have workshop for 30-40 community mobilizers drawn from Mathare and Huruma slums on how to organize grassroots into public activism..

These community mobilisers are the ones whom we have used to mobilize the 300 household. From these households we estimate to bring together 600 community actors interested in leading in the public engagement to have better environment. We have also invited the Nairobi City Council to come and train us on how to handle garbage and sort it out.

The workshop will take place on 11th Sep 2009 starting at 9am to 5pm. The following day (12th September 2009) we shall congregate to demonstrate our desire for better environment for our children. The exercise will take 4 hours after which the participant shall congregate at Mathare Special School. At Mathare Special School we shall have an open forum where the people shall have a chance to dialogue on the kind of community they want and how the government can help them achieve that goal.

The views generated shall be documented and used as information for community organizing. Besides, the views generated and documented shall be sent to area Member of Parliament, the Provincial Administration and NGOs and civil society organizations.

We want to partner with you in this new strategy of organizing community for change. We have already received support of garbage bags, shovels, pangas, rakes and wheelbarrow from the Nairobi City Council. Our outstanding budgetary needs is estimated @ Kshs. 20,000/-broken down as follows: PA system @ 3000/-; generator@1000/-; communications@ 1000/-; tents@7000/-; seats@ 2000/-; and refreshments@ 6000/- (30/- per person x 600pple). The purpose of this letter is to request your kind support towards the budget and make this exercise a success. This can be either way by picking up an item on the budget or helping us with the budget as whole.

Thank you in advance for your considered support.

Yes you are correct about RA referring to the light of the sun. In fact the Kidigo-Bantu people of Tanzania have the word RA which means, to be bright, glitter, gleam, shine. This is equivalent to ng'aa or ng'ara in Kiswahili-Bantu.

Thus Ng'aa = RA. The two words give identical meanings although pronounced differently.

I am not familiar with Obenga's work on the sun. However I cannot understand his logic. He should have been the first one to have suggested that the Indo-European word for the sun is derived from SA, giving SANA.

Subject: Re: [Ta_Seti] Heru, Zulu and the Greek Helios

What's being revealed here lends support to the notion that the earliest settlers to become the "Indo-Europeans" were in fact Black African people. Because by comparative standards, two unrelated languages shouldn't have the same word for sun. In many of Obenga's works he disassociates the various words for sun (sol, sunne, helios) from any African language because he is comparing Sol with Ra(re). From my research, the actual term Ra isn't referring to the sun, but again, the light from the sun; and more specifically "white light." From being in priestly circles, what is being alluded to is the masculine nature of light. Masculine because it propagates forward forever into eternity (in a "phallus" way).

This is standard interpretation all across Africa. By understanding this concept we can understand how in Yoruba Obatala (King of White Light) is Ra (ala) AND Osiris in the Egyptian. We know that the 'god' Khepera is another form of Ra. By comparison the Yoruba word A-Ke-Bi-Ala (kh-p-ra) is a praise name for Obatala.

A - Kŋ- B̃-

- Praise name for the Spirit of the King of White Cloth (Obwli meaning, "Radiant White."

Here we see the term Ra (ala) is referring to the light and not the sun. It speaks to the sun's illuminating essence. Everywhere there is "ra" it means light (white) and not the sun. The same with Heru (Zulu, Osoro, etc.) it is the light from the sun that is being referred to. And in this case it seems to be more expansive as it can refer to anything that pierces and traverses the heavens: light just being one such phenomenon. So your rendering of SA meaning "to become dawn, to become light, to become morning" would in many respects keeping with this tradition. We know in special cases R has become S in many languages. This has been the case in the Germanic languages:

E.g. Gothic, mā [m??za] "greater" (English more, Dutch meer, German mehr, Swedish mer) ~ mā [m??s] "more, rather".

More research may or may not reveal a connection between SA and RA (ala). We know the symbol for Ra meant time in the Egyptian. For those familiar with modern Astrophysics will understand how important the notion of light is to the formation of time (change). This is expressed in all African cosmologies. It should be noted as well that Time and Space are one, known in Egypt as AT (moment) and TA (space) (TA also means time as well). In Zulu it is known as UMKATI (space) and ISIKATI (time).

I'm weary on some proto-forms that try to ascertain meaning of key African concepts because they are rarely, if ever, done on the basis of African philosophical concepts and methods for articulating language.

Subject: Re: [Ta_Seti] Heru, Zulu and the Greek Helios

Asar, just a quick thought.

An interesting read, connecting Heru with Zulu. Perhaps this might be useful to consider. The Indo-European word for Sun is interesting as its etymology seems to lie further down South. In Zulu and other Southern-Bantu languages, SA means to dawn, become light, become morning. It is for this very reason the Kiswahili-Bantu word Saa means time. Moreover we have the word SANA from Tsonga-Bantu which means a ray of sun, sunbeam, or a burst of light or sunshine or reflected brightness. Tsonga-Bantu SANA obviously derived from SA is similar to Kiswahili-Bantu CHANA or TANA. These words mean sun in Proto-Bantu. It does appear that the Indo-European word for sun has its lexical cognate in the languages of Southern Africa.

To be further analysed.

Peace Phamily

Due to the recent post on African Classical History concerning Robert K. G. Temple's book The Sirius Mystery, I wanted to lend support to Temple's notion that the Greek God Helios (the sun) derives from the Egyptian god-force HERU. In an earlier email I postulated that the Indo-European words from the Sun could have derived from the Egyptian word HERU. I also posited that the word HERU is the source of the word ZULU. So I decided to expand that aspect of the previous email/paper and am providing it as a download for your critique.

Yes you are correct about RA referring to the light of the sun. In fact the Kidigo-Bantu people of Tanzania have the word RA which means, to be bright, glitter, gleam, shine. This is equivalent to ng'aa or ng'ara in Kiswahili-Bantu.

Thus Ng'aa = RA. The two words give identical meanings although pronounced differently.

I am not familiar with Obenga's work on the sun. However I cannot understand his logic. He should have been the first one to have suggested that the Indo-European word for the sun is derived from SA, giving SANA.

What's being revealed here lends support to the notion that the earliest settlers to become the "Indo-Europeans" were in fact Black African people. Because by comparative standards, two unrelated languages shouldn't have the same word for sun. In many of Obenga's works he disassociates the various words for sun (sol, sunne, helios) from any African language because he is comparing Sol with Ra(re). From my research, the actual term Ra isn't referring to the sun, but again, the light from the sun; and more specifically "white light." From being in priestly circles, what is being alluded to is the masculine nature of light. Masculine because it propagates forward forever into eternity (in a "phallus" way).

This is standard interpretation all across Africa. By understanding this concept we can understand how in Yoruba Obatala (King of White Light) is Ra (ala) AND Osiris in the Egyptian. We know that the 'god' Khepera is another form of Ra. By comparison the Yoruba word A-Ke-Bi-Ala (kh-p-ra) is a praise name for Obatala.

|A - Kη- B-

- Praise name for the Spirit of the King of White Cloth (Obwɪl meaning, "Radiant White."

Here we see the term Ra (ala) is referring to the light and not the sun. It speaks to the sun's illuminating essence. Everywhere there is "ra" it means light (white) and not the sun. The same with Heru (Zulu, Osoro, etc.) it is the light from the sun that is being referred to. And in this case it seems to be more expansive as it can refer to anything that pierces and traverses the heavens: light just being one such phenomenon. So your rendering of SA meaning "to become dawn, to become light, to become morning" would in many respects keeping with this tradition. We know in special cases R has become S in many languages. This has been the case in the Germanic languages:

E.g. Gothic, mā [mʰʰza] "greater" (English more, Dutch meer, German mehr, Swedish mer) ~ m [mʰʰs] "more, rather".

More research may or may not reveal a connection between SA and RA (ala). We know the symbol for Ra meant time in the Egyptian. For those familiar with modern Astrophysics will understand how important the notion of light is to the formation of time (change). This is expressed in all African cosmologies. It should be noted as well that Time and Space are one, known in Egypt as AT (moment) and TA (space) (TA also means time as well). In Zulu it is known as UMKATI (space) and ISIKATI (time).

I'm weary on some proto-forms that try to ascertain meaning of key African concepts because they are rarely, if ever, done on the basis of African philosophical concepts and methods for articulating language.

Asar, just a quick thought.

An interesting read, connecting Heru with Zulu. Perhaps this might be useful to consider. The Indo-European word for Sun is interesting as its etymology seems to lie further down South. In Zulu and other Southern-Bantu languages, SA means to dawn, become light, become morning. It is for this very reason the Kiswahili-Bantu word Saa means time. Moreover we have the word SANA from Tsonga-Bantu which means a ray of sun, sunbeam, or a burst of light or sunshine or reflected brightness. Tsonga-Bantu SANA obviously derived from SA is similar to Kiswahili-Bantu CHANA or TANA. These words mean sun in Proto-Bantu. It does appear that the Indo-European word for sun has its lexical cognate in the languages of Southern Africa.

To be further analysed.

| 29798|2009-09-08 21:52:21|Asar Imhotep|Re: Heru, Zulu and the Greek Helios - Obenga on SUN|

This excerpt is taken from Theophile Obengas article Ancient Egyptian and Modern Yoruba: Phonetic Regularity in the ANKH journal #16 2007. This section compares the different words for sun in the African languages in comparison to the Afro-Asiatic family. He then isolates Indo-European.

*ra sun Egypto-African common stock

|                         |               |                               |

The sound change r-/l-/s- is well expected. For sure, there are no Afro-Asiatic cognate lexical items to be put on balance together with the linguistic reconstruction above. The so-called Afro-Asiatic Family is but an ideological and racist position. There is no scientific data to technically test Afro-Asiatic hypothesis.

Indeed, technically speaking, there is no one single scientific evidence of Afro-Asiatic Family, and linguistic data do not allow at all considering Afro-Asiatic as a linguistic possibility. The facts are plainly clear as possible:

Hieroglyphic inscriptions exist for a king called /SArk/, which _may_ have been the king identified in the Ptolemaic period by Manetho as 'Salitis' (as we don't have Manetho's original work (we know it only from Josephus), we don't know from which source he acquired the name "Salitis"). I know of no Egyptologist who wouldn't do this. Most glyphs and transliterations are published in just about every Egyptological article, which are very citeable. Perhaps you should read more.

All of the above citations give imagery of the actual glyphs, citing their location and reproducing the images of the wall reliefs and inscriptions themselves. If you have not bothered to research it (and reading about it on the Internet is not research overall, BTW), you cannot claim that it has never been thoroughly published as to where these claims come from.

Or perhaps you read poor resources: ever considered that?

Why recreate the wheel?

There is already a version of Egyptian glyph transliteration, to be found here <<http://www.geocities.com/TimesSquare/Alley/4482/EEFTransl.html>>, which is from the Egyptologists Electronic Forum (EEF), open for all to read and use. In Egyptological terms, it's called "Maneu de Codage."

The way to use Manuel de Codage, which is the ASCII version of this transliteration, can be found here:

<<http://www.catchpen ny.org/codage/>>

<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/ Manuel de Codage>

<[http://www.rostau.org.uk/AEgyptian -L/reference/ faulkner\_index.html](http://www.rostau.org.uk/AEgyptian-L/reference/ faulkner_index.html)>

(Manuel de Codage for every glyph sign)

Glyphs are already numbered under the Gardiner sign list system, which contains over 6500 glyphs. There are any number of computer software programs which can reproduce glyphs effectively using this sign lists system, including WinGlyph (Pro and Basic), MacScribe, Visual Glyph, and so on.

The sound change r-/l-/s- is well expected.....How?

I would like to see more examples of this sound change. I am in accord with with r-/l-/s-, but need enlightening about the /-s-. I cannot see how Obenga's Mbochi's word Mu-ese, the word for sun being related to Ra as the comparison shows. It seems to me there are two major roots which define words for the sun in Africa. The R root and S roots. I am of the opinion that the S root derived from Zulu-Bantu as SA, dawn, become light, become morning gave rise to SANA from Tsonga-Bantu which means a ray of sun, sunbeam, or a burst of light or sunshine or reflected brightness. This in turn is defined as SAA, the Kiswahili-Bantu word for time. One also sees the word in Luwale-Bantu derived from SANA as MU-SANA, meaning sunlight, daylight, daytime sun. MU is a prefix to SANA. Thus we have the following Bantu words for the sun derived from conceptual ideas of SA.

Le-Satsi, Sun, Southern-Soto-Bantu,

Ri-sase, Sun, Ekegusi-Bantu.....Similar to Mbochi MU-ESE??

Li-zazi, Sun, Silozi-Bantu

DAZI, Sun, Chitumbuka-Bantu (PS Does the DA remind one of the word DA-Y??)

As a further observation we have the word RANZI from Shona-Bantu meaning ray of sun at dawn, beam of light. We also have RANGA, or LANGA for sun in Southern Africa.

It seems highly likely that the word SA, SANA forms the etymology of the Indo-European words defining the sun in the following terms, SOL, SUNA, SOLAR, etc, etc

Question? Could the suffix L in SOL refer to the sky? If it does then perhaps the Lingala-Bantu word for sun could give us a clue, as the word for sun is defined as: the eye in the sky, LISO NA LOLA. LOLA means sky. Could the ending of the Indo-European word for sun, SO-L, be explained by using the L from LOLA? Just a thought.

To be investigated further.

This excerpt is taken from Theophile Obenga's article Ancient Egyptian and Modern Yoruba: Phonetic Regularity in the ANKH journal #16 2007. This section compares the different words for sun in the African languages in comparison to the Afro-Asiatic family. He then isolates Indo-European.

*ra sun Egypto-African common stock

The sound change r-/l-/s- is well expected. For sure, there are no Afro-Asiatic cognate lexical items to be put on balance together with the linguistic reconstruction above. The so-called Afro-Asiatic Family is but an ideological and racist position. There is no scientific data to technically test Afro-Asiatic hypothesis.

Indeed, technically speaking, there is no one single scientific evidence of Afro-Asiatic Family, and linguistic data do not allow at all considering Afro-Asiatic as a linguistic possibility. The facts are plainly clear as possible:

Yes you are correct about RA referring to the light of the sun. In fact the Kidigo-Bantu people of Tanzania have the word RA which means, to be bright, glitter, gleam, shine. This is equivalent to ng'aa or ng'ara in Kiswahili-Bantu.

Thus Ng'aa = RA. The two words give identical meanings although pronounced differently.

I am not familiar with Obenga's work on the sun. However I cannot understand his logic. He should have been the first one to have suggested that the Indo-European word for the sun is derived from SA, giving SANA.

Subject: Re: [Ta_Seti] Heru, Zulu and the Greek Helios

What's being revealed here lends support to the notion that the earliest settlers to become the "Indo-Europeans" were in fact Black African people. Because by comparative standards, two unrelated languages shouldn't have the same word for sun. In many of Obenga's works he disassociates the various words for sun (sol, sunne, helios) from any African language because he is comparing Sol with Ra(re). From my research, the actual term Ra isn't referring to the sun, but again, the light from the sun; and more specifically "white light." From being in priestly circles, what is being alluded to is the masculine nature of light. Masculine because it propagates forward forever into eternity (in a "phallus" way).

This is standard interpretation all across Africa. By understanding this concept we can understand how in Yoruba Obatala (King of White Light) is Ra (ala) AND Osiris in the Egyptian. We know that the 'god' Khepera is another form of Ra. By comparison the Yoruba word A-Ke-Bi-Ala (kh-p-ra) is a praise name for Obatala.

A - Kη- B̃-

- Praise name for the Spirit of the King of White Cloth (Obwɪl meaning, "Radiant White."

Here we see the term Ra (ala) is referring to the light and not the sun. It speaks to the sun's illuminating essence. Everywhere there is "ra" it means light (white) and not the sun. The same with Heru (Zulu, Osoro, etc.) it is the light from the sun that is being referred to. And in this case it seems to be more expansive as it can refer to anything that pierces and traverses the heavens: light just being one such phenomenon. So your rendering of SA meaning "to become dawn, to become light, to become morning" would in many respects keeping with this tradition. We know in special cases R has become S in many languages. This has been the case in the Germanic languages:

E.g. Gothic, mā [mʰʰza] "greater" (English more, Dutch meer, German mehr, Swedish mer) ~ m [mʰʰs] "more, rather".

More research may or may not reveal a connection between SA and RA (ala). We know the symbol for Ra meant time in the Egyptian. For those familiar with modern Astrophysics will understand how important the notion of light is to the formation of time (change). This is expressed in all African cosmologies. It should be noted as well that Time and Space are one, known in Egypt as AT (moment) and TA (space) (TA also means time as well). In Zulu it is known as UMKATI (space) and ISIKATI (time).

I'm weary on some proto-forms that try to ascertain meaning of key African concepts because they are rarely, if ever, done on the basis of African philosophical concepts and methods for articulating language.

Asar, just a quick thought.

An interesting read, connecting Heru with Zulu. Perhaps this might be useful to consider. The Indo-European word for Sun is interesting as its etymology seems to lie further down South. In Zulu and other Southern-Bantu languages, SA means to dawn, become light, become morning. It is for this very reason the Kiswahili-Bantu word Saa means time. Moreover we have the word SANA from Tsonga-Bantu which means a ray of sun, sunbeam, or a burst of light or sunshine or reflected brightness. Tsonga-Bantu SANA obviously derived from SA is similar to Kiswahili-Bantu CHANA or TANA. These words mean sun in Proto-Bantu. It does appear that the Indo-European word for sun has its lexical cognate in the languages of Southern Africa.

To be further analysed.

Peace Phamily

Due to the recent post on African Classical History concerning Robert K. G. Temple's book The Sirius Mystery, I wanted to lend support to Temple's notion that the Greek God Helios (the sun) derives from the Egyptian god-force HERU. In an earlier email I postulated that the Indo-European words from the Sun could have derived from the Egyptian word HERU. I also posited that the word HERU is the source of the word ZULU. So I decided to expand that aspect of the previous email/paper and am providing it as a download for your critique.

Just visit my website and it is on the home page. Just right click the link and click "save as" to download to your desktop. If you have Adobe Reader plugin in your browser, you can view the pdf document on the web. I know people have not been able to download from Yahoogroups, so I think this is the best way to get the document.

Look forward to your feedback.

As I mentioned in the previous email, the r-/s- sound shift is actually quite common. The example I gave was in Indo-European.

E.g. Gothic, māra [mʰʰza] "greater" (English more, Dutch meer, German mehr, Swedish mer) ~ mā [mʰʰs] "more, rather".

We would just have to see in the languages surrounding the linguistic area of Mbochi to see the evidence of the sound shift. The rolling r- and l- are common, but it is not the only shift in that pattern. Some sound shifts, IMO, don't have a logical reason, but they do occur. There is no logical reason the HERE becomes CHEA among many speakers in Louisiana just down the way from me; but that's how some people say it.

I would like to see more examples of this sound change. I am in accord with r-/l-/, but need enlightening about the /-s/. I cannot see how Obenga's Mbochi's word Mu-ese, the word for sun being related to Ra as the comparison shows. It seems to me there are two major roots which define words for the sun in Africa. The R root and S roots. I am of the opinion that the S rootderived from Zulu-Bantu as SA, dawn, become light, become morning gave rise toSANAfrom Tsonga-Bantuwhich means a ray of sun, sunbeam, or a burst of light or sunshine or reflected brightness. This in turn is defined as SAA, the Kiswahili-Bantu word for time. One also sees the word in Luvale-Bantu derived from SANA as MU-SANA, meaning sunlight, daylight, daytime sun.MU is a prefix to SANA. Thus wehavethe following Bantu words for the sun derived fromconceptual ideas of SA.

Le-Satsi, Sun, Southern-Soto- Bantu,

Ri-sase, Sun, Ekegusi-Bantu. .... Similar to Mbochi MU-ESE??

Li-zazi, Sun, Silozi-Bantu

DAZI, Sun, Chitumbuka-Bantu (PS Does the DA remind one of the word DA-Y??)

As a further observation we have the word RANZI from Shona-Bantu meaning ray of sun at dawn, beam of light. We also have RANGA, orLANGAfor sun in Southern Africa.

It seems highly likely that the word SA, SANAforms the etymologyof the Indo-European wordsdefining the sunin the following terms,SOL, SUNA, SOLAR, etc, etc

Question? Could the suffix L in SOL refer to the sky? If it does then perhapsthe Lingala-Bantu word for sun could give us a clue, as the word for sun is defined as: the eye in the sky, LISO NA LOLA. LOLA means sky. Could the ending of theIndo-European word for sun, SO-L, be explained by usingthe L from LOLA? Just a thought.

To be investigated further.

This excerpt is taken from Theophile Obengas article Ancient Egyptian and Modern Yoruba: Phonetic Regularity in the ANKH journal #16 2007. This section compares the different words for sun in the African languages in comparison to the Afro-Asiatic family. He then isolates Indo-European.

*ra sun Egypto-African common stock

|                         |               |                              |

The sound change r-/l-/s- is well expected. For sure, there are no Afro-Asiaticcognate lexical items to be put on balance together with the linguistic reconstruction above. The so-called Afro-Asiatic Family is but an ideological and racist position. There is no scientific data to technically test Afro-Asiatic hypothesis.

Indeed, technically speaking, there is no one single scientific evidence of Afro-Asiatic Family, and linguistic data do not allow at all considering Afro-Asiatic as a linguistic possibility. The facts are plainly clear as possible:

Yes you are correct about RA referring to the light of the sun. In fact the Kidigo-Bantu people of Tanzania have the word RA which means, to be bright, glitter, gleam, shine. This is equivalent to ng'aa or ng'ara in Kiswahili-Bantu.

Thus Ng'aa = RA. The two words give identical meanings although pronounced differently.

I am not familiar with Obenga's work on the sun. However I cannot understand his logic. He should have been the first one to have suggested that the Indo-European word for the sun is derived from SA, giving SANA.

What's being revealed here lends support to the notion that the earliest settlers to become the "Indo-Europeans" were in fact Black African people. Because by comparative standards, two unrelated languages shouldn't have the same word for sun. In many of Obenga's works he disassociates the various words for sun (sol, sunne, helios) from any African language because he is comparing Sol with Ra(re). From my research, the actual term Ra isn't referring to the sun, but again, the light from the sun; and more specifically "white light." From being in priestly circles, what is being alluded to is the masculine nature of light. Masculine because it propagates forward forever into eternity (in a "phallus" way).

This is standard interpretation all across Africa. By understanding this concept we can understand how in Yoruba Obatala (King of White Light) is Ra (ala) AND Osiris in the Egyptian. We know that the 'god' Khepera is another form of Ra. By comparison the Yoruba word A-Ke-Bi-Ala (kh-p-ra) is a praise name for Obatala.

A - Kη- B̃-

- Praise name for the Spirit of the King of White Cloth (Obŵl meaning, "Radiant White."

Here we see the term Ra (ala) is referring to the light and not the sun. It speaks to the sun's illuminating essence. Everywhere there is "ra" it means light (white) and not the sun. The same with Heru (Zulu, Osoro, etc.) it is the light from the sun that is being referred to. And in this case it seems to be more expansive as it can refer to anything that pierces and traverses the heavens: light just being one such phenomenon. So your rendering of SA meaning "to become dawn, to become light, to become morning" would in many respects keeping with this tradition. We know in special cases R has become S in many languages. This has been the case in the Germanic languages:

E.g. Gothic, mā [mʰa] "greater" (English more, Dutch meer, German mehr, Swedish mer) ~ m [mʰs] "more, rather".

More research may or may not reveal a connection between SA and RA (ala). We know the symbol for Ra meant time in the Egyptian. For those familiar with modern Astrophysics will understand how important the notion of light is to the formation of time (change). This is expressed in all African cosmologies. It should be noted as well that Time and Space are one, known in Egypt as AT (moment) and TA (space) (TA also means time as well). In Zulu it is known as UMKATI (space) and ISIKATI (time).

I'm weary on some proto-forms that try to ascertain meaning of key African concepts because they are rarely, if ever, done on the basis of African philosophical concepts and methods for articulating language.

Asar, just a quick thought.
An interesting read, connecting Heru with Zulu.
Perhaps this might be useful to consider. The Indo-European word for Sun is interesting as its etymology seems to lie further down South. In Zulu and other Southern-Bantu languages, SA means to dawn, become light, become morning. It is for this very reason the Kiswahili-Bantu word Saa means time. Moreover we have the word SANA from Tsonga-Bantu which means a ray of sun, sunbeam, or a burst of light or sunshine or reflected brightness. Tsonga-Bantu SANA obviously derived from SA is similar to Kiswahili-Bantu CHANA or TANA. These words mean sun in Proto-Bantu. It does appear that the Indo-European word for sun has its lexical cognate in the languages of Southern Africa.
To be further analysed.

Peace Phamily

Due to the recent post on African Classical History concerning Robert K. G. Temple's book THE Sirius Mystery, I wanted to lend support to Temple's notion that the Greek God Helios (the sun) derives from the Egyptian god-force HERU. In an earlier email I postulated that the Indo-European words from the Sun could have derived from the Egyptian word HERU. I also posited that the word HERU is the source of the word ZULU. So I decided to expand that aspect of the previous email/paper and am providing it as a download for your critique.

Just visit my website and it is on the home page. Just right click the link and click "save as" to download to your desktop. If you have Adobe Reader plugin in your browser, you can view the pdf document on the web. I know people have not been able to download from Yahooogroups, so I think this is the best way to get the document. Look forward to your feedback.

Greetings

Wanted to share this with the group. Some of his premises are in alignment with other African teachings and works written by African people. Some parts of his analysis, from his Egyptian informant Dr. Abd'El Hakim Awyan I have to question. From what I can gather about Awyan is that he is a descendant of later comers, probably during the Hellenic era who retained some of the teachings. This I can tell by the vocabulary he uses. I have Mehler's second book, and read most of his first. Good general premise. What upsets me however is he thinks him and Awyan actually started a new study called "Kemetology. " None-the-less, I think it is worth a peep and a more critical assessment will be done in the near future. But here is the link to the video lecture on Google Video

<http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-8182352066994701083&ei=iOKISvzbG5LSqQLX3vD7BA&q=stephen+mehler&hl=en#docid=5387825475001846186>

Summary of Video

Egyptologist Stephen S. Mehler has spent over 30 years researching the answers to these questions: Was there a advanced prehistoric civilization in ancient Egypt? Who were the people who built the great pyramids? Who carved the Great Sphinx? Did the pyramids serve as energy devices and not as tombs for kings? Mahler believes the answers are "Yes!" An indigenous oral tradition still exists in Egypt, he has been able to uncover and study it with the help of a living master of this tradition, Abd'El Hakim Awyan. He has also been given permission to share these teachings -presented heretofore in fragments by other researchers- to the Western World, teachings that unfold a whole new understanding of ancient Egypt.

| 29808|2009-09-09 21:08:23|Asar Imhotep|Re: response to Gore's War!|

As always Gore, you want everyone to answer your questions but when you are given the critical questions, you find a way to avoid it and never answer the question. We're going to get some honesty out of you some day. But for now:

GORE: I gave you a clear and concise refutation of Temple`s theory YOU DIDN`T EVEN UNDERSTAND IT and could not respond to a single point I raised.

ASAR: You have selective memory GORE. I answered everyone of your questions concerning this in the essay on Heru. http://www.asarimhotep.com/documentdownloads/heru\_zulu.pdf. Here is your alleged refutation of Temples theory.

GORE: *The patterns, however, are fatal for the theory that the Greek Helios derives from the Egyptian Heru. We could, however, still try to argue that the Egyptians reached the Proto-Indo-European speakers and passed the word to them. I do not know what the reconstructed Proto-Indo-European ancestor word is but from what I know of how sounds develop the ancestor almost certainly did not begin with an `*h`.*

ASAR: Here you are correct in stating that more than likely the proto word didnt start with an h. I provided for you a reconstructed proto form for sun: **s□l*. Theophile Obenga reconstructs it simply as **sawel* and **sul*.

Comparative linguistics 101, compare the consonants:

| Indo- European sun,sun-god | Negro-African sun, sky, spirit in the sky,light |
|--------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------|
| hls Helios Greek        | hr Heru Egyptian                             |
| hl- Haul - Welsh        | hr.t Heru.t Egyptian (sky)                   |
| zl Zool Dutch           | zr Zeru Mazezeru                             |
| sl- Sula Swedish        | zl Zulu Common Bantu                         |
| sl Suelo Spanish        | sr Osoro Akan                                |
| sl- Saule Latvian       | sr WakamuSoRo Sotho-Bantu                    |
| sl Sula Swedish         | jr Ijuru Kinyarwanda                         |
| sl Sol Latin            | tl Tilo Tonga-Bantu                          |
| sn Sun - English        | hn Hunu Ga, Adagbe                           |

Common sound shifts = s > z, j > s > z, r > l > n

Common sound feature = h is often dropped after s.

Common sound feature = s is often dropped as an initial consonant (*s□l becomes haul in Swedish).

GORE: This means even if we tried to persue that line of arguement we would have to explain why the Proto-Indo-European word for `sun`, if borrowed from the Egyptians, sounds less like Heru than the Greek descended word thousands of years later. The very opposite of what we would expect.

ASAR: Again, as explained in the initial paper, if the word HRW was pronounced [o]SHURU, that would explain why the proto-Indo-European consonant cluster SHL would correspond to the Egyptian cluster SHR. We can assume a vocal stop or fricative in the Egyptian because the majority of the matches across Africa have those in the initial position. A common feature in linguistic drift is a phenomenon called Metathesis (consonant-vowel reversal) which the examples below will demonstrate:

English gard-en Serbian grad 'city'

German berg Serbian breg 'shore, bank'

Latin plen-us Russian poln-yj

The Egyptian word [o]SH[o,u]RU could have easily become *SOH-WL in Proto-Indo-European; or simply *SOL as in Obengas reconstruction. By the time the Greeks came into the picture the Egyptians could have dropped the initial S sound and the H was left to stand in the initial position: just like the old kingdom DJOSER became in later periods ZOSER.

I also pointed out Wim van Binsbergen postulation that the Egyptian hr (hawk deity, Heru/Horus) could have been introduced into proto-Nostratic as **hr* (speckled hawk). This would be another point of entry into Indo-European. Another thing we have to keep in mind is that the Indo-European SOL and HELIOS were GODS. This is NOT a coincidence as the concept of a God is not something you see, therefore cannot be a part of ones basic lexicon. If two or more nations have the same name for God, that is a classic example of contact. What seems to be the case here is that some of the Indo-Europeans kept the S and others kept the H consonant initial position. Its common to have two forms of a word just as common Bantu has two common forms for to die: **ku* (to die, death) and **wa/wu* (to die).

With this evidence it is hard for one to still cling on to the convention that it is impossible or not likely that Helios could have not derived from the Egyptian HRW.

PROBLEMS WITH THE COMPARATIVE METHOD

In regards to my issues with the comparative method in certain instances, I will quote in length from the book The Zuni Enigma: A Native American Peoples Possible Japanese Connection written by Nancy Yaw Davis. In her chapter Problems with the comparative Method (2001:137), she goes into the major issue that hinders the effectiveness of the method with languages that are not Indo-European. She goes on to state:

Generations of scholars have been working the comparative analysis of the Japanese language, but lexical comparisons have not answered the numerous questions raised. Which influence came from which direction came from which direction at what time in Japanese pre-history? In what ways did the Chinese words modify the original Japanese language? What language did the immigrants associated with the Yayoi period bring? Recently, Shibatani of Kobe University reported a trend away from the comparative method dealing with discrete words (the same kind of disillusionment with the results that Nicholas reported), toward an increased attention grammatical comparison and reconstruction.

But how different languages responded to different linguistic influences during prehistory, and also during historical times, remains a legitimate issue. Is Japanese a mixed language, a hybrid? Is one major substratum an Altaic structure confounded by a later layer of Austronesian words? Or is Austronesian the substratum with Altaic a superstratum? Was Austronesian language spoken in Japan during the long Jomon period (12,000 bp 250bc) and later modified by Altaic speakers associated with rice cultivation, bronze and burial mounds during the Yayoi period (300bc ad300)?

Both Shibatani in Japan and Nichols in the United States noted that the comparative method may work well for Indo-European, but not as well in other situations, especially where language relationships are not already known to exist. Indo-European has the advantage of many historical links in many known directions with documented periods of separation. Hindi is Indo-European; Spanish, Italian, English, and German are known by comparative linguistics to be related to each other with established links in time. Perhaps different rules apply to Altaic. To Tibeto-Chinese. To Austronesian. To Penutian. Why should all human languages respond to change like Indo-European? Perhaps in Altaic and Japanese, Penutian and Zunian, the phonemic and structural march to a different tune, and at different rates, under different conditions.

At the height of the comparative method in the 1950s and 1960s, phonemes and morphemes were envisioned as floating around the world, like verbal flotsam and jetsam, and like potsherds of the southwest seemed to lead to independent lives of their own, changing by hidden laws assumed but yet so elusive. Little wonder why scholars like Shibatani and Nichols search for alternative methods of analysis.

Dr. Winters and I have brought up numerous times that the rate of change in Africa is a lot slower than in Indo-European because the way their cultures are designed (see Language in Africa An Introductory Survey pg 150 by Edgar A. Gregersen). You cannot place Indo-European as the standard for languages because all people don't speak like, have the same world-view or culture like Indo-Europeans. So what affects change in that family will not necessarily be the case in others. This has been the myth behind the comparative method and Indo-European being the standard.

Another question raised by the author was in regards to language mixture in Japanese, which is the same question I raised in Egyptian. This author is correct in pointing out the historical factors which may majorly influence how the language came to be. One has to wonder, if by the Egyptian records the language and customs of the Ethiopians are the major influences on Egypt, per Diodorus Siculus, why isn't the language recognizable as Geez? Why does the Egyptian language construct words like Yoruba and Bantu, but its grammatical structure is uniquely different? How was Egyptian modified by other African languages? Why do you have so many PRIMARY gods in the pantheon? Why do I find the same Egyptian symbols among the Akan, Dogon, Yoruba, Igbo, Kongo, and Zulu cultures?

The comparative method cant answer any of those questions because in order for the comparative method and the tree model to be valid, you have to deny contact between the cultures. The ancient Egyptian records, the fossil records, and the Greek records tell us that it was a hybrid African society. In the case of cultures that are well over 4-5000 years old (with Egyptian being at least 6000 years and thats a conservative number), you need a different method of analysis as Shibanati and Nichols have mentioned.

I still need you to respond to how the same primary Egyptian symbols ended up in the Dogon, Yoruba, Greek and Kongo systems. I still am waiting on your response to how you feel that Egyptian is a monolingual language given the history that is well known to even the beginning student.

Again, this is a question of common sense; how can you unify a people if there in fact were no people to unify? If there was indeed people, as depicted in the Narmer Palette, do you believe that they spoke the same language? If they spoke the same language, and had the exact same culture, why did they have different 'gods' in each nome? If these were the same people culturally, what would have been the need for unification if they were already one people; then to impose a culture on them they already had? When you can answer these basic questions, your posts will be taken more seriously. Any linguistic analysis has to coincide with the historical data. Otherwise, what's the proof of your analysis?

According to Diodorus Siculus, The Library of History, Books II.35 - IV.58, Translated by C.H. Oldfather, Harvard University Press, 2000, informs us that the founders of Pharoanic Egypt and the natives were different people. He goes on to state:

"[The Ethiopians] They say also that the Egyptians are colonists sent out by the Ethiopians, Osiris having been the leader of the colony (...) And the larger part of the customs of the Egyptians are, they hold, Ethiopian, the colonists still preserving their ancient manners (...) Many other things are also told by them concerning their own antiquity and the colony which they sent out that became the Egyptians, but about this there is no special need of our writing anything."

Here it is understood that the natives of the upper Nile Valley and the Ethiopians (Ta-Setians, etc.) were of a different culture, otherwise, what would the Ethiopians have introduced if they had the same culture? Having the same language means having the same general cultural practices and beliefs. One's language shapes one's world-view. Having the same language means one generally has the same world-view. It is only when you are introduced to another language and concepts do a culture as a whole begin to see things differently. We are not dealing with individuals here, but whole cultures.

Egyptologist Stephen Mehler states that when he talked to the indigenous people in Egypt, that their oral tradition states that the 42 "nomes" were 42 different ethnic groups that eventually came together to form political Egypt. I heard personally the same thing from West African priests as well as some Nubians. So again, I'm wondering how all of these different groups came together, and none of the vocabulary entered into the main lexicon we call Egyptian? Egypt was not a monolingual society and the language of Egypt will reflect its multilanguage characteristic. With that in mind, by studying living languages, its morphology, lexicon and topology, we can isolate (along with iconographic and ritual evidence) who was in fact at one time in the Nile Valley.

What you fail to realize is that I don't argue whether Yoruba or Dagara or Kikongo branch off from the same node that the Egyptian language branched off. The history for that is outside the reliability of the comparative method. Egypt is older than what the comparative method could accurately argue. I argue that these groups (and others) were either 1) in relations with ancient Egyptians by trade or education, or 2) in fact at one time lived in Ancient Egypt and thus were "Egyptians." I first begin with oral traditions. If the oral traditions say they came from the Nile Valley then that means there would be some cultural traits still visible in the culture. When I see the exact storylines in their myths, names for the same gods, shared vocabulary, etc., one cannot argue against contact or presence in ancient Egypt. The proof is in the living. I take my cue from the Greeks who tell us:

"[The Egyptian priests states] The Greeks, O King, have novel words, energetic of argumentation [only]; and thus is the philosophizing of the Greeks the noise of words. But we do not use words; but we use sounds full-filled with deeds." (Corpus Hermeticum Book 16)

"Sounds full-filled with deeds" is CULTURE. It is the living of the "philosophy" you claim to study. So in order to penetrate the core of any African people, you have to get to the core of their practices. In the same texts, the Egyptian priest states:

"2. the sermon (logos) keepeth clear the meaning<sup>2</sup> of the words (logoi) [at any rate]."

In other words, the study of the myths, the role the characters play in the myths, and the living culture is where you will find the meaning. Not some guesses out of a dictionary. So unless you deal with the "esoteric" you're wasting your time because that is the heart of ancient Egypt and ANY African culture.

My research focus centers on shared mythology, philosophy and ritual. You can argue back and forth all day about "relatedness" of languages. I asked you before what is the standard criteria for all linguists in establishing relatedness and you couldn't answer the question because there is none. What constitutes a "related" language has been a debate for decades and depends on who you ask. So I don't focus on related languages. I focus on shared culture by direct contact. I don't care what nonsensical logic you try to use for denying contact through language, you can't deny contact when the cultures under examination share the same iconography and it is utilized in the culture in the same manner. No one "simultaneously" invents an "opening of the mouth ceremony" independently across cultures. So one has to wonder, how did the opening of the mouth ceremony make its way to central Congo? Did these illiterate "bush people" read Sir Wallis Budge? How did the symbol of the four moments of the sun, and its philosophy make it to the Egyptian, Dogon, Dagara, Yoruba, Igbo, Cameroonian, Kongo and Zulu cultures? The comparative method and prot-forms can't answer that. It wasn't designed to. So you have to have a different method and somehow you keep missing this basic point.

I still await your answer to my direct questions to concerning the iconography. Please don't bail out on me like you usually do.

Asar: "I am still awaiting on his explanation on why Gore thinks Egypt was a mono-language society when the Egyptians themselves said they were not".

GORE: If you have a quotation from the Egyptians saying they were not a monolingual language I would be happy if you reproduced it for myself and other members to read so we can make our own minds about whether you have understood it correctly. The same way that I reproduced the relevant Temple quote before showing it to be untenable. That is sound methodology.

Furthermore I'm still waiting to your reply to my response to Asar 3, 4 and 5.

Thank You Onyekachi

I ordered this book and it confirms EVERYTHING I have been stating in my debates with Gore. One, it confirms that the Egyptian language is syllabic. Two, it confirms that the H is really an SH (CH) sound. Observe the following from the book:

AMARIGNA EGYPTIAN (per Budge)

sh𓂏- then, pastime hau-t - time, period

m𓂏pan style="font-weight:bold;">CH'𓂏T' - take possession hbt - mission, raid

CH'an𓂏 load, pack, carry hnn - to be bowed, loaded

CH'𓂏r - LIGHT hrw - day, today, daily

shom𓂏 take office hmi - government

shro - mixture of peas and beans hrw - vegetables

sh𓂏pan style="font-weight:bold;">sh𓂏 flee, to evade haha - to go back, to retreat

CHiru - falcon hrw - pertaining to Horus (the hawk deity)

(Remember Wim van Binsbergen's notion of proto-Nostratic **hr* for falcon with Egyptin hrw (Horus). The modern name in Nostratic for falcon/hawk is hierax)

With this evidence plain as day, one can see how the "proto" Indo-European form **s□l*, **sawel* or **sul* came to be from CH'arar. This would also explain why in the other Niger-Congo languages this became OSORO, IJERU and IZULU. They note in the book that the symbol for R is also the symbol for L simultaneously. Seeing how HRW in Nostratic is HIERAX, it should not be an issue equating the Greek HELIOS with CHIRU (Hrw).

I can say that this is legit and it matches everything I've come to know by studying the other African languages and oral traditions concerning the script. What's in this book also confirms a lot of Ferg Somo's renderings in the Ba-Ntu languages and I see parallels in the Yoruba. What this also confirms is Diodorus Siculus' statement concerning the oral traditions of the Egyptians. I will repeat here:

Diodorus Siculus, The Library of History, Books II.35 - IV.58, Translated by C.H. Oldfather, Harvard University Press, 2000, informs us that the founders of Pharoanic Egypt and the natives were different people. He goes on to state:

"[The Ethiopians] They say also that the Egyptians are colonists sent out by the Ethiopians, Osiris having been the leader of the colony (...) And the larger part of the customs of the Egyptians are, they hold, Ethiopian, the colonists still preserving their ancient manners (...) Many other things are also told by them concerning their own antiquity and the colony which they sent out that became the Egyptians, but about this there is no special need of our writing anything."

The same way this script is used in Ethiopia for a good number of Ethiopian languages, is the same way the M-du Njora (mat𓂏an𓂏𓂏) was used to write the many languages of Egypt (Gebts). Looking at the word Gebts it makes more sense when we look at Agyptos in the Greek instead of the usual excuse of He.t Ka Ptah. And It's funny how even the in Egyptian the word QBT (Gebts) is translated as a word for a nome in Upper Egypt and the word QMI refers to Upper Egypt in the dictionaries, but among the Ethiopians and the Kenyans respectfully, these terms refer to all of Egypt (Gebts, Ikami respectfully).

ONYEKACHI: Much of that initial scholarship will be flawed but eventually with increased rigour and discipline we will test Diop's ideas to truth or destruction

ASAR: we must first create our own standards. As I have stated before, the European knows little about African culture or the spirit of its languages. If we keep using their misguided standards, we will never reach Diop's charge to reconcile Africa's historical past by examining its relation to Egypt. Time and time again we have to correct people stuck on Eurocentric ideas of African realities and until Black people realize this one truth, we will get no where: "Africa knows more about Africans than Europeans." You'd think this was something simple to realize.

GORE/Asar Imhotep

Just to add another element to your discussion. An Eritrean friend passed me this link

<http://stores.lulu.com/ancientgebts> (Gebts is the Tigrigna/Amarigna word for Egypt) for the following book: PREFACE TO "AMARIGNA & TIGRIGNA QAL HIEROGLYPHS FOR BEGINNERS" BY FIKRE TOLOSSA, Ph.D. LITERATURE

As the preface of the book says: 'This dictionary attempts to provide proof that the ancient language of the Egyptians, whose alphabet is known as the hieroglyphs, had something to do with the Ethiopian and Eritrean languages, Amharic and Tigrigna. According to the author, the vocabulary and concepts of Amharic and Tigrigna are concealed in the hieroglyphs. A person who can read hieroglyphs and knows Amharic and Tigrigna can decipher the mystery hidden behind the hieroglyphs.'

'While it will be a great surprise to the world at large if Mr. Legesse Allyn's discovery proves to be valid, it might not be that big of a surprise to Ethiopians and Eritreans in particular. This is because it is a known fact that ancient people of today's regions of Ethiopia and Eritrea have ruled Egypt. Given this fact, it is no wonder if they had left their impact and contribution to Egyptian civilization in a much broader sense, even from its beginnings, as Mr. Legesse Allyn asserts.'

Not being a linguist not sure what to make of it. I do, however, see an immediate flaw. The Kemetic language is supposed to be an isolate, but part of the Afro-Asiatic language group to which Amarigna and Tigrigna belong. But both Amarigna and Tigrigna are derived from an earlier classical language Geez, which like Latin, is considered a dead language. Surely you would expect the links to the Kemetic language to be to the older Geez not to the more modern languages.

GORE what do you think? Anything in this or is it nonsense? Have a look at the site where helists some samples from the dictionary.

As I await your response it does look increasingly like African scholars from different parts of the continent are beginning to do what Diop urged which was to begin to the work of exploring the links between our different cultures to Kemet. Much of that initial scholarship will be flawed but eventually with increased rigour and discipline we will test Diop's ideas to truth or destruction.

Peace

Onyekachi

Subject: [africanclassicalhistory] Questions for GORE

&nbsp; p;

"Greetings Gore

This going back and forth leads to nowhere because you ignore my central premise and you argue irrelevant information as if it has any bearing on my thesis".

GORE: If you want any sort of communication with me we have to start by being HONEST.

You say I present irrelevant information. Prove it. You say I ignore your central premise. If this is about the priest stuff I simply don't see how it is verifiable. Oh and yes I doubt the the premise.

I am happy to answer the questions of people who are intellectually honest and are prepared to deal with the problems that Black people face in real life and in scholastic terms.

The Notorious G.O.R.E

PS I once asked you a question in Kikongo. I did not get a response. Yet you complain about me supposedly not responding to your issues.

Yoruba path=2 0of Odu and "four moments of the sun"

Kongo "four moments of the sun"

Aristotle's Four Humor's

Egyptian Diagram of Opposites

Egyptian "four moments of the sun"

I can demonstrate this same symbolic philosophy all over the continent, but we're going to keep this simple. How do you account for the same symbol, with the same meaning and same purpose and function in Egypt, Kongo, Mali, Nigeria and ancient Greece? Before you even think that it is "possible" by some supernatural "chance correspondence, " to say that each one of these cultures could have thought of these symbols, with the same function, the same purpose and iconography independently and on their own, is like saying it is also possible for the Khoisan to independently invent the Autobots logo and associate it with the same story line..

Then after you successfully explain that, I want you to explain how these symbols ended up in the ancient writing scripts of west Africans?

Igbo Script and Egyptian

Mande Script and Egyptian

Before we can start dealing with your questions of linguistics and what you think I don't know, I need you to explain (or explain away or avoid like you usually do) these "symbolic cognates" in these various regions of the continent. Tell me how each of these major cultures independently came up with these signs and symbols. From your answer I will be able to gauge your symbolic literacy and whether you even bothered to study African culture and philosophy. I will be able to see if you get all of your information from foreign anthropologists or do you actually engage with African people in living African systems.

And please, no skating around the questions. Just answer them and if you don't know, say you don't know. I look forward to your reply. And I will address your other messages as well.

Greetings Gore

This going back and forth leads to nowhere because you ignore my central premise and you argue irrelevant information as if it has any bearing on my thesis. So to help you to understand where I am coming from and where my research is focused, I need you to answer a couple of questions for me. I don't need any nonsense about what European anthropologists have to say about anything. I want your explanation; demonstrate for me independent thought.

Okay, let's begin. Here are my basic arguments:

1. By the Egyptians own records, various tribes already existed all along the Nile before unification.
2. The archeological record supports this testimony
3. Egyptian records state that Egypt became a political entity through war
4. Unlike European conquerors of later times, the ruling Egyptians allowed the people in each nome to keep their culture, customs and ancestral deities.
5. This practice was extended to the 'Middle East' after the 18th dynasty conquests in to that area
6. Not only that, the ruling 'Egyptians' incorporated many of the local customs, rituals and deities into the main pantheon and culture of political Egypt
7. With that in mind, it would be erroneous to think for a second that local vocabulary did not make it into the grander lexical pool today called the 'Egyptian language.'
8. By the Egyptians own records, many wars were fought over territory by local and in later times, foreign powers
9. By various anthropological and geological accounts, many droughts occurred during pharaonic times.
10. Two things happen during war and famine: people migrate or die
11. There are no written records in history that would suggest all of the ancient Egyptians died and no longer exist
12. Therefore, we have to ask ourselves some critical questions. How many indigenous Egyptians stayed and how many fled during times of upheaval and famine?
13. When it comes to the question of migrations, where did they move to? Did they go south into Ethiopia, Sudan and Kenya? Did they go into West Africa? Did they migrate to North Africa? Did they all migrate in the direction of their opposition in the Middle East and into Europe?

14. We know human beings migrate during times of war. Some are lost in the war, others make it out. Some traditions are kept, some are not in the new locations.
15. With that said, how can we identify the remnants of the people who escaped in various times of the 3000 year political history of Egypt?
16. One tool is language. The other is through signs and symbols.
17. We know that Egypt was not a monolingual society, so it is impossible to trace an exact match anywhere on the planet for a full cognate language for ancient Egyptian. This is why it consider a so-called 'isolate' in the so-called Afro-Asiatic family of languages.

With these basic assumptions, Gore, I would like for you to explain to me the following: Why do we find these same symbols across Africa?

Dogon Womb of all Signs and developmental path of life and the sun

Yoruba path of Odu and "four moments20of the sun"

Kongo "four moments of the sun"

Aristotle's Four Humor's

Egyptian Diagram of Opposites

Egyptian "four moments of the sun"

I can demonstrate this same symbolic philosophy all over the continent, but we're going to keep this simple. Before you even think that it is "possible" by some supernatural "chance correspondence, " to say that each one of these cultures could have thought of these symbols, with the same function, the same purpose and iconography independently and on their own, is=2 0like saying it is also possible for the Khoisan to independently invent the Autobots logo and associate it with the same story line..

Then after you successfully explain that, I want you to explain how these symbols ended up in the ancient writing scripts of west Africans?

Igbo Script and Egyptian

Mande Script and Egyptian

Wau Wams,

We are flattered, and thanks for the compliments. The General deserves it more. He was in the thick of things from morning till 2pm giving orders and leading by example in the trenches.

We are looking forward to the seedlings as soon as you can. Besides, we have parents, Friends of KCDN on site, and we need to energize them some more. They are making the place so wonderful. All the dirt in the Canal is gone and they have started on the leveling of the ground.

It is costing us Kshs 5,000.00 a day Monday to Friday, and we are appealing to all Friends of KCDN to step forward to give us more support. This is our resolve and at KCDN, we task, we talk less.

And we finish all that we start only because of your support.

Kenyans will not forget. A recap of things that have shaped our country negatively include recent appointment of Justice Ringera as KACA Director, reshuffle of Maj Ali to PM Gen AG Wako's failure to prosecute and delaying major cases of corruption, and the Mau Saga has now turned to be a major fundraising tool while we think of rewarding land grabbers.

Justice Ringera has been on the news. Today, two top media houses published pictures of Omtatah-representing 15 civil activists and LSK going to court to stop his appointment. A radio station asked a question whether the clamour is really non-performance of Ringera or the envious eyes on the seven figure perks? Justice Ringera has responded and clearly stated the KACA board has been commending him for job well done. Okongo Omogeni - the KACA Chair was recently found to have lunch with Ringera even after releasing a contradicting statement. The question is: who is fighting for a just course? It's clear that the president flouts the law - 'its illegal and unconstitutional'. By going to court, it means that the court decision will be final. Parliament may not be able to further debate the legality of the president's action. Stupid again. If I can't believe Omogeni - who can I believe now? Lawyers, Civic leaders, Parliamentarians, President, AG or the judges?

Maj Ali is the PM General. A general who failed Kenya during the Post Election Violence. Innocent citizens were slaughtered, the police were infiltrated and used as state mercenaries. Ali's appointment to head the PM General position was too dictatorial. Roadside actions. Government positions need competitive bidding. I believe he is not qualified to hold such a position for two reasons: he failed to institute the necessary reforms in the police force and he is a trained soldier and therefore can't manage a business unit like Post Office. War corruption within the police force is witnessed. Police are allowing illegal foreigners to cross borders - Lokichoggio, Oromo liberation force, al shabab etc

AG Wako remains in office and will smile until the end of his tenure. I was told by a prominent lawyer that he can't be removed since he has the Queen of England nod. I didn't believe this. Anyhow, will this man ever be removed for several ills: not prosecuting corrupt individuals

Mau Saga - has become a begging basket. 7.6 billion Kes to conserve the greatest water catchment area. How much is allocated to the ministry of environment to conserve our enviroment?

Shall you use the words of a man who did not exist until a thousand years after the Hyksos stories, to tell what happened before he was born?

Shall you use Jewish historians to reveal events that took place in Egypt.

Your Jewish historian stories come from the talmud such as.

Gittin 57b Nebuzaradan the captain of the guard KILLED two hundred and eleven MYRIADS, (211 x 10,000 = 2,110,000) and in Jerusalem he

KILLED ninety-four MYRIADS on one stone, until their blood went and joined that of Zechariah... ( 94 x 10,000 = 940,000 )

Emperor Hadrian who KILLED in Alexandria of Egypt sixty MYRIADS on sixty MYRIADS, twice as many as went forth from Egypt. ( 60 x 10,000 = 600,000)

Emperor Vespasian who KILLED

in the city of Bethar four hundred thousand MYRIADS, or as some say, four thousand MYRIADS. ( 4,000 x 10,000 = 40,000,000 )

According to 'Jewish historians' the Romans killed about 43,000,000 'Jews' about 2000 years ago. (This is a partial list)

Gittin 58a There were four hundred synagogues in the city of Bethar, and in every one were four hundred teachers of children, and each one had under him four hundred pupils, and when the enemy entered there they pierced them with their staves, and when the enemy prevailed and captured them, they wrapped them in their scrolls and burnt them with fire

400 Synagogues had

400 teachers each

Each teacher had 400 pupils

$400 \times 400 \times 400 = 64,000,000$

In this part of the 'Jew historian' Talmud, the Romans killed 64 million 'Jew' pupils.

=====

All that Manetho was supposed to have said, hinges on the validity of this Jewish author?

NO writings of Manetho or Josephus has ever been seen by any one who publishes what Josephus wrote? How could you copy that which you do not have to copy from?

Neither Josephus nor Manetho lived until centuries after the supposed events, even IF they ever existed at all ... and 50,000 people never lived in the place where 64 million Jewish children were killed by the Romans.

Josephus .. source .. Jew talmud

Only that which was written by those who existed IN Egypt IN the period any event took place could record what happened.

Robin Hood, ali baba and the 40 thieves is the same stuff as the writings of Josephus are made of.

Why is it essential to push the Semitic/Asiatic caper?

After being bombarded with the mis-information these are Semitic/Asiatic words, it is almost impossible for those who have been conditioned to face the facts.

=====

Why is it essential to push the Semitic/Asiatic caper?

Attachments :
.....

Egyptology-vs-Mythology

Deciphering hieroglyphics is still far from an exact science. The Rosette Stone was found over 200 years ago and there is still an ongoing conflict about the translation.

Is the field of Egyptology to include mythology and fairy tales as well?

I suppose it would expedite research if the make believe were branded for what it is and ignored.

=====

In make believe, any one, any time in history can concoct any thing. When it is challenged the ignorant argument is produced. It goes something like this:

There is no evidence of The Lost City of Atlantis.

-Prove it does not exist.

The ignorant argument is based on proving what did not happen, proving the negative

**.

What you do not know, what you can not prove, is evidence of nothing but your ignorance.

In concocted history any BSER can fabricate any amount of lies they wish and never be caught because * There is no way to go back in history with out a time machine.

Josephus wrote the accounts about the Hyksos.

John Hanna and his wife were abducted by aliens

King Tut played a game similar to bowling.

Moses sold stones he called magic to the Israelites.

No one can prove what did NOT happen .. the stupid argument is based on what can not be proven, ignorance.

Research/Science is not based on ignorance, but research is based on evidence/facts/what can be proven

Before you could consider the validity of any account, you would first have to look for any supporting evidence.

=====

When a jury finds a defendant guilty or innocent.. guilty = yes they did do the bad thing, not guilty = no, they did not do that thing.

You are on the Judge

Case (A)

Tom was accused of robbery. In his garage the authorities found money bags from the bank

(You would hand the case over to the Jury or throw it out)

=====

Case (B)

George was accused of starting a fire

The accuser was man who said he read in a letter, that a dead man wrote in a letter, that dead man read in another letter of another man who died before him, that George started a fire 20 years ago. (None of the letters existed)

Not a shred of evidence existed. The case was based on what two dead men were supposed to have written, and there is no evidence that those men ever existed.

Neither of the dead men were around when the fire started.

Neither of the letters of the two dead men existed

(You would hand the case over to the Jury or throw it out)

=====

Case (C)

Mike was accused of the murder of his wife. (He claimed to have been out of town at the time)

On his computer they found searches how to murder and get away with it.

On the murder weapon they found his prints.

On his shoes they found the blood of his wife.

(You would hand the case over to the Jury or throw it out)

=====

As the judge, would you allow all of the cases above to go to a jury ?

If you would through out any of the cases, which would it be?

=====

In Egyptology there are literally tons of hieroglyphics written in stone and physical, age dated artifacts. Why would any one calling themselves a scientist/researcher waste their time with mythology?

In the past books and those who could read were few. People retold stories verbally from one generation to another.

Ghost stories, Robin Hood, The Legend of Sleep Hollow ... Does a fairy tale become fact after the verbal citations are put in print?

IF there is no evidence to base any past events on, they remain a myth if by print or the flapping of the lips.

Well they could be true.. you can not prove it is not true.. the only support of myths is the stupid argument.. ignorance, what can not be proved.

Science/research is based on what can be proven. Myths are based on the imagination.

=====

Myths are usually embraced when they conform with wishful thinking.

Finding the lost city of Atlantis.

I am the descendant of some great leader of the past

Being abducted by friendly aliens

The Israelites ruling Egypt

Finding the lost Ark

When a myth, tickles their fancy, it is swallowed hook, line and sinker, but when a myth goes against their grain, they spit it out?

After I read people claiming to be 'Egyptologist' repeating myths to promote their assertions, I like to bring up an unpopular myth:

=====

In a tomb is an image of some farmers/herders with animals. They are wearing striped clothes. From this image, on their web pages they write:

This is an image of the Israelites migrating into Egypt.

(They use the striped clothes as evidence it is the Israelites)

When I post the account of Professor L. Englehart who reported in his journal that he witnessed crooked Egyptologist in the tomb after hours, painting the stripes on those images.

When I write the account that image never had any striped clothes before several years before 1900 ... it is instant rage.

When a myth is produced that is contrary to their wishful thinking.

* Englehart was a @$% liar.

* Where is the journal right now?

With out the journal, I suppose the paint could be age dated and examined for chemical content, or if there were some kind of published photos before 1900, one might examine it for stripes.

The Egyptian common people are very poor. It would have been easy to bribe guards to allow wealthy foreigners in after the tombs were closed.

It is quite possible that 'Egyptologist' create forgeries. In my section on forgeries, some of the actual cases are listed. Faked antiques is a multi million dollar industry.

NO matter that no one can not prove this did NOT happen, it remains a myth and is not worth spit.

=====

A MIXTURE OF FACTS AND LIES

When forgers concoct 'historic events', one of the best tricks is sprinkle some known information in with the lies.

If you wanted to create a fake letter to George Washington and make it believable, you would sprinkle in some facts such as the year, names of people he encountered, places he was at that particular time.

A good forgery takes information already established to mix in with the concoction.

=====

When people write that Josephus said... I like to counter:

#1 The ancient Egyptians wrote in hieroglyphs, didn't Josephus write in Latin?

#2 Josephus was not born until centuries after the Hyksos were expelled and he lived in another country. How could Josephus be a witness of events that took place before he was born?

#3 You can not make a copy of that which you do not have to copy from. In the books published of what Josephus wrote, show us where the writings are that these authors copied their publications from?

#4 Josephus was supposed to have gotten his information from Manethos. Manethos lived in another country and died centuries before Josephus was ever born.

Show us what museum the writings of Manethos is today so we can go there?

#5 Manethos was not born until 200 years until after the Hyksos were expelled.

Explain how Manethos could record events that he could not be a witness to?

Recently I was accused of calling Josephus a liar. Before I could call Josephus a liar, there would first have to be a Josephus.

The ONLY evidence that a Josephus ever existed is by the text he was said to have written.

Show us the museum where we can see the text written by Josephus.

Judge: What would you do if the validity of evidence in the Josephus account, was presented evidence in a court. Scroll back to Case B and see what your decision was in a case of non existence evidence.

=====

There will be a never ending stream of mythology accounts mixed into Egyptology by those who concoct them and the lemmings who are pleased by them.

I would suggest that myths be documented in the encyclopedia of Egyptology and marked with a symbol denoting myth

ⲙfont color="#ff0000">Josephus

ⲙfont color="#ff0000">Manethos

Just wanted to point out as well why this work is important because it answers a lot of questions modern Egyptologists have not been able to answer. This is what the author didn't put in the book:

1. There was no "p"
2. There was no "th"
3. That little chick, well it is not a "u" -- it's a "w"
4. Neither name "Ethiopia" nor "Egypt" were derived from any foreign words, they are merely bastardizations of the original names (and neither name has anything to do with skin color)
5. Yes, there was an "l" (L)
6. Those two "h"s (one with and one without a dot beneath it), they can be "h", "ch", "sh", as well and a few other sounds foreigners know nothing about pronouncing, but also related to "h"
  - A. No "p" -- foreigners mispronounced the "b" for a "p"
  - B. The rabbit was used to represent the "w" or an "r" sound (in this case, an "r")
7. The "j" sound can also be an "sh"

There are other conventions, but are not important right now. With this being said, there was not a PUNT. There are no P's in Egyptian as that sound was a B. The W can be a R as well so you get the consonants BRNT. The place in Eritrea that matches this is the agricultural city of BARENTU. This is your PUNT.

I ordered this book and it confirms EVERYTHING I have been stating in my debates with Gore. One, it confirms that the Egyptian language is syllabic. Two, it confirms that the H is really an SH (CH) sound. Observe the following from the book:

AMARIGNA EGYPTIAN (per Budge)

sh 𓆎 - then, pastime hau-t - time, period

m 𓆏pan style="font-weight:bold;">CH' 𓆏T' - take possession hbt - mission, raid

CH'an 𓆏 load, pack, carry hnn - to be bowed, loaded

CH' 𓆏r - LIGHT hrw - day, today, daily

shom 𓆏 take office hmi - government

shro - mixture of peas and beans hrw - vegetables

sh 𓆏pan style="font-weight:bold;">sh 𓆏 flee, to evade haha - to go back, to retreat

CHiru - falcon hrw - pertaining to Horus (the hawk deity)

(Remember Wim van Binsbergen's notion of proto-Nostratic **hr* for falcon with Egyptian hrw (Horus). The modern name in Nostratic for falcon/hawk is hierax)

With this evidence plain as day, one can see how the "proto" Indo-European form **s□l*, **sawel* or **sul* came to be from CH'arar. This would also explain why in the other Niger-Congo languages this became OSORO, IJERU and IZULU. They note in the book that the symbol for R is also the symbol for L simultaneously. Seeing how HRW in Nostratic is HIERAX, it should not be an issue equating the Greek HELIOS with CHIRU (Hrw).

I can say that this is legit and it matches everything I've come to know by studying the other African languages and oral traditions concerning the script. What's in this book also confirms a lot of Ferg Somo's renderings in the Ba-Ntu languages and I see parallels in the Yoruba. What this also confirms is Diodorus Siculus' statement concerning the oral traditions of the Egyptians. I will repeat here:

Diodorus Siculus, The Library of History, Books II.35 - IV.58, Translated by C.H. Oldfather, Harvard University Press, 2000, informs us that the founders of Pharoanic Egypt and the natives were different people. He goes on to state:

"[The Ethiopians] They say also that the Egyptians are colonists sent out by the Ethiopians, Osiris having been the leader of the colony (...) And the larger part of the customs of the Egyptians are, they hold, Ethiopian, the colonists still preserving their ancient manners (...) Many other things are also told by them concerning their own antiquity and the colony which they sent out that became the Egyptians, but about this there is no special need of our writing anything."

The same way this script is used in Ethiopia for a good number of Ethiopian languages, is the same way the M-du Njora (matṢanṢṣ) was used to write the many languages of Egypt (Gebts). Looking at the word Gebts it makes more sense when we look at Aigyptos in the Greek instead of the usual excuse of He.t Ka Ptah. And It's funny how even the in Egyptian the word QBT (Gebts) is translated as a word for a nome in Upper Egypt and the word QMI refers to Upper Egypt in the dictionaries, but among the Ethiopians and the Kenyans respectfully, these terms refer to all of Egypt (Gebts, Ikami respectfully) .

ONYEKACHI: Much of that initialscholarshipwill be flawed but eventually with increased rigour and discipline we will test Diop's ideas to truth or destruction

ASAR: we must first create our own standards. As I have stated before, the European knows little about African culture or the spirit of its languages. If we keep using their misguided standards, we will never reach Diop's charge to reconcile Africa's historical past by examining its relation to Egypt. Time and time again we have to correct people stuck on Eurocentric ideas of African realities and until Black people realize this one truth, we will get no where: "Africa knows more about Africans than Europeans." You'd think this was something simple to realize.

We were privileged to host Ms Teresia Kanyenya of Isiolo at KCDN today.

She arrived at KCDN at about midday and we went to the site which we cleaned last Satu and Teresia planted a commemorative tree.

The surprise we got on site is captured on pictures 314 and 316. This is a woman whose h borders the Canal and we found her watering the seedlings that we planted behind her ho That was our greatest joy today.

That is the power of collective responsibility.

Kindly join us to ensure that our dream of a Community Arboretum bears fruit. We have volunteers on site and it is costing us Kshs 5,000 to maintain the work each day. With the support of Friends like Terry, we know we will Move From Talking to Tasking.

Lastly, I was impressed today when our President Moved From Talking to Tasking at KI during the fundraising in aid of the fire victims of Lamu. He said as much; we must Move Talking to Tasking.

Thank you for your vist to KCDN Terry, and thank you to Mr. President for Moving Fror Talking to Tasking.

In Tigrigna, "bhari" is "ocean" but that is not the same root as our term. I'm not sure what it means and one would have to know if there are any prefixes or suffixes being used. In Tigrigna (tee-gree-nya), "ab" is a prefix meaning "place." That could be the BA in BARENTU. They also have a -tu is a plural suffix. So the heart of the word could be AREN or some version. I need to check a dictionary.

The main thing is how one renders the value of the glyphs. From what I'm looking at, there are some major things that Egyptologists have gotten completely wrong about the glyphs and only the Ethiopian languages and philosophical concepts can answer it.

words, it is almost impossible for those who have been conditioned to face the facts.

I ask 'what evidence' is there that this hieroglyphic word is an Asiatic/Semitic word.

They can not produce any such evidence, but they still believe what they believe (information based on a concoction of some one's imagination.

You use the words of the language, you write in the language of the population you are communicating with.

When Egyptians wrote communication with foreigners, only then would they have used foreign words, that foreigners would understand.

When Egyptians wrote information to/for Egyptians they would use Egyptian words that Egyptians knew the meaning of.

=====

Why is it essential to push the Semitic/Asiatic caper?

To promote the myth that foreigners ruled Egypt, the mythologist must say, that is a Semitic/Asaitic name.. (assertion NON Egyptians)

By stastics through out world nations, there have always been foreign invaders. There is little doubt that Egypt was invaded by foreigners, but NONE of those said to be Hyksos are identified as foreigners.

IF there is ancient Egyptian hieroglyphs created in real time, that specifices where any one defined as a Hyksos came from, that would be interesting.

In the list of those identified as Hyksos kings, I have yet to see(1) Where they are identified as Hyksos (2) Where they are identified as kings (3) where their place of origin is identified.

It is like generations 4000 years from now reading an ancient text from the American empire about Pancho Villa, and writing history that Mexicans ruled America... This IS the very stuff that 'the Canaanite rule of Egypt' is made of.

If/When Egyptians wrote to foreigners, they used foreign words. When Egyptians wrote information to Egyptians, the words they used were words used by Egyptians.. Egyptian words

Greetings

I have been recently challenged by anative Ethiopian concerning what theinittial glyph is in the word and the meaning of the word KMT. Egyptologists, Eurocentricsts and Afrocentricists interpret KMT to mean "the black land." With what has been revealed to me, that notion will be shattered. The issue I have always had is wondering why a "Black" people would name themselves "black" when they are amongst other black people? The reasons I have received never answered the question.

 116

Anyways, at first the glyph was interpreted to be a piece of allegator skin. Later it was interpreted to be a piece of charcoal. What has been told to me is that it is neither and actually represents the end or edge of a river bank. It is interpreted as the port to bring agricultural goods. It is more so a farm development or port to drop off goods. At first I was skeptical because but I remembered the argument from Cameroonian Egyptologist Dr. Oscar Pfouma stating that the term KM across Africa, in terms of nationhood, had nothing to do with the color of one's skin. He provides the following examples as proof:

Egyptic: km "*farm"

Basa: kaam "farm"

Doai: kaam "farm"

Esitako: ekaam "id."

Ngodzin: kam "id."

Runda: kumadin "id."

Egyptic: km "*polis"

Coptic: kϣ "Egypt" vs kmom "black"

Balue: kom "country, region"

Okam: ekoma "city"

Ndzem: k□□rural area"

Bateteka: komwa "country, region"

Bakweri: kumi "country"

Zulu: -khumbi "nation"

Pende: guma "country, region"

Dewoi: gumo "village, city"

Caga: gumi "rural area"

Lingala: -gumba "city"

Galla: gomdji "land which grows warm and healthy cultivated"

What lends support to this theory is the earliest depiction on record of the word KMT in regards to a national designation. The earliest depiction has the N23 (irrigated land) determinative . This would clearly indicate farming or farm land and not a color designation on the land or the people. It also lends support to another definition of the word KMT which means the end, to bring to an end as KM-T would have been the "end" of a merchant's journey from inner Africa along the Nile or the Red Sea.  N23

qm = to bring to an end, complete (Budge 770a)

khm, Khmi = to bring to an end, to make an end of (Budge 546a)

km = to bring to and end, to finish, to complete, the end, end of a moment (charcoal biliteral) (Budge 787b)

km-t = end of a period, completion (ibid)

kmi = finished products (ibid)

My issue is that the KM symbol proposed to be the end of a river bank looks nothing of the sort in my opinion. The following symbol I could see:

I don't know if anyone has seen natural wood burning but it looks just like the gardiner sign I16. But then again, there are a lot of symbols that aren't obvious to the modern person. Another interesting bit of information is the "god" Aten is really a symbol for "ancestors." In Tigrigna the word is "idna" and means "hands." The idea is that the ancestors reach their hands to help and bless the living. At first there doesn't seem to be a connect, but when you examine the following there seems to be some credibility to it:

Notice the "hands" coming from the sun? This is where we would get the hebrew name for god ADONAI coming from IDNA.

This would lend support to my notion that Africans, in regards to words for the "sun" are not really talking about the sun but its effect or by product (light). I remember in a video tape that Dr. Ben, an Ethiopian, stated that the symbol for RA really means "all that god sees" which would symbolically mean that the "sun" is God's "eye." Nothing new here as that is pretty standard across Africa. But in Ethiopia the term "ra-ey" means "sight/vision" and would lend support to Dr. Ben's rendering of the symbol of "RA" meaning "all that god sees." In Ethiopia they argue that the sign for the "sun" really isn't a sun but the pupil of an eye.

| 29833|2009-09-13 00:06:13|Asar Imhotep|General misconcepts about Egypt and its script|
In this brief email I wanted to throw-out for the moment some ideas that can be elaborated on in the near future. This is just to get people thinking of their orientation as far as thoughts on ancient Gebts (Egypt).

If you talk to elders on the continent of Africa about what we call Egypt today, they will tell you some things that are totally different than from what you will read in the Egyptology books. There are several reasons why one should be cautioned as to believing European writers concerning African realities. The way the culture is shaped in the west, it prevents the layman from understanding the nuances that is the essence or substratum of African societies. It is these "little" nuances embedded in the African (if we can say that) world-view, that helps one to understand the general cultural practices and the artistic expressions rooted in their world-view.

It is my understanding of African cultures, philosophies and cosmologies that makes me to say that the Greeks were not as ignorant of African history and culture as some might think. Diodorus Siculus told us that the customs of Egypt are that of the Ethiopians. A good historian will follow the literature to see if it is in fact true. Why all of the historians say, "the hell with the Greeks" and look for the origins and customs in Europe and Arabia baffles me. This is a rejection of the ancient model as Bernal would say, as the ancient records contradict everything the Aryan ("modern") model has proported.

Here is something for you to think about. The language of ancient Egypt is a trade language and a language of the priesthood. The majority of the people were illiterate. They could not read nor speak the Mdw Ntr script. The common people spoke their native languages. The 42 nomes of Egypt were 42 different ethnic groups that came together to form a federation we call "Egypt." This is why there was such a significance to the number 42: 42 admonitions to maat, 42 steps to the temples, 42 judges in the book of the dead, etc.

The script was patterned after the languages in Ethiopia. Everyone in Ethiopia spoke the "mdw ntr" language, but not everyone in Egypt. This is the first thing you have to understand. If you understand this very basic historical truth, your studies in the Egyptian language will be easier and you won't have to unlearn as much as you would a full fledged Egyptologist who didn't ask one African about their history.

One may ask how is that even possible? I tell you it's possible and it still goes on to this day. I engage in such a practice on a daily basis because I am a software programmer by trade. In software programming you have a general script that organizes the ones and zeros on your computer to do various tasks like email a yahoogroups. If I am the creator of the script, everyone who codes in my scripting language has to follow the mileau or rules I set up for the script. It is not necessary that you even understand the etymological origins of each word used in the script. All you need to know is that each segment means something. To save space and time while coding, most of the script is condensed or made up of acronyms. It would take you forever to type out dissertations to get some script to work. Now imagine if you had to carve your computer script on stone. Do you know how long that would take?

So now you can understand in part why the Egyptians ommitted vowels. But one may ask, "what about the determinatives?" They served a different function than what is genrally believed to be the case. Some "determinatives" are actually words. Some are affixes. That aspect of the script would take us beyond our "brief" discussion here.

Anyway, getting back to the programming example, no matter where you go in the world, you do not "translate" the code into the native language of the people writing the script. Even without understanding the details of the words, they can utilize the script without adding Russian (for example) into my English script. Although I use English words, my computer script is NOT English and uses an entirely different syntax. That will be important in future studies.

The same with Egyptian. The use of the script has not died out in Africa regardless of what Europeans think. Remember what I said, the script is a script for the priesthood. Only in African priesthoods will you find the use of the script. Well you must be asking yourself, "why don't they come out with the script?" They have their own reasons. The primary reason is Christianity and Islam. The persecution of African customs has compelled the priesthoods to keep it secret. How can you verify this? You can't. All you can do is get initiated into an African priesthood and find out yourself. If you are diligent there will be some Africans that can tell you some things without

Here are some things that will let you know that, just as Diodorus Siculus stated, Ethiopia is the birth place of the customs. Oh and just for the record, ummm, listen to Dr. Ben. With the exception of the mountain of the moon quote, listen to Dr. Ben. Okay back, here is something you may not know about the script that you won't get in the Egyptology books. Each script has a name. Usually the first consonant is chosen to represent the script if it is to represent that consonant. The same for the vowels but the vowels in general can represent any vowel contrary to popular belief. So the A (vulture) glyph can represent a/e/i/o/u or other variation depending on language. Here are just a "few" examples of what I mean.

Ask yourself, "what is this sign and how did they choose it to represent the sound value of /h/?" Here is why. In Amarigna language:

The Gardiner sign O4 with the /h/ value is such because the name for the symbol starts with an "h". Here is another one for you to contemplate:

You may be saying to yourself, "well I see a w first." That is part of the prefix. The root is "bar." I mentioned earlier that the Egyptian didn't have a "p" sound. Look at the following image. With the exception of the little animal extension of at the top of the seat, the chair is square.

?? bat - calf of leg

Are you starting to get it? I'll do just one more:

 X7 - q (soft /k/) value
 ????? qulqul 𓆎 - downhill

Do you see how fun this is? I will say that not all of them are that easy. Here's an example:

 G17 - /m/ value
 A??? am 𓆎 - management

Here the age old saying "wise as an owl" applies here. The owl represents wisdom and it is with wisdom that one is able to manage things. Egyptologists have not known this because they refuse to ask Africa anything and think Africans know nothing about their own scripts and history.

Here is something else you might not know, the different spellings of a word is often given the same meaning when that is not the case in Egyptian. Since you all know I am working on the book Osiris Decoded, I figure I'd give you a preview of what's revealed in it.

The common name "Osiris" is just one transposition of the name by the Greeks. There are many rulers in Ethiopia named Osiris, but you don't know how to read Mdw Ntr so you don't recognize it. If you have ever heard of Haile Selassie I , you know his name is RAS TAFARI. The word RAS is the name for "Osiris."

In Amarigna dialect, the word RA-EY (raey) means "sight/vision." The word EZ means "command." MAZEZ is "to command." The me- prefix means "to do." So we have RAEY + EZ. When combined, the vowels are elided to RAS as in RAS TAFARI. We know RAS means "head" but it actually means "to command from the top." In other words a ruler, king, or someone in authority. We find the same concept in Yoruba with the word ORI. ORI is two words: O (owner, possessor) + RI (to see, sight, vision). Together ORI means "head" and refers to leadership. ORI in Yoruba and RAEY in Amarigna are the same term.

In the Egyptian the eye symbol is given as IRI and the throne is AS. Unless you see the WAS scepter in the name "Osiris" there is NOT a W in the name. This is a mistake Egyptologists make. WSIR is not the same word or title as IRI + AS = RAS. It should be noted that there are, by one estimate, 185 different spellings of the name "Osiris." Each "version" gives a new name.

So, to confirm this concept, and demonstrate that this isn't a "chance" resemblance, we go back to the Yoruba. Remember R and L are interchangeable and the sign in Egyptian for R is the same symbol for L regardless of what Egyptologists try to argue. In Yoruba you have the word ALASE which means "Person of Power." So we have:

Ethiopian = RAS = Commander (to command from the top) / Head
Egyptian = RAS = (the same)
Yoruba = ALASE = Person of power (often pronounced ALA-SHEE)

This is just one rendering of "Osiris." Osiris is the Greek transposition of the Yoruba IWAJU-ORI which means "seat of mystic vision, power center of the crown of the head." It consist of IWA + AJE + ORI. IWA is "character." AJE is "crown" and ORI is "head" or "consciousness." I have already broken this term down in the Osiris Decoded paper and will not elaborate here for our "brief" discussion. But in the Egyptian you have WS + IRI and that's how we get WSIR which the Greeks rendered OSIRIS (adding their -s suffix).

It should be noted that in the Amarigna, AAWAJA means "he proclaimed" speaking about anyone who has the authority to proclaim anything like a law. In Yoruba AWUJALI means "king" in the IJEBU district. It is the king who gives the national proclamations. Again, these aren't "chance correspondences" here. So how did those Yoruba all the way in West Africa get the same terms for rulership as those Ethiopians WAAYYYYYY over there in East Africa? Did those illiterate priests go to college and heard of the Afrocentric movement and decided to come back to the village and enlighten their other illiterate elders? I will let ya'll think about that one.

Oh, and one last thing, I dare anyone to find an original Greek document that states the Greeks meant "sun burnt faces" when they said the word AITHIOPS which became the word for Ethiopians. The truth of the matter is the "Ethiopians call their land TOBIYA. There is no TH sound in Amarigna and no P sound. These are what the Greeks thought they heard and mispronounced TOBIYA as AITHIOPIA. Anyone claiming that the Greeks was talking about "all Black people" please provide primary evidence of such a claim. I have been waiting on that one for years.

The same thing with the word EGYPT. I dare anyone one of you to find an original Greek document that states EGYPT came from HET-KA-PTAH. The Greeks called "Egypt" what the TOBIYA peopled called "Egypt" and that is GEBTS and is how we get AGEPYTOS. Think about it, the Greeks have a K in their language. They wouldn't mispronounce a sound they have in their own language. So if it was from HET-KA-PTAH, you would see the K sound in the rendering. Budge renders the word QEBT and GEBT as the capital of the 5th nome of upper Egypt. That is incorrect. It applies to all of what is "Egypt."

This was just some food for thought to help rattle your senses so that one can begin the journey of thinking like an African when it comes to our languages and symbols. When a European tells you other wise, tell em to "prove it" by NOT quoting another European author, but by explaining how they came to the concept association they are arguing.

Peace,

For the Yoruba Diagram, see Baba Medahochi Kofi Omowale Zannu Mogbarimu Ajinaku El notes @ <http://singlelink.typepad.com/medahochi/>. It seems the full documents with the Odus is not coming up. When I get a chance to get to my computer I can send you his full documents. This is just one variation of the sign. I was first introduced to this symbol by Dr. Afalobi Epega, a fifth generation Ifa priests out of Ode Remo. This symbol is quite common in Ifa.

For the Dogon symbol, see The Pale Fox, starting at pg 185 by Griaule and Dieterlen. Or you can see Laird Scranton's Sacred Symbols of the Dogon pg. 172.

For the Kongo diagram (the one you see is my own composite of several of the diagrams), see Dr. Kimbwandende Kia Bunseki Fu-Kiau's African Cosmology of the Bantu Kongo. Just read the whole book.

For the Egyptian symbols see Dr. George GM James Stolen Legacy. Here is a decent discussion on Aristotle's The Four Humors: <http://www.homeopathy.com.pk/four-humors-basic-concept.php>. And this symbolism of the "sun", symbolic of the human being going through its cycle of conception, life, maturity and death, is present in so many Egyptian scenes as it is too much to demonstrate. That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.

You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got it from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

This stage is called YALA. In the Kongo diagram, on the right side of the image (V2) that stage of development is called KALA and KALA means " burning charcoal" or "black." It is the stage of FIRE, and the bottom is water as well. K's often turn into Y's. YALA and KALA are the same principle and the same word. It is the same in ancient Egypt as the beginning cycle is KPHERA, which is another form of RA or "light" or the "sun."

Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

If you have the opportunity to meet some "Nubians" in Sudan or Ethiopia, they will tell you that their educational system for their "priesthoods" are based on the knowledge of this symbol. Check out Dr. Ben's works where he is talking about being a "360 degree Mason." (See Dr. Ben Ramesis II) That isn't something he made up.

A full discussion of each of these symbols would encompass a large volume and it would demonstrate that it is totally impossible for the Dogon, Yoruba or Kongo-Bantu people to have gotten certain elements of these symbols unless they were in ancient Egypt. Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video:
http://www.ted.com/talks/ron\_eglash\_on\_african\_fractals.html

If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLES means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

I hope this helps.

Dear Asar,

Sorry, I don't mean to interrupt your discussion with Fari - but I just have a brief question on the intriguing diagrams you present below. They seem to be interpretations/ adaptations of Dogon (pale fox?), Yoruba (Ifa) & other cosmological descriptions - but you've given no references - I'm interested to know, who are the authors of these particular diagrams? - I'm a student of Ifa, and have never seen the path of Odu diagram.

Subject: Re: [africanclassicalhistory] Problems With Amharic and Egyptian Comparison

Sorry, I will address this later as you have NOT addressed the historical questions I asked you. Again, this is an example of when there are tough questions, you avoid them and move on to something else. The questions are still the same and as long as you keep "skating" around them, you will never reconcile this issue of cognitive dissonance when it comes to African history. Just as a reminder, here are a few of the questions again.

1. Given the fact that the Egyptian and Greek records indicate that there were people already living among the upper Nile what we call Egypt today, before the conquest of the south (Ta-Seti, "Nubia", Ethiopia, whatever you want to call it), how do you hold that Egyptian is monolingual? That there was no influence from the people that lived there?
2. How does a major feature of ancient Egyptian mythology (the four moments of the sun) make it into the Yoruba, Dogon, Akan, Kongo and Zulu mythology, culture and philosophy?
3. Why do we have the same symbols for this philosophy in all of the regions I mentioned above?

Dogon Womb of all Signs and developmental path of life and the sun

Yoruba path of Odu and "four moments of the sun"

Kongo "four moments of the sun"

Aristotle's Four Humors

Egyptian Diagram of Opposites

Egyptian "four moments of the sun"

I can demonstrate this same symbolic philosophy all over the continent, but we're going to keep this simple. How do you account for the same symbol, with the same meaning and same purpose and function in Egypt, Kongo, Mali, Nigeria and ancient Greece? Before you even think that it is "possible" by some supernatural "chance correspondence, " to say that each one of these cultures could have thought of these symbols, with the same=2 0function, the same purpose and iconography independently and on their own, is like saying it is also possible for the Khoisan to independently invent the Autobots logo and associate it with the same story line..

Then after you successfully explain that, I want you to explain how these symbols ended up in the ancient writing scripts of west Africans?

Igbo Script and Egyptian

Mande Script and Egyptian

Again, if you are as serious as you say, address the questions I have asked.

Subject: [africanclassicalhistory story] Problems With Amharic and Egyptian Comparison

Asar: "Thank You Onyekachi

I ordered this book and it confirms EVERYTHING I have been stating in my debates with Gore"

GORE: Since you have not understood the basics of the comparative method (the method used to demonstrate genetic relationships between languages) or my refutations of your work I can only assume that your thinking this work "confirms EVERYTHING" is yet another misunderstanding.

Asar: "One, it confirms that the Egyptian language is syllabic".

GORE: Perhaps the work claims that the Egyptian language is syllabic (you do not make this clear) but it cannot CONFIRM such unless it has demonstrated this. Has this been defended against Egyptologists? I'm not even asking whether Egyptologists agree (because they may disagree and be wrong) I'm just asking whether the syllabic theory has been defended against their arguments.

Asar: "Two, it confirms that the H is really an SH (CH) sound.

Observe the following from the book:

AMARIGNA EGYPTIAN (per Budge)

sh 𐤱 - then, pastime hau-t - time, period

m 𐤌 pan style="font-weight:bold;">CH 𐤠 - take possession hbt - mission, raid

CH 𐤠 an 𐤏 load, pack, carry hnn - to be bowed, loaded

CH 𐤠 r 𐤓 - LIGHT hrw - day, today, daily

shom 𐤱𐤌 take office hmi - government

shro - mixture of peas and beans hrw - vegetables

sh 𐤱 pan style="font-weight:bold;">sh 𐤱 flee, to evade haha - to go back, to retreat

CH 𐤠 iru - falcon & p; hrw - pertaining to Horus (the hawk deity)

GORE: Firstly this does not CONFIRM that the Egyptian `h` is really a `sh` or `ch`. What the list claims, if we follow the methodology of the comparative method, is that Egyptian `h` is the recurrent correspondent of Amharic `ch` and `sh`. You cannot use Amharic to determine what the Egyptian sound would be.

Secondly as a comparative list for the purpose of uncovering genetic relationships this is a poor list. The vocabulary can hardly be described as basic. Basic vocabulary includes words like `foot`, `leg`, `eye`, `arm`, `go`, `stand`, `sun`, `tree` etc. It does not include terms like `government` and `take office`. Don't get me wrong cognates of this nature can be found amongst related languages but when these (words like `government`) are present there will always be an abundance of more basic vocabulary too and they take priority. Where are they here?

Thirdly the meanings are related but not a single one of them are exact. They are not even particularly close. This increases the chance of being able to find `correspondences`. Comparing `peas and beans` to `vegetables` is not impressive. If you were comparing `peas` in one language to `beans` in another this would be closer. Where is the impressive demonstration that makes the case. Again you can find cognates at these sorts of semantic distances but preferably not in the initial demonstration.

Fourthly why are there two correspondents for Egyptian `h` in Amharic. Is there a conditioning factor determining whether it is a `sh` or a `ch`? Why have you not presented in this?

Explanations should always be given for double correspondences.

Fifth unless you have some basic idea of the grammar of Amharic you will fail to spot basic errors which the author will make. It is not the first time I have seen this kind of comparison so I know what to expect in terms of mistakes.

Asar: (Remember Wim van Binsbergen's notion of proto-Nostratic **hr* for falcon with Egyptian hrw (Horus). The modern name in Nostratic for falcon/hawk is hierax)"

GORE: Nostratic relies on the same poor semantic comparisons and unexplained multiple correspondences. It is hardly a good example.

Asar: "With this evidence plain as day, one can see how the "proto" Indo-European form **s<sup>h</sup>l*, **sawel* or **sul* came to be from CH'arar".

GORE: 1) It's certainly not plain and it's certainly not evidence, as I have shown above.

2) Borrowing tends to be of words that the borrowers do not have like technical terms. `Sun` is not a technical term but a basic one. 3) Furthermore what is your chronology of the Egyptian language and Proto-Indo-European? 4) Interesting how you are prepared to use reconstructions when they appear to back your claims. 5) Are you claiming that Amharic CH'arar is the original to be comparing this rather than Egyptian Hrw with Proto-Indo-European reconstructions? Have you checked what is the Ge'ez form which would be an older `uncle` language?

Asar: "This would also explain why in the other Niger-Congo languages this became OSORO, IJERU and IZULU."

GORE: Again you need to explain the difference in the vowels. Vowel differences do occur but they come with explanations. You would also have to show that `s` in one language corresponds to `j` in another language and `z` in IsiZulu. Have you done this?

Asar: "They note in the book that the symbol for R is also the symbol for L simultaneously.

Seeing how HRW in Nostratic is HIERAX, it should not be an issue equating the Greek HELIOS with CHIRU (Hrw)".

GORE: How exactly? The -os of Greek Heli-os is a grammatical ending and not part of the root. It therefore is not cognate with any supposed -ax in **Hierax* which a) cannot be shown to be separate from Hierax, and b) the reconstruction **hierax* is dubious because Nostratic is a dubious construct.

Asar: "I can say that this is legit and it matches everything I've come to know by studying the other African languages and oral traditions concerning the script".

GORE: I can say, based on what I've seen so far, that's it's not legit.

Asar: "What's in this book also confirms a lot of Ferg Somo's renderings in the Ba-Ntu languages and I see parallels in the Yoruba".

GORE: Ferg's work has the same faults as your own. 1) Trying to compare \-cana* and English `sun` while totally ignoring the Proto-Indo-European reconstruction is poor methodology that even Onyekachi has detected in relation to using Tigrinya rather than Ge'ez. You do not even address this. 2) You do not even address the issue of Amharic and Tigrinya and the relationship they should have with Bantu if you are correct. If you can find cognates in any languages compared with Egyptian then it's probably because your methodology is not strict enough.

Asar: "What this also confirms is Diodorus Siculus' statement concerning the oral traditions of the Egyptians. I will repeat here:

Diodorus Siculus, The Library of History, Books II.3 5 - IV.58, Translated by C.H. Oldfather, Harvard University Press, 2000, informs us that the founders of Pharoanic Egypt and the natives were different people. He goes on to state:

"[The Ethiopians] They say also that the Egyptians are colonists sent out by the Ethiopians, Osiris having been the leader of the colony (...) And the larger part of the customs of the Egyptians are, they hold, Ethiopian, the colonists still preserving their ancient manners (...) Many other things are also told by them concerning their own antiquity and the colony which they sent out that became the Egyptians, but about this there is no special need of our writing anything."

GORE: Diodorus here is referring to Nubia and not the land of Amharic and Tigrinya. Poor methodology.

Asar: "The same way this script is used in Ethiopia for a good number of Ethiopian languages, is the same way the M-du Njora (mat 𐤎𐤅𐤋𐤏𐤓𐤕) was used to write the many languages of Egypt (Ge-bTS)"

GORE: Where have you isolated the different languages that were used to write the Ethiopianscript and Egyptian script?

Asar: "Looking at the word Gebts it makes more sense when we look at Aigyptos in the Greek instead of the usual excuse of He.t Ka Ptah. And It's funny how even in Egyptian the word QBT (Gebts) is translated as a word for a nome in Upper Egypt and the word QMI refers to Upper Egypt in the dictionaries, but among the Ethiopians and the Kenyans respectfully, these terms refer to all of Egypt (Gebts, Ik ami respectfully) ".

GORE: That bit is pure hocus-pocus. Which Kenyans today? You give me references from 1990 or thereabouts for Rwandan and Kenyan "priests" who use mystical terms that are presumably not in any dictionaries from the 1920's before the Afrocentric fashion became widely known and expect me to take you seriously. Poor, shambolic scholarship.

Subject: [Ta_Seti] Challenge to charcoal glyph in the word KMT

Greetings

I have been recently challenged by anative Ethiopian concerning what theinittial glyph is in the word and the meaning of the word KMT. Egyptologists, Eurocentricists and Afrocentricists interpret KMT to mean "the black land." With what has been revealed to me, that notion will be shattered. The issue I havealways had is wondering why a"Black" people would name themselves "black" when they are amongst other black people? The reasons I have received never answered the question.

Anyways, at first the glyph was interpreted to be a piece of allegator skin. Later it was interpreted to be a piece of charcoal. What has been told to me is that it is neither and actually represents the end or edge of a river bank. It is interpreted as the port to bring agricultural goods. It is more so a farm development or port to drop off goods. At first I was skeptical because but I remembered the argument from Cameroonian Egyptologist Dr. Oscar Pfouma stating that the term KM across Africa, in terms of nationhood, had nothing to do with the color of one's skin. He provides the following examples as proof:

Egyptic: km "*farm"
 Basa: kaam "farm"
 Doai: kaam "farm"
 Esitako: ekaam "id."
 Ngodzin: kam "id."
 Runda: kumadin "id."

Egyptic: km "*polis"
 Coptic: ⲕⲙⲓ "Egypt" vs ⲕⲙⲟⲙ "black"
 Balue: kom "country, region"
 Okam: ekoma "city"
 Ndzem: ⲕⲙⲓⲙⲓ "rural area"
 Bateteka: komwa "country, region"
 Bakweri: kumi "country"
 Zulu: -khumbi "nation"
 Pende: guma "country, region"
 Dewoi: gumo "village, city"
 Caga: gumi "rural area"
 Lingala: -gumba "city"
 Galla: gomdji "land which grows warm and healthy cultivated"

What lends support to this theory is the earliest depiction on record of the word KMT in regards to a national designation. The earliest depiction has the N23 (irrigated land) determinative . This would clearly indicate farming or farm land and not a color designation on the land or the people. It also lends support to another definition of the word KMT which means the end, to bring to an end as KM-T would have been the "end" of a merchant's journey from inner Africa along the Nile or the Red Sea.  N23

qm = to bring to an end, complete (Budge 770a)

khm, Khmi = to bring to an end, to make an end of (Budge 546a)

km = to bring to an end, to finish, to complete, the end, end of a moment (charcoal biliteral) (Budge 787b)

km-t = end of a period, completion (ibid)

kmi = finished products (ibid)

My issue is that the KM symbol proposed to be the end of a river bank looks nothing of the sort in my opinion. The following symbol I could see:

I don't know if anyone has seen natural wood burning but it looks just like the gardiner sign I16. But then again, there are a lot of symbols that aren't obvious to the modern person.

Another interesting bit of information is the "god" Aten is really a symbol for "ancestors." In Tigrigna the word is "idna" and means "hands." The idea is that the ancestors reach their hands to help and bless the living. At first there doesn't seem to be a connect, but when you examine the following there seems to be some credibility to it:

Notice the "hands" coming from the sun? This is where we would get the hebrew name for god ADONAI coming from IDNA.

This would lend support to my notion that Africans, in regards to words for the "sun" are not really talking about the sun but its effect or by product (light). I remember in a video tape that Dr. Ben, an Ethiopian, stated that the symbol for RA really means "all that god sees" which would symbolically mean that the "sun" is God's "eye." Nothing new here as that is pretty standard across Africa. But in Ethiopia the term "ra-ey" means "sight/vision" and would lend support to Dr. Ben's rendering of the symbol of "RA" meaning "all that god sees." In Ethiopia they argue that the sign for the "sun" really isn't a sun but the pupil of an eye.

Greetings,

Bro. Gore. I know the question was not directly addressed to me but in light of a past statement I feel that I ought to respond. You asked Bro. Pruitt if Reparations For Black/African-Americans is The Kind of Conversation That He believes the President Obama should have with White Americans ( and the Eurocentric Negro Conservatives, my addition ). Well My Answer is YES!

To be brief I will state that the Marshall Plan for Europe/Japan and the senseless wars of Neo-Colonialism in Asia ( Korea, Vietnam, Cambodia etc ) and Africa ( all over the Continent ) has bankrupted this Country for while CASH flowed for the Working Peoples, The Middle Class and The Wealthy The INTEREST from the Unpaid Bills, Debtorship and Squandering 2 Trillion from the National Treasury ( The Public Trust Fund ) all contributed to the present Economic Collapse and Crisis.

No. 2 : I know that there are many other important factors in addition to this such as The wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, The Energy and Technology failures of Microsoft, Enron and many others. The failures of Lehman Brothers, AIG, Washington Mutual and The Entire Banking/Financial Industry. The Health Care Insurance Crisis, The Housing and Real Estate Crisis, The Airlines and Auto Industry Crisis and so much more.

The Accounts Payable Time for European/Caucasians has Arrived Now and I am not just talking in Dollars and Cents but in life itself ( Nature, Spirit, Ancestors, Intelligence, Mind, Psychology, The Elemental Forces of Nature, Physics. The Human Beings and Our Physical Bodies being THE PRODUCTS of ALL of These.! )

Neither White Peoples and Any of Their Loyal/Conniving Negroes, Indians, Arabs, Orientals or Hispanics are going to Avert or Avoid this. It is simply a matter of the Times that we are In. The Religions, Jails and Prisons won't help any of them this time either. How Long Did A Civilization or Group of Peoples Think They Could Go On Like This Anyway.???!!!

No. 3 : Since you have outlined the atrocities committed against African/Afroasiatic peoples very well I do not need to recite the litany of offenses. However I will add that throughout all of these crimes against our humanity that the majority of Black Americans have been dirt poor as opposed to Whites comparatively speaking. Our LABOR and MENTALITY was used by them to support, implement and sustain their Eurocentric Industrial Military Complex of White Supremacy Worldwide.! Yes, our ancestors as well as the present generations have been used to support and maintain an Evil Empire that has existed because of Social Insanity and the Functional Insanity resulting therefrom.!

Now, facing 9,000,000,000,000 ( 9 Trillion ) Dollars worth of debt they are frantically looking for Intellectual, Mechanical and Field Slaves Everywhere To Help Them Pay It Off While They Maintain White Supremacy And Stay In Charge .!!!???@ @ @

Not even The Sickened Eurocentric Negroes, Japanese, Hispanics, or any Aboriginal Peoples Are Buying That and New Slaves Cannot Be Made By The Old Ways and Tactics.!

The gist of the matter is that The Political and Religious Negroes, The Street-Gangs/ Organized Crime Negroes, and The Military-Police Negroes ( The Powers That Be In Our Communities ! ) are now facing a Crisis of huge proportions themselves.

Anyone could have seen it coming decades ago. Bro. Gore as you have rightfully noted the White World sought to maintain its power over Black peoples by keeping us culturally ignorant and making us totally dependent on them alone. The Black peoples in the Communities, Companies and Organizations that were allowed to prosper to make the system look good were the ones who would do The Least or Nothing At All to Threaten White Power and Control. In every area, city, town and state this method was employed and maintained.

It seems The Eurocentric Negroes never figured out that as White Peoples wasted their wealth on wars, stealing from each other, making bad investments in temporary fads in the financial industry and not being naturally equipped to run, maintain and sustain a real progressive evolutionary society based on the Natural Sciences And The Human Spiritualities for long term periods of time which is their real problem, that one day soon in this era of time the well would run dry.!( No racism or pun intended. They just haven't reached that state of evolution yet especially when talking about Multi-Racial and Multi-Cultural Interaction in Honesty and Fairness. Nor do we know if they ever will but we should not just sit around and wait on them to do so. However their Leadership just DREADS the thought of them having their own society to themselves alone. That is one of the factors that produced Chattel Slavery. Yes They should pay for it.! )

For instance take a look at The Economic Disaster for Black Americans and The issues becomes more clearer. The Wealthiest and Middle Class Black Americans are facing the greatest loss of wealth in our history in this country. It is said that for every White dollar the Hispanics have 9 Cents and Black Peoples 7 Cents comparatively speaking and this is before The Present Depression.

To close out this response to your question I will just say that White Peoples are going to pay up anyway somewhere, somehow. That process has already began. The larger facet is if Black Peoples of America, Africa, Asia, Australia and the other Indigenous Races will take advantage of this Social Collapse and Breakdown to build our own evolutionary, scientific and spiritual societies out of it.

That Is All.

People would have to say OK let's develop a process to see if blacks should get reparations. That process would be the truth and reconciliation process, which would reveal indisputable evidence supporting the need for black reparations. Simple as that. GORE: Brother Pruitt I think Africans globally are owed the following over the injustices of chattel slavery:

- 1) Compensation for being kidnapped (any culture in any time period will consider this a crime and have compensatory remedies).
- 2) Compensation for being unlawfully beaten and physically brutalised (any culture in any time period will consider this a crime and have compensatory remedies).
- 3) Compensation for being sexually assaulted/raped or forced to witness such (any culture in any time period will consider this a crime and have compensatory remedies).
- 4) Compensation for the massive amount of manhours that were worked. Africans are owed unpaid wages.
- 5) Compensation for breach of contract when the US government reneged on their agreement to compensate enslaved Africans with 40 acres and a mule.
- 6) Compensation for the Jim Crow style discrimination that occurred after overt slavery ended.
- 7) Compensation for the institution of covert slavery that has continued ever since overt slavery was abolished. This consists of making sure Africans in the diaspora and the continent are economically dependent (destroying Black Wall Street, Rosewood, puppetmastering 'independent' African countries).

8) Compensation for individuals of African descent in the diaspora for a lifetime of racial discrimination and the physical and psychological effects thereof.

This is what I think Africans are entitled to. Now this is what I think Africans are going to get: NOTHING! For two simple reasons: 1) Compensation only comes when you win a court case and to do this you must either have an even playing field or a field slanting in your favour. Africans have neither. To get reparations you would have to fight and WIN a war and Africans have not done this.

2) The other reason is that point 4) on its own would bankrupt Western Europe and America even if we used the most paltry wages to calculate the sum. The first generation of Africans, who numbered 11 million by conservative estimates, worked a 12 hour day for let's say 350 days a year (15 days of leave? I don't think so! But let's go with this) and a working life of 10 years before being brutalised to death. We arrive at 462 000 000 000 (four hundred and sixty two billion dollars) manhours. At a rate of 10 cents an hour they would owe diasporal Africans 46 200 000 000 (forty six billion two hundred million dollars).

And remember this is just for the 11 million that are claimed to have been transported. Nothing about the generations born in slavery in the diaspora. And again nothing about compensating them for the horrors they had to experience. And nothing about the interest this owed money will have accrued.

Is this seriously the discussion you want Barack Obama to start with the European world?

Don't just remain silent on this. Get back to me.

Greetings,

Brotha Pruitt says: In passing criticism on Barack Obama that does not mean I do not love the brotha. We all have had heated words with people we love and are able to maintain relationships. I simply want Obama to be man enough to say since others have received reparations for damages inflicted upon their people, it is time to visit the call for African-American Reparations. The statistics are overwhelming and they will prove Segregation, Lynching, the KKK, and legalized police terrorism have all caused great harm to people. Statistics will also show feeble attempts to bring us to equality or offer us assistance in integration, welfare, affirmative action and the DPSS, have also failed and resulted in unrestricted policies, which have caused extreme setbacks to Black Equality.

Dr. Ansari says: The majority of congress are democrats. Most Jews are Democrats. African-Americans are Democrats. 92% of African-Americans voted for Barack Obama. We have a Black Congressional Caucus and an African-American President. Good thing?....v

see.

The Jews in Congress have made sure that their people in America and Israel have received 100's of billions of dollars, of our tax dollars, in direct payments to Israel for defense contracts, banking, insurance and reparations money. Yes, reparations money for Jews, from Black people's labor, with support from the U.S. Congress, Barack Obama, and members of the Black Caucus like Alcee Hastings. The strong point was an agreement amongst the Jewish controlled media to promote the need for Jewish Reparations! Another reason for blacks to form a power base is to demand an answer as to why Congress supports Jewish reparations, and not Slavery reparations.

Henry Waxman a Jewish State Representative from California submitted H.R. 89 for Jewish Reparations and it was passed immediately by Congress. My questions of course are for John Conyers, NCOBRA and Congress who have submitted and rejected H.R 40 for the last 20 years just to study the cruelty and brutality of slavery, its detrimental social and economic impact on African-Americans today and possible remedies!

Barack Obama says African-American's don't deserve reparations and threatened to withdraw the U.S contingent from the Elimination of Racism Conference to the applause of the European countries. That's why Brotha Pruitt blasted him! (Google Elimination of Racism Conference) How can congress move so quick to approve Jewish Reparations for crimes committed against their people, that were not nearly as severe or long lasting as crimes committed against African-Americans. That is simply not fair!!

Are you mad yet?? If not we were not informed of these back door shenanigans by the President, the Black Caucus, or John Conyers. Is there something we can do about it? Yes, all we have to do is abandon integration politics and act in our own self-interest like American Insurance Companies, Police Associations, Teamster Unions, Farmers, Indians, Jews, Japanese and Gays etc. In actuality, integration is un-American, because politics in America is self-interest politics. Those who have a power base are able to engage in American politics and get concessions for their constituents.

Right now our international lawyers and African-Americans who want to own our own land, have our own government, and have our own interest in mind; are putting up radio stations, websites, schools; and are organizing so that we can recall our natural right to sovereignty as a people, so that we can come out from under American authority. In case, you have not read through the lines yet, the Democrats and Congress are aligned with the Europeans and Jews against our interests. We have very few allies so we have to rely on ourselves! It is crucial for blacks to start thinking and claiming sovereignty to heed Marcus Garvey's will, Up you mighty race!!

Brotha Pruitt says: You are absolutely right Dr. Ansari. Since other groups and peoples form power bases to look out for their best interest, it is time for us to come together to form a power base to look out for our best interest. There are obvious and hidden forces that are causing massive damage to African-Americans who desire freedom and independence, from a nation that has intentionally oppressed blacks and kept us from gaining equality. The only way to address this matter is as a collective group. As long as we continue to move in separate directions we will remain a divided people, and victims of police brutality, unjust incarceration and many other forms of inequality and injustice.

We have a great advantage if we would use our critical and analytical thinking, which would lead us to realize we need to form a national union to look out for our best interest. No one cares about our plight as a people and they consistently point to others who have been mis-treated in the past, and they are quick to offer them restitution and compensation. African-Americans will get respect and win reparations by simply uniting around a plan that will enable us to form a national reparations union oriented power base. As you know I have been suggesting we utilize the Five Phase Plan and the Reparations Proclamation to serve this purpose. Both docs contain a strategy that will aid us in developing a will to unite, in order to form a national Reparations Union Lobbying Association (RULA), power base, to address critical issues, gain respect and win reparations.

* Hebrew, according to the bible (by any definition you chose) Israelites were only a small fraction of the Hebrews.

* Semite, by any definition, Israelites were only a small fraction of the Semites.

* After having 8 children a Catholic woman converted to Judaism. Three generations later her great grand daughter read that grandma was a Jew ... and now all of the descendants of grandma think of themselves as Jews, Semites, Hebrews.. descendants of the Israelites?

When the general public hears the word anti-Semite, they automatically think Jew.

Even the 'educated' knows what the public thinks of when they hear that word, so why would they use Semite to identify a people the ancient Egyptians were talking about?

In the world of geek, one would use words used by others who speak geek.

In medicine or law, one would speak in terms that apply to their own field.

When speaking to the public, any speaker/writer who intended to speak to the common population.

MUSICAL WORDS

Levant / Asiatic / Semites / foreigners / Arabs

LEVANT

Levant, region on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean Sea. Its name derives from the Italian word Levant, meaning "rising," implying the rising of the sun in the east. Historically, the Levant included all of the countries along the eastern Mediterranean shores, extending from Greece to Egypt. People of Italian or French extraction born in the Levant were sometimes referred to as Levantines. The name Levant States was used to refer to the French mandate over Syria and Lebanon after World War I (1914-1918); today the term is still occasionally applied to those two countries.

1993-2003 Microsoft Corporation. All rights reserved.

I have never seen this word used by Egyptologist before, but show us the hieroglyphic which translates to Levant and inform us how any Egyptologist determined this hieroglyph, identified this region.

The definition says Levant extend from Greece to Egypt, so Egyptians would be included in Levant.

* The ancient Egyptians never used the term Semite (with modern meanings)

* Our term Asia defines an area from Canaan, India, China and Japan. The Egyptians never had such a word.

Translation is presenting the information from one language to another. If it is a translation, then the Egyptian would have the same meaning as our word with that meaning.

Levant / Asiatic / Semites .. BS we would not use such words to define the middle east population.

If we were going to use the MOST common word to define the middle east population, I suppose the clowns would replace Levant / Asiatic / Semites with Arabs.*

(Levant / Asiatic / Semites) ... these NON Egyptian meanings they replace hieroglyphics do nothing to convey the meaning. These are abstract words.

The hieroglyphics they pervert with these meanings , do not identify a population as to they are, but this word defines a population by who they are not.

The hieroglyphs with these perverted English meanings, identify the NOT population.

The hieroglyphs simply identify people who were NOT EGYPTIANS.

The non applicable words (Levant / Asiatic / Semites) should simply be replaced with the word foreigners...

The word does not identify who they are, it identifies who they are not.. foreigners.

In order for a translation to be made, the English word must convey the same meaning as the Egyptian word. Later I will expose the BS words these people inject for Hieroglyphic words.

=====

In an actual translation, the same information must be passed into the words of the population it is passed to. Arabs or foreigners would be terms our culture would call that population.

The words selected by translators are essential to pass the same information.

The mush mouths who try to inject fancy/weird words only hamper the process.

=====

If you brought hamburger back from the store, does that mean what it came from Germany? Didn't the word originate in Germany?

Our vocabulary is PACKED with words which originated in many countries.

No matter where they originated, they are the words of our own culture.

Why would an 'Egyptologist' say the name of any one in the hieroglyphs, came from any place other than Egypt?

We have names that originated in many countries. That does not mean that is where our ancestors came from.

Ha-sus .. is the name of thousands of Spaniards and Mexicans. It is derived from the word Jesus. It does not matter where the name originated, it does NOT mean these people had ancestors in Palestine.

In order to speculate WHERE a name originated, you would have to find an area where that name was used repeatedly .. then you could "ASSUME" the name might have originated there.

When a name is NOT found in any other place or repeated, then it is impossible to speculate the name originated in some other place other than in the location where it is given.

* Names (if originated elsewhere) would not mean that is where a person came from ... and the names 'Egyptologist' say came from elsewhere, are found no place other than Egypt.

* Translating hieroglyphs to words in our language that lead to false beliefs is done by ignorance or the intent to deceive.

* When the Egyptians talked about unidentified people other than Egyptians, they would have used the same kind of words we use in our language.. foreigner/aliens. When the Egyptians talked about specific populations (Romans, Hittites ... ) they would have used the word that identified that specific population.

* When the Egyptians recorded communications for Egyptians, they used Egyptian words that held Egyptian meanings.

I suppose it would be best to take any hieroglyphic, one at a time and look at the original source.

Translation is rendering meanings in the common population. If you have to research words or meanings to find what the guy was trying to say, they translated NOTHING !

| 29839|2009-09-13 08:13:02|Asar Imhotep|Re: General misconcepts about Egypt and its script|
Hmmm, you bring up an important issue. I have always stated that the Egyptian language, in many aspects were tonal for various reasons. Ra Un Nefer suggested this as well. However, I think we fall into the European trap of thinking you can always precisely give an exact definition on terms. Here is just a few examples given the nature of our topic:

iw□ Forehead.

iwj𐀀span> Forehead.

iw□ - or□span> Power center in the forehead, seat of mystic vision.

𐀀j Mystic vision.

□j𐀀span> Top of the head, refers to the power center at the crown of the skull.

Remember that the word ORI already deals with "sight/vision" and "consciousness." When attached to the variations of IWAJU a different set of circumstances are taking place. We are talking about the ability to command, to possess the necessary "ase" to bring your "visions" into manifestation. The key to the word meaning iw□ - or□span> is "seat" of mystic vision. In Amarigna they say EZ or simply Z to denote the throne (thus the throne in Egyptian iconography) but the what is actually being stated is "command". The same thing with the Yoruba with the word □:

□ The Spirit of a Bird used by women (ʒi) to invoke powers used for abundance and justice. This same power is used to consecrate the crown of the Yorubings. Also used as a reference to money or abundance.

Here we are talking about the kings power to "command" his kingdom that is bestowed upon him by the woman. In Yoruba the symbol is not a throne but a "crown." The "throne" or the "crown" are the physical symbols of the idea, not the word itself and this is why you will find variations with similar sounding consonants to mean the exact same thing, just worded differently.

adṣpan> Crown worn by Yorubings (Oba). The crown symbolizes the spiritual transformation that occurs when the Kings (Oba) are installed in office. The crown is also the seat of protection that is given by the Spirit of the Mothers (ʒi).

Ad鳥髻/span> Son of the Spirit of Destiny (Xnm髻), meaning: "Crown is Worthy."

Again, the association with "crown" to "seat" indicates the same principle. In the paper I discuss how the /j/ sound turns into a fricative such as /s/ or /z/. I brought up the question that it may be possible that the /d/ in adṣpan> and the /j/ in □ were actually combined as dj at one point. Often the dj sound will just become d in certain languages (this happened in Egyptian) and the same with the final being /j/. This is where the comparative method comes in handy.

So this is why I do not think the full term of iw□ - or□span> is IWA + OJU as the ORI would be repeating the same concept and the concept of "seat" wouldn't be in the word. Now iw□ by itself may be interpreted that way, but I think the word 耑j actually is a better fit for what you're talking about. But even with that, the first word wouldn't be IWA it would be IWU for - iwu Grey hair, sign of respect. Again, the word isn't referring to "grey hair." Grey hair is just the symbol, the word is better translated as "respect of wisdom associated with an elder" (grey haired person." So we are really talking about "the kind of insight one gains through experience" (mystic vision); intuition, deep thought, the ability to see the hidden layers of reality.

Maulana Karenga introduced the phrase "conceptual elasticity" in regards to Egyptian words. I apply this to all African words as the examples above demonstrate. This makes it hard for comparatists, to always look for "exact matches." It really is impossible and the below example will demonstrate why. In an earlier response to Gore, which he has yet to answer, I posted the following information:

In regards to our subject of why we cannot solely rely on the comparison of proto forms in African languages, we will examine a critical text MUNTU by Jaheinz Jahn (1990:152). Jahn demonstrates why we cannot be myopic and attempt to narrow down

African key concepts to one meaning and thinking that that one meaning is THE meaning of the term. Any true student of African culture and languages will know that unlike European languages, languages based on equation, African languages are elastic, dynamic and analogous. In speaking of the concept of Nommo to African speech, Jahn goes on to state:

So [Aime] Cesaire uses European words in an African way. For example, in Yoruba the mere word itself does not yet convey a concept or idea. The muntu who utters a word must first designate it by his utterance. It is he who gives it its immediate meaning, while giving a new interpretation to every word he speaks, and so finally giving the specific meaning to the vocable or the phoneme. Not only are the Yoruba highly conscious of the meaning of names, writes Beier, but they also like to interpret each word they use. They believe that every word is really a sentence that has been contracted through a series of elisions into a single word. Thus in Yoruba many words are open to different interpretations, Beier continues, and can therefore be used by different speakers in such a way as to evoke a different set of associations. For the European a word like God conveys a stable concept Dr. Idowu, in a lecture given at the University College, Ibadan, in 1957, gave five interpretations of the Yoruba word for God (Olodumare):

1. Olodu-Omo-Ere. The supreme one, offspring of the boa.
2. Olodu-Ma-Re. The supreme one, who remains constant.
3. Olodu Mo Are. The supreme one, wearing the crown
4. Olodu Kari. The perfect one.
5. Oludumare. The one to whom I must return.

The words wife or mother also convey stable concepts to Europeans. Most Yoruba people, however, using the word iyawo (wife) think of a story that is told in the Ifa oracle and which explains that it means suffering in the town of Iwo. The story says that Orunmila, the deity of the oracle, encountered much suffering in the town of Iwo and that later he was given a wife in recompense. Hence the word iyawo. On the other hand Mr. T.S. Sowande of Abeokuta has ventured another interpretation: iya (mother) is explained as one who draws an image and iyawomi (my wife) as one who draws my picture. Again iya mi (my mother) has been interpreted by Mr. Abolubode of Oshogbo as: From where I branch (the mother and her children likened to a river and its tributaries) . Thus in the Yoruba language words cannot become cliché because they are constantly being reinterpreted and charged with new meaning.

Can you see why it is hard for the layman, someone who doesn't know African culture to try to make "exactitudes" on African concepts? Regardless, in speech you will say OLUDUMARE. The "folk" person as you say doesn't know the many roots for Oludumare. Dr. Epega taught us that Oludumare also means "owner of the everlasting Odus" which refers to how light propagates forward into eternity (the symbol you know as "ra", as Dr. Ben interprets "all that God sees"). And there are other breakdowns that I have not mentioned.

This is why I don't rely on the "comparative" method using words in dictionaries from people who were not initiated into the culture because they NEVER have the real meanings of the terms. You have to learn these things in the context of initiation and this is one of the reasons why the "African Superhighway of Wisdom" was created and still goes on to this date. African spirituality is not about exactitude.

For instance, you will find in the dictionary the word BABA to mean "father." That is just one level of meaning as can be best translated into English. The word BABA is a reduplication of the word BA which means "expansive power." This won't make any sense unless you know the African concepts of energy and how it works. Energy that propagates forward into space is "masculine" and energy that contracts is "feminine." Electricity, because it moves forward ever into space is masculine. Space it self is feminine because it shapes the masculine energy into form (like a mother's womb). This is why HRW (light) is a man and HET HRW is a woman or feminine. HET (space) contains the light (hrw).

This demonstrates that the word BA is not some "nursery" word said by children as linguists keeps positing as fact. Adults thought of this and there is a philosophy associated with it: in the context of a whole cosmology. The man is the source of the family line expanding in many different directions (think of polygamy). His "masculine" shaft is the "channel" in which the "energy" (sperm) propagates "forward" to the "womb" (ma).

If you don't understand African conceptual elasticity, you're wasting your time attempting exactitudes of related concepts. That brings on dogmatism and your view and perspective becomes myopic and your analysis and method becomes null and void because one does not have the "symbolic literacy" necessary to understand African languages. This is the heart of Gore's problem. He loves white people too much and thinks that everything they say in a book, because they use 5 syllable words, makes everything they say about Black people and black languages truthful and that just isn't so. I have yet to see him quote an African linguist on African languages. He probably has, I just haven't seen it. It seems that he thinks you can actually read a book and get Africa. I find that hilarious.

Subject: Re: [africanclassicalhistory] General misconcepts about Egypt and its script

Dear Asar,

I've only skimmed this quickly and not having studied linguistics to any depth, can only say you make some interesting points about a need to speak to elders, which I agree with, in principle. I am unable to meaningfully comment on much else, except the following extract from your 17th paragraph below:

" . . . " Osiris is the Greek transposition of the Yoruba IWAJU-ORI which means "seat of mystic vision, power center of the crown of the head." It consist of IWA + AJE + ORI. IWA is "character." AJE is "crown" and ORI is "head" or "consciousness. " . . . "

'IWAJU' is a compound word as you correctly indicate, but of IWA & OJU (not AJE). OJU refers to the 'eyes' or the 'face' of a person or thing. The main problem here, is that Yoruba is a tonal language, so sound pitch heavily affects meaning. 'IWA' with a low pitch on the 'i' and an even lower one on the 'a', is - as you correctly say, the word for 'character' from the low-pitched root 'WA' 'to be/exist' - but in the word 'IWAJU', which denotes 'in front of' / 'on the face of', the sound pitch is completely different - neutral/midtone on the 'i' and high on the 'a' - and this is derived from 2 other high-pitched roots 'WA' which can either mean 'to come' or 'to look for/search'.

This is a pit that many (including some Yoruba) fall into, in using folk etymology to analyse the origins of other, more obscure words in the language. Onyekachi in his? response to Fari, also indicated the difficulty of ascertaining a determinate, non-contextual meaning for 'CHI' due to tonality and multiple meanings in the Igbo language. From my perspective as a layperson, the issue of tone is one that we as Africans, really need to get to grips with, to make further progress.

Having studied Mdw Ntr for awhile, though not continuing it - I was struck at the time, with how much easier it would be to read Yoruba using such an hieroglyphic system (with graphic determinatives, indicating the root pitch/meaning) - than the currently used, ill-adapted phonetic script with its awkward diacritical marks trying to represent the tones, which puts off many young Yoruba from learning to read their own language. My suspicion is that ancient Egyptian was likely, a tonal language.

I understand that African languages have been the impetus for advances in prosodic systems within recent phonological theory. The realisation that (unlike Chinese/Thai) linguistic tones in Africa, are not tied to consonant / vowel segments, and seemingly exist in parallel or independently in another dimension of the syllabic / mora units that bear them, spawned the auto-segmental branch of phonology (B. Heine & D. Nurse (Eds.) African Languages: An Introduction, Cambridge University Press, 2000, pgs152-158).

It seems to me that if this is the case, and if the methods in genetic comparative linguistics do not yet adequately reflect this development, then there is an opportunity for African linguists to develop a new method / extend existing ones, to close this gap - and this is why I earlier raised the issue of Brown's 'musilanguage' hypothesis as a possible analytical aid.

This is an open letter I sent to the BBC, on their continuing the lie that there are 'no sanctions against Zimbabwe', when these sanctions are enshrined into US law and are there for everyone to see and read.

Alex

Hi,

This morning, I was listening to the BBC World Service, and I was disappointed to hear that your reporter (I think Andrew Harding) still deny the existence of economic and financial sanctions against the government and economy of Zimbabwe. Even worse, rather than prove that these sanctions do not exist, your commentator simply repeated what now sounds like a 'talking point', and dismissed the idea of sanctions as ZANU-PF propaganda. As has the EU's Geoffrey van Orden. [1]

The problem is that this is a lie. There are extensive financial sanctions against Zimbabwe in place, and have been since early 2002. They have played a central role in the destruction of the Zimbabwean currency, by putting the government of Zimbabwe under a credit freeze, which directly lead to world record hyperinflation.

I hope this is not a fact that the BBC (including BBC World Service) feels unfree to report on.

And they are fairly easy to find once you know where to look, and reasonably easy to understand. As, even under the Bush Administration, the United States was a nation of laws, of course these sanctions are also enshrined in law - a law that has not been repealed.

They are contained in sections 4C, 3 and 4D of the Zimbabwe Democracy and Economic Recovery Act of 2001 (S.494 of the 107th US Congress), ZDERA, which has been in effect since early 2002.

In it the "Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States executive director to each international financial institution to oppose and vote against--

(1) any extension by the respective institution of any loan, credit, or guarantee to the Government of Zimbabwe; or

(2) any cancellation or reduction of indebtedness owed by the Government of Zimbabwe to the United States or any international financial institution. " [2]

End quote.

This means, that from 2002 to this day, the Zimbabwean government has been unable to (1) use it's existing credit lines, while (2) being compelled to keep paying off existing debt and not be eligible for the kind of debt write-off countries around it have been through HIPC. This sudden absence of foreign currency put massive pressure on the local currency, with the resulting world record hyperinflation that the BBC *has* been reporting on.

Especially notice the use of the words "the Government of Zimbabwe", twice, indicating that these are not restrictions on individuals in the ZANU-PF, but the government as a whole, which impact the currency and therefore the economy as a whole.

How can this be 'ZANU-PF propaganda', when it is written into US law, for all to see, and available to anyone with a computer?

In fact, your commentator and the EU are behind the facts, as it is the MDC's own Tendai Biti, speaking on Southwest Radio Africa, who has already admitted the MDC too cannot govern Zimbabwe without these sanctions (ZDERA) being lifted. [3]

Now perhaps your commentator was playing cute with the difference between the extensive 'restrictions' against hundreds of individuals within the ZANU-PF, as opposed to clear financial sanctions against the entire government, coming out of the USA through ZDERA.

However, he did state that 'there are no sanctions against Zimbabwe', which is demonstrably false.

I hope the BBC will finally start to report the truth about Zimbabwe, which includes the 8 years of villification against Zimbabwe, and President Mugabe, and the obscuring of the real reasons behind the villification of Zimbabwe, which are the protection of western ownership of Africa's resources in not only Zimbabwe, but in the DRC (copper, cobalt, coltan, diamonds, timber) and South Africa (the world's largest gold mines), which still have not been nationalized or used for the benefit of their national economies. This ownership, and the resulting absence of reinvestment in sectors other than mining, like agriculture, manufacturing and infrastructure, are the reason the people of Africa are poor, while living amidst the plenty of the world's largest industrial and precious metals and stones resources.

Also, for once interview a happy 'New Farmer', because I can guarantee you, there are a lot of people pleased with receiving 50 or more hectares of their ancestral land, where they used to have 2 to 3 hectares. Which puts me on another issue - not just 'friends and cronies of Mugabe' have received land. Literally hundreds of thousands of people have been the beneficiaries of land reform. According to the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations, over 234,000 people had already benefited by 2003. [4]

Who owns Africa's resource wealth - now there is a documentary waiting to be made. Follow the money 'downstream', right upto the London Metals Exchange, which is where coltan is actually traded.

Sincerely,

Alex van Deelen

When you read John S. Mbiti's African Religion and Philosophy (1969: 47 & 57) he informs us that the Galla people of Ethiopia say that the sun is God's eye. The Balese people of the Congo consider the sun to be God's right eye and the moon his left. Again, the sun is a symbol for light and being able to "see" and is why the Uadit (eye) is also represented as a snake as snakes are symbolic all across Africa to represent the wave nature of light. By extension being able to "see" is a metaphor for consciousness.

In Egypt Heru is symbolized by God's left eye (the moon) and Djehuti is the right eye (the sun). This is the notes given by Ashby but I think this is actually wrong.

I say so because the sun has always represented RA and HRW. They were even combined to become RAHORAKTE. One of the symbols for Djehuti is the moon.

Djehuti with moon symbol on his head

Subject: [Ta_Seti] Challenge to charcoal glyph in the word KMT

Greetings

I have been recently challenged by anative Ethiopian concerning what the initial glyph is in the word and the meaning of the word KMT. Egyptologists, Eurocentricists and Afrocentricists interpret KMT to mean "the black land." With what has been revealed to me, that notion will be shattered. The issue I have always had is wondering why a "Black" people would name themselves "black" when they are amongst other black people? The reasons I have received never answered the question.

 II16

Anyways, at first the glyph was interpreted to be a piece of allegator skin. Later it was interpreted to be a piece of charcoal. What has been told to me is that it is neither and actually represents the end or edge of a river bank. It is interpreted as the port to bring agricultural goods. It is more so a farm development or port to drop off goods. At first I was skeptical because but I remembered the argument from Cameroonian Egyptologist Dr. Oscar Pfouma stating that the term KM across Africa, in terms of nationhood, had nothing to do with the color of one's skin. He provides the following examples as proof:

Egyptic: km "*farm"

Basa: kaam "farm"

Doai: kaam "farm"

Esitako: ekaam "id."

Ngodzin: kam "id."

Runda: kumadin "id."

Egyptic: km "*polis"

Coptic: k𐩤𐩢𐩨 "Egypt" vs kmom "black"

Balue: kom "country, region"

Okam: ekoma "city"

Ndzem: k𐩠𐩠𐩠 rural area"

Bateteka: komwa "country, region"

Bakweri: kumi "country"

Zulu: -khumbi "nation"

Pende: guma "country, region"

Dewoi: gumo "village, city"

Caga: gumi "rural area"

Lingala: -gumba "city"

Galla: gomdji "land which grows warm and healthy cultivated"

What lends support to this theory is the earliest depiction on record of the word KMT in regards to a national designation. The earliest depiction has the N23 (irrigated land) determinative . This would clearly indicate farming or farm land and not a color designation on the land or the people. It also lends support to another definition of the word KMT which means the end, to bring to an end as KM-T would have been the "end" of a merchant's journey from inner Africa along the Nile or the Red Sea.  N23

qm = to bring to an end, complete (Budge 770a)

khm, Khmi = to bring to an end, to make an end of (Budge 546a)

km = to bring to an end, to finish, to complete, the end, end of a moment (charcoal biliteral) (Budge 787b)

km-t = end of a period, completion (ibid)

kmi = finished products (ibid)

My issue is that the KM symbol proposed to be the end of a river bank looks nothing of the sort in my opinion. The following symbol I could see:

I don't know if anyone has seen natural wood burning but it looks just like the gardiner sign I16. But then again, there are a lot of symbols that aren't obvious to the modern person.

Another interesting bit of information is the "god" Aten is really a symbol for "ancestors." In Tigrigna the word is "idna" and means "hands." The idea is that the ancestors reach their hands to help and bless the living. At first there doesn't seem to be a connect, but when you examine the following there seems to be some credibility to it:

Notice the "hands" coming from the sun? This is where we would get the hebrew name for god ADONAI coming from IDNA. This would lend support to my notion that Africans, in regards to words for the "sun" are not really talking about the sun but its effect or by product (light). I remember in a video tape that Dr. Ben, an Ethiopian, stated that the symbol for RA really means "all that god sees" which would symbolically mean that the "sun" is God's "eye." Nothing new here as that is pretty standard across Africa. But in Ethiopia the term "ra-ey" means "sight/vision" and would lend support to Dr. Ben's rendering of the symbol of "RA" meaning "all that god sees." In Ethiopia they argue that the sign for the "sun" really isn't a sun but the pupil of an eye.

ROBIN: Dear Asar (or anyone else who can answer)

Can anyone identify the original Egyptian source for the Diagram of the Law of Opposites? Is it on a temple wall? Is it from a papyrus? Where? I have been trying to track this down for a while.

I don't think you're going to find it on any papyrus. It is something you just have to "see" in the images. Most, if not all of the signs I posted are images written in the sand. They still do this in divinations in Egypt to this day. I think that particular image simply comes from Aristotle who was initiated in Egypt. The sign can be seen easily in Egypt if you have the eyes. That's why I posted the image of the four moments of the sun during the Ptolemaic period superimposed with the circle and its four demarcations.

This is the key to understanding where you can "find" the symbols among the people. They are not apparent. Leopold Senghor in his chapter NTU in African Philosophy helps us to better understand the integral nature of the cosmology to everyday living in Africa:

We cannot follow Adesanya, however, when he puts the myths of his people on the same level as the legend of the stork, which grown-ups who know better palm off on naive children. In his effort to interpret everything rationally, Adesanya clearly goes several long steps too far. But it is significant that this idea should occur to him. For the relation between African mythology and philosophy is in fact amazing. This is nowhere clearer than in the exposition of the blind sage Ogotommeli. Here myth follows myth, each fits in logically with the next, and from the whole arises a clear, non-contradictory cosmology, which is mirrored in the ritual, in the social order, in house-building and even the design of everyday utensils. And at the basis of all this we find philosophical principles which agree with the analyses of Tempels, Deren, Dieterlen and Kagame.

In other words, the cosmology is woven into every single aspect of the African's life. If you are looking for the symbol, it is present in all things in Ancient Egypt. You just have to know the cosmology. That's why I often recommend Dr. Fu-Kiau's African Cosmology of the Bantu Kongo. You're not going to get any better than that in print.

Dr. Vimbai Gukwe Chivaura in his article Hunhu/Ubuntu: A sustainable approach to endogenous development, bio-cultural diversity and protection of the environment in Africa provides us with an excellent discourse of this philosophy in practice. He goes on to state:

Homes and the Cosmos

In the same way that classical architecture is inspired by the local environment and is built in conformity with it, the African idea of a 'house' is inspired by the view of the universe as the 'dome of existence'. The Zulu house is a good example to illustrate this. The outside shape (Kunene, 1981) is circular like the universe and earth. The inside is divided into four curvatures like the cardinal points of the universe and earth. The western part, umsamo, is the altar for the ancestors where food and water are stored. The eastern section is the region of the rising sun. The southern zone on the right from inside the house is the female region and the northern area is the male region.

The center of the house is the fireplace. It resembles the navel or placenta. The main beam, insika, is the umbilical cord. It connects the living to the universe as the source of life in the same way the baby is connected to the mother in the womb for sustenance through the umbilical cord. The conical tower at the center of the Great Enclosure at Great Zimbabwe, the obelisks of ancient Africa and the Tower of the Eternal Flame at the Zimbabwe National Heroes Acre express the same concept. They can be interpreted as phalluses and the fireplace as the womb for procreation, continuity and survival.

Chivaura referenced in the quote above M. Kunene in his timeless work Anthem of the Decades: A Zulu Epic. For one whose literate in African symbology, he/she can recognize this philosophy everywhere in Africa. The question is, how did this philosophy come to be all across Africa? Is it a 'remnant' from a time when all of Africa was one people? Or was/is there a system of exchange via shared initiation experiences. between cultures as I posit HERE. The Zulu oral tradition places them in times past in the Sudan and the Nile Valley. This area is the source of these symbols and its inherent philosophy.

Again, it is not something you'll see directly in Egypt unless you know an indigenous person who does sand divinations. That particular sign comes from Aristotle who studied in Egypt.

Problems With the Recent Exhibit,
African Presence in Mexico
( Oakland Museum of California )
~ Prof. Manu Ampim

The recent exhibit, The African Presence in Mexico : From Yanga to the Present (May 9 August 23, 2009), at the Oakland Museum of California, attracted many visitors from all walks of life who learned about the Black influence in Mexico . This significant influence has been acknowledged by the Mexican government since 1992, and thus people of African descent have been called the third root of Mexican heritage, along with the Native American and Spanish ethnic roots. The exhibit focused on Afro-Mexicans from the time when the ex-enslaved African Yanga in 1609 led a successful revolt against the Spanish and founded the first free town of San Lorenzo de los Negros in the state of Veracruz . In 1930, this Mexican town was renamed Yanga.

The exhibit organizers claimed that the exhibit is the largest and most complete display to date on the African presence in Mexico . The National Museum of Mexican Art and the Oakland Museum of California are honored to help shed light on this missing chapter in history. While the exhibit did shed some light on the African presence in Mexico , it grossly omitted the African presence and influence in Mexico for thousands of years, dating back to the period of the Olmec civilization around 1000 BCE. The artifacts and images establishing an African presence in ancient Mexico are definitive and undeniable, and this is documented in the works of Dr. Ivan Van Sertima and other scholars. The exhibit should be rated a C- or D+ because of this profound omission of Africans in the Mexico region before Christ.

ONLY PARTIAL ADMISSION

At the end of the exhibit, there was a large placard discussing Dr. Van Sertimas work in a few paragraphs. The placard mentioned that Van Sertimas book, The Came Before Columbus, argues that there was a significant African presence in Mexico several thousand years ago. However, it asked a question, the African Presence in Meso-America, myth or reality? In answering this question, the placard does mention in passing the categories of Van Sertimas arguments of an African influence in ancient Mexico (linguistic, historical, archaeological, botanical, ancient maps, ocean currents, etc.), yet at the same time it dismissed his conclusions with one sweeping statement. The evidence that does support this theory are for the most part isolated artifacts, taken out of their archaeological context, it stated.

CAREFULLY SELECTED IMAGES

Further,

the placard did not present Van Sertimas most definitive proof of Africans in ancient America . Instead, it presented three small images shown next to the text, and neither of these images clearly showed an African ethnicity. These images were carefully selected to give an ambiguous and inconclusive view of the Olmec identity, and thus create suspicions about Van Sertimas conclusions. The images presented in They Came Before Columbus and Van Sertimas Journal of African Civilizations were ignored for obvious reasons because any visitor would then be able to see the objective evidence of Africans in ancient Mexico . It would have been more honest for the exhibit officials to present most, if not all, of the 17 heads of the Olmec kings and let the visitors decide on the racial identity of the images. Indeed, the first of these heads rediscovered at Tres Zapotes in 1858 is a 15-ton image of a king with a stunning Africoid appearance. This image and other clearly Africoid artifacts were deliberately left out of the exhibit, which would suggest to the uninformed visitor that Van Sertimas conclusions are unproven.

Olmec king with Africoid hairstyle
Africoid facial with braided hair features.
(Tres Zapotes)

Thus, the exhibit made note of Van Sertimas research only to dismiss his findings. The main thesis of the exhibit was that there was an African presence in Mexico from the time they were brought there as slaves by the Spanish in the early 1500s, and that from the time of Yanga in the early 1600s Africans have had an important impact on Mexican history and culture. In this regard, the exhibit stated that the Mexican multi-racial society absorb[ed] nearly everything African until all traces of African culture would completely vanish into the Mexican culture Mexicanidad. While this absorption process is true, the exhibit shamefully dismissed the absorption of the initial Africans within the ancient Olmec civilization three thousand years ago, and thus the African Presence in Mexico was not a complete display on Black people in Mexico . This exhibit left the public with the same old misinformation (despite the abundant evidence to the contrary) that Africans first came to the Americas as slaves, rather than as independent traders and rulers. Let the public beware!

This significant influence has been acknowledged by the Mexican government since 1992, and thus people of African descent have been called the third root of Mexican heritage, along with the Native American and Spanish ethnic roots. The exhibit focused on Afro-Mexicans from the time when the ex-enslaved African Yanga in 1609 led a successful revolt against the Spanish and founded the first free town of San Lorenzo de los Negros in the state of Veracruz . In 1930, this Mexican town was renamed Yanga.

The exhibit organizers claimed that the exhibit is the largest and most complete display to date on the African presence in Mexico . The National Museum of Mexican Art and the Oakland Museum of California are honored to help shed light on this missing chapter in history. While the exhibit did shed some light on the African presence in Mexico , it grossly omitted the African presence and influence in Mexico for thousands of years, dating back to the period of the Olmec civilization around 1000 BCE. The artifacts and images establishing an African presence in ancient Mexico are definitive and undeniable, and this is documented in the works of Dr. Ivan Van Sertima and other scholars. The exhibit should be rated a C- or D+ because of this profound omission of Africans in the Mexico region before Christ.

ONLY PARTIAL ADMISSION

At the end of the exhibit, there was a large placard discussing Dr. Van Sertimas work in a few paragraphs. The placard mentioned that Van Sertimas book, The Came Before Columbus, argues that there was a significant African presence in Mexico several thousand years ago. However, it asked a question, the African Presence in Meso-America, myth or reality? In answering this question, the placard does mention in passing the categories of Van Sertimas arguments of an African influence in ancient Mexico (linguistic, historical, archaeological, botanical, ancient maps, ocean currents, etc.), yet at the same time it dismissed his conclusions with one sweeping statement. The evidence that does support this theory are for the most part isolated artifacts, taken out of their archaeological context, it stated.

CAREFULLY SELECTED IMAGES

Further, the placard did not present Van Sertimas most definitive proof of Africans in ancient America . Instead, it presented three small images shown next to the text, and neither of these images clearly showed an African ethnicity. These images were carefully selected to give an ambiguous and inconclusive view of the Olmec identity, and thus create suspicions about Van Sertimas conclusions. The images presented in They Came Before Columbus and Van Sertimas Journal of African Civilizations were ignored for obvious reasons because any visitor would then be able to see the objective evidence of Africans in ancient Mexico . It would have been more honest for the exhibit officials to present most, if not all, of the 17 heads of the Olmec kings and let the visitors decide on the racial identity of the images. Indeed, the first of these heads rediscovered at Tres Zapotes in 1858 is a 15-ton image of a king with a stunning Africoid appearance. This image and other clearly Africoid artifacts were deliberately left out of the exhibit, which would suggest to the uninformed visitor that Van Sertimas conclusions are unproven.

Olmec king with Africoid hairstyle

features.

(Tres Zapotes)

Thus, the exhibit made note of Van Sertimas research only to dismiss his findings. The main thesis of the exhibit was that there was an African presence in Mexico from the time they were brought there as slaves by the Spanish in the early 1500s, and that from the time of Yanga in the early 1600s Africans have had an important impact on Mexican history and culture. In this regard, the exhibit stated that the Mexican multi-racial society absorb[ed] nearly everything African until all traces of African culture would completely vanish into the Mexican culture Mexicanidad. While this absorption process is true, the exhibit shamefully dismissed the absorption of the initial Africans within the ancient Olmec civilization three thousand years ago, and thus the African Presence in Mexico was not a complete display on Black people in Mexico . This exhibit left the public with the same old misinformation (despite the abundant evidence to the contrary) that Africans first came to the Americas as slaves, rather than as independent traders and rulers. Let the public beware!

Hmmm, you bring up an important issue. I have always stated that the Egyptian language, in many aspects were tonal for various reasons. Ra Un Nefer suggested this as well. However, I think we fall into the European trap of thinking you can always precisely give an exact definition on terms. Here is just a few examples given the nature of our topic:

iw□ Forehead.

iwj輯span> Forehead.

iw□ - or□span> Power center in the forehead, seat of mystic vision.

취j Mystic vision.

□j輯span> Top of the head, refers to the power center at the crown of the skull.

Remember that the word ORI already deals with "sight/vision" and "consciousness. " When attached to the variations of IWAJU a different set of circumstances are taking place. We are talking about the ability to command, to possess the necessary "ase" to bring your "visions" into manifestation. The key to the word meaning iw□ - or□span> is "seat" of mystic vision. In Amarigna they say EZ or simply Z to denote the thrown (thus the throne in Egyptian iconography) but the what is actually being stated is "command". The same thing with the Yoruba with the word □:

□ The Spirit of a Bird used by women (ꝑi) to invoke powers used for abundance and justice. This same power is used to consecrate the crown of the Yorblings. Also used as a reference to money or abundance.

Here we are talking about the kings power to "command" his kingdom that is bestowed upon him by the woman. In Yoruba the symbol is not a throne but a "crown." The "throne" or the "crown" are the physical symbols of the idea, not the word itself and this is why you will find variations with similar sounding consonants to mean the exact same thing, just worded differently. ad颯span> Crown worn by Yorblings (Oba). The crown symbolizes the spiritual transformation that occurs when the Kings (Oba) are installed in office. The crown is also the seat of protection that is given by the Spirit of the Mothers (ꝑi).

Ad鳥髻/span> Son of the Spirit of Destiny (Xnm髻), meaning: "Crown is Worthy."

Again, the association with "crown" to "seat" indicates the same principle. In the paper I discuss how the /j/ sound turns into a fricative such as /s/ or /z/. I brought up the question that it may be possible that the /d/ in adad and the /j/ in j were actually combined as dj at one point. Often the dj sound will just become d in certain languages (this happened in Egyptian) and the same with the final being /j/. This is where the comparative method comes in handy.

So this is why I do not think the full term of iwj - or j is IWA + OJU as the ORI would be repeating the same concept and the concept of "seat" wouldn't be in the word. Now iwj by itself may be interpreted that way, but I think the word aj actually is a better fit for what you're talking about. But even with that, the first word wouldn't be IWA it would be IWU for - iwu Grey hair, sign of respect. Again, the word isn't referring to "grey hair." Grey hair is just the symbol, the word is better translated as "respect of wisdom associated with an elder" (grey haired person." So we are really talking about "the kind of insight one gains through experience" (mystic vision); intuition, deep thought, the ability to see the hidden layers of reality.

Maulana Karenga introduced the phrase "conceptual elasticity" in regards to Egyptian words. I apply this to all African words as the examples above demonstrate. This makes it hard for comparatists, to always look for "exact matches." It really is impossible and the below example will demonstrate why. In an earlier response to Gore, which he has yet to answer, I posted the following information:

In regards to our subject of why we cannot solely rely on the comparison of proto forms in African languages, we will examine a critical text MUNTU by Jaheinz Jahn (1990:152). Jahn demonstrates why we cannot be myopic and attempt to narrow down African key concepts to one meaning and thinking that that one meaning is THE meaning of the term. Any true student of African culture and languages will know that unlike European languages, languages based on equation, African languages are elastic, dynamic and analogous. In speaking of the concept of Nommo to African speech, Jahn goes on to state:

So [Aime] Césaire uses European words in an African way. For example, in Yoruba the mere word itself does not yet convey a concept or idea. The muntu who utters a word must first designate it by his utterance. It is he who gives it its immediate meaning, while giving a new interpretation to every word he speaks, and so finally giving the specific meaning to the vocable or the phoneme. Not only are the Yoruba highly conscious of the meaning of names, writes Beier, but they also like to interpret each word they use. They believe that every word is really a sentence that has been contracted through a series of elisions into a single word. Thus in Yoruba many words are open to different interpretations, Beier continues, and can therefore be used by different speakers in such a way as to evoke a different set of associations. For the European a word like God conveys a stable concept Dr. Idowu, in a lecture given at the University College, Ibadan, in 1957, gave five interpretations of the Yoruba word for God (Olodumare):

1. Olodu-Omo-Ere. The supreme one, offspring of the boa.
2. Olodu-Ma-Re. The supreme one, who remains constant.
3. Olodu Mo Are. The supreme one, wearing the crown
4. Olodu Kari. The perfect one.
5. Oludumare. The one to whom I must return.

The words wife or mother also convey stable concepts to Europeans. Most Yoruba people, however, using the word iyawo (wife) think of a story that is told in the Ifa oracle and which explains that it means suffering in the town of Iwo. The story says that Orunmila, the deity of the oracle, encountered much suffering in the town of Iwo and that later he was given a wife in recompense. Hence the word iyawo. On the other hand Mr. T.S. Sowande of Abeokuta has ventured another interpretation: iya (mother) is explained as one who draws an image and iyawomi (my wife) as one who draws my picture. Again iya mi (my mother) has been interpreted by Mr. Abolubode of Oshogbo as: From where I branch (the mother and her children likened to a river and its tributaries) . Thus in the Yoruba language words cannot become cliché because they are constantly being reinterpreted and charged with new meaning.

Can you see why it is hard for the layman, someone who doesn't know African culture to try to make "exactitudes" on African concepts? Regardless, in speech you will say OLUDUMARE. The "folk" person as you say doesn't know the many roots for Oludumare. Dr. Epega taught us that Oludumare also means "owner of the everlasting Odus" which refers to how light propagates forward into eternity (the symbol you know as "ra", as Dr. Ben interprets "all that God sees"). And there are other breakdowns that I have not mentioned.

This is why I don't rely on the "comparative" method using words in dictionaries from people who were not initiated into the culture because they NEVER have the real meanings of the terms. You have to learn these things in the context of initiation and this is one of the reasons why the "African Superhighway of Wisdom" was created and still goes on to this date. African spirituality is not about exactitude.

For instance, you will find in the dictionary the word BABA to mean "father." That is just one level of meaning as can be best translated into English. The word BABA is a reduplication of the word BA which means "expansive power." This won't make any sense unless you know the African concepts of energy and how it works. Energy that propagates forward into space is "masculine" and energy that contracts is "feminine." Electricity, because it moves forward ever into space is masculine. Space it self is feminine because it shapes the masculine energy into form (like a mother's womb). This is why HRW (light) is a man and HET HRW is a woman or feminine. HET (space) contains the light (hrw).

This demonstrates that the word BA is not some "nursery" word said by children as linguists keeps positing as fact. Adults thought of this and there is a philosophy associated with it: in the context of a whole cosmology. The man is the source of the family line expanding in many different directions (think of polygamy). His "masculine" shaft is the "channel" in which the "energy" (sperm) propagates "forward" to the "womb" (ma).

If you don't understand African conceptual elasticity, you're wasting your time attempting exactitudes of related concepts. That brings on dogmatism and your view and perspective becomes myopic and your analysis and method becomes null and void because one does not have the "symbolic literacy" necessary to understand African languages. This is the heart of Gore's problem. He loves white people too much and thinks that everything they say in a book, because they use 5 syllable words, makes everything they say about Black people and black languages truthful and that just isn't so. I have yet to see him quote an African linguist on African languages. He probably has, I just haven't seen it. It seems that he thinks you can actually read a book and get Africa. I find that hilarious.

Dear Asar,

I've only skimmed this quickly and not having studied linguistics to any depth, can only say you make some interesting points about a need to speak to elders, which I agree with, in principle. I am unable to meaningfully comment on much else, except the following extract from your 17th paragraph below:

" . . . " Osiris is the Greek transposition of the Yoruba IWAJU-ORI which means "seat of mystic vision, power center of the crown of the head." It consist of IWA + AJE + ORI. IWA is "character." AJE is "crown" and ORI is "head" or "consciousness. " . . . "

'IWAJU' is a compound word as you correctly indicate, but of IWA & OJU (not AJE). OJU refers to the 'eyes' or the 'face' of a person or thing. The main problem here, is that Yoruba is a tonal language, so sound pitch heavily affects meaning. 'IWA' with a low pitch on the 'i' and an even lower one on the 'a', is - as you correctly say, the word for 'character' from the low-pitched root 'WA' 'to be/exist' - but in the word 'IWAJU', which denotes 'in front of' / 'on the face of', the sound pitch is completely different - neutral/midtone on the 'i' and high on the 'a' - and this is derived from 2 other high-pitched roots 'WA' which can either mean 'to come' or 'to look for/search'.

This is a pit that many (including some Yoruba) fall into, in using folk etymology to analyse the origins of other, more obscure words in the language. Onyekachi in his response to Fari, also indicated the difficulty of ascertaining a determinate, non-contextual meaning for 'CHI' due to tonality and multiple meanings in the Igbo language. From my perspective as a layperson, the issue of tone is one that we as Africans, really need to get to grips with, to make further progress.

Having studied Mdw Ntr for awhile, though not continuing it - I was struck at the time, with how much easier it would be to read Yoruba using such an hieroglyphic system (with graphic determinatives, indicating the root pitch/meaning) - than the currently used, ill-adapted phonetic script with its awkward diacritical marks trying to represent the tones, which puts off many young Yoruba from learning to read their own language. My suspicion is that ancient Egyptian was likely, a tonal language.

I understand that African languages have been the impetus for advances in prosodic systems within recent phonological theory. The realisation that (unlike Chinese/Thai) linguistic tones in Africa, are not tied to consonant / vowel segments, and seemingly exist in parallel or independently in another dimension of the syllabic / mora units that bear them, spawned the auto-segmental branch of phonology (B. Heine & D. Nurse (Eds.) African Languages: An Introduction, Cambridge University Press, 2000, pgs152-158).

It seems to me that if this is the case, and if the methods in genetic comparative linguistics do not yet adequately reflect this development, then there is an opportunity for African linguists to develop a new method / extend existing ones, to close this gap - and this is why I earlier raised the issue of Brown's 'musilanguage' hypothesis as a possible analytical aid.

A child of Sudanese descent was found dumped along the Komarock Canal this morning.

The child had been reported missing last Friday.

I called the Police and the Area Assistant Chief who responded with speed. As residents, must come together and work closely with the Administration to forestall such incidents.

It calls for us to work with speed and convert the Canal into a cleaner environment where and children can both visit and relax. We must not be intimidated by these acts of cruelty directed at very innocent children.

The Government must also pull its socks as far as prevention of crime is concerned. It is always good to respond to such heinous acts. Working together with the Police and the A Chief, we must act.

To this extent, we have called a meeting slated for Wednesday at 3pm at the Bridge Phase which will address 2 issues; Security and environmental conservation.

Members of the press are invited to this meeting. Criminals live with us, and those who d our environment also live with us. It is our responsibility to sort this mess out.

Our condolences to the bereaved family. We will stand tall with you at this hour of grief.

Speaking in broad generalities, using information that would require interpretation, using ambiguous speech is the tools of a good flim flam man. By the use of fuzzy words, when cornered the trickster can deny the intent of his words.

Tonight (Sep 12, 2009) they had a segment about the rage of tennis players and reported a great deal of the controversy can no longer be spouted because of the camera system that takes away human judgment. Photography / instant replay in football has also provided the exact way events took place and removed the error of human judgment

Though photography can be faked, it remains a valuable tool in court, because a faked photo would prove the intent forge false evidence. On the stand a witness can blubber around and try to be misleading, but when they present a photo, they are being precise.

It is a common practice for some one to provide photos to prove the amount of damaged property.

Can you imagine some one going into a court room and presenting their sketched interpretation of the damage instead of a photo?

With few exceptions, the catalogue uses line drawings instead of photographs. Drawing an object creates a mental map of the artifact in the mind of the illustrator, and in my experience this is the best way to understand its iconography. The urns in this catalogue were drawn from sight in museum collections, or alternatively, copied from photographs. Preference was given to the first method. Every effort was made to produce illustrations that faithfully reproduce the originals, but I must stress that these are merely my interpretations

Why do we read about all the Egyptologist in the early 1900s sketching the images in the tombs instead of photographing them?

Photography had a good start by 1850. Before 1900 photography was a science. Indoor photographs were created with flash powder.

Matthew Brady did photos of Abraham Lincoln in the 1860s

There are hundreds of Matthew Brady Photos from The Civil War

<http://images.google.com/images?hl=en&q=mathew%20brady%20photography&um=1&ie=UTF-8&sa=N&tab=wi>

... so why did the early Egyptologist neglect to take photos ? If you are sketching things using your own imagination then it can easily be altered to fit your own agenda, I guess?

I am guessing 99% of all who will ever read this page are not professional Egyptologist.. just the average bear like the rest of us.

I doubt if 10% of you have ever been to Egypt and if you have, you spent two weeks or less on a tour that was all planned out where you would stop and how long you would be in any particular location.

If you studied hieroglyphics for a long time before your trip and actually memorized all the glyphs, on your stop at each location, you may have seen lots of hieroglyphs.

Do you also have a photographic memory?

If you did have all the glyphs memorized and you have a photographic memory of what words were on each hieroglyphic source you saw, then you still only have the knowledge of the hieroglyphs you saw and memorized on your tour.

=====

Where do the masses (including those who call themselves Egyptologist) get their information about hieroglyphics.

* You get it by reading what some one else wrote about the hieroglyph ... or

* You get your information from seeing photos you (or some one else) took of the hieroglyphs.

I and all the rest of you who can not read hieroglyphs, can do no more than puppet what others write.. and even the others who write Egyptology articles, many of them can not read hieroglyphics.

What I write is based on the assumption that what I read is accurate, then I challenge what does not appear accurate (to me).

Egyptologist vs hieroglyphic reader

Egyptologist.. person who reads a whole bunch of information and if they get lucky, they will find a lost prize.

Hieroglyphic reader ... IF they never entered Egypt or saw a picture of Egypt, they have the potential to unlock lost secrets.

There is no reason why hieroglyphs are not photographed with the possible detail.

Any one who wants to sketch them can do so freely, but the public should see the original work beside any re-creations based on the interpretation/imagination of some one with an agenda.

Hieroglyphic sources should have each line numbered in the photographs, for future researchers to refer to.

=====

Remember the question "Can you imagine some one going into a court room and presenting their sketched interpretation of the damage instead of a photo? "

IF what they say is actually written in any hieroglyphic

They can produce the photo of the hieroglyphic and they can point out the exact lines that information is written on.

For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got if from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLES means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

Given the fact that the Egyptian and Greek records indicate that there were people already living among the upper Nile what we call Egypt today, before the conquest of the south (Ta-Seti, "Nubia", Ethiopia, whatever you want to call it), how do you hold that Egyptian is monolingual? What the list claims, if we follow the methodology of the comparative method, is that Egyptian `h` is the recurrent correspondent of Amharic `ch` and `sh`. You cannot use Amharic to determine what the Egyptian sound would be.

> Secondly as a comparative list for the purpose of uncovering genetic relationships this is a poor list. The vocabulary can hardly be described as basic. Basic vocabulary includes words like `foot`, `leg`, `eye`, `arm`, `go`, `stand`, `sun`, `tree` etc. It does not include terms like `government` and `take office`. Don't get me wrong cognates of this nature can be found amongst related languages but when these (words like `government`) are present there will always be an abundance of more basic vocabulary too and they take priority. Where are they here?

>

> Thirdly the meanings are related but not a single one of them are exact. They are not even particularly close. This increases the chance of being able to find `correspondences`. Comparing `peas and beans` to `vegetables` is not impressive. If you were comparing `peas` in one language to `beans` in another this would be closer. Where is the impressive demonstration that makes the case. Again you can find cognates at these sorts of semantic distances but preferably not in the initial demonstration.

> Fourthly why are there two correspondents for Egyptian `h` in Amharic. Is there a conditioning factor determining whether it is a `sh` or a `ch`? Why have you not presented in this? Explanations should always be given for double correspondences.

Have you checked what is the Ge'ez form which would be an older `uncle` language?

You do not even address this. 2) You do not even address the issue of Amharic and Tigrinya and the relationship they should have with Bantu if you are correct. If you can find cognates in any languages compared with Egyptian then it's probably because your methodology is not strict enough.

And the larger part of the customs of the Egyptians are, they hold, Ethiopian, the colonists still preserving their ancient manners (...) Many other things are also told by them concerning their own antiquity and the colony which they sent out that became the Egyptians, but about this there is no special need of our writing anything."

And It's funny how even in Egyptian the word QBT (Gebts) is translated as a word for a nome in Upper Egypt and the word QMI refers to Upper Egypt in the dictionaries, but among the Ethiopians and the Kenyans respectfully, these terms refer to all of Egypt (Gebts, Ik

Ghana: Land Grabs Force Hundreds Off Farms, Growers Say

7 September 2009

---

Accra â€ Dozens of farmers in northern Ghana claim they have been forced off their land with no alternative source of income after a multinational firm bought their farms to cultivate jetrophia, a non-food crop whose seeds contain oil used to produce biofuel.

Biofuel Africa Ltd has acquired over 23,700 hectares of Ghanaian land forcing out the inhabitants of seven villages - all of them farming communities -- in Tamale district.

Farmer Mumud Alhassan Adam, 50-year-old father of five, lost his eight-hectare plot on which he cultivated maize and rice.

"I went to the farm one day but I realized somebody else was on the farm and then I was told the land had been sold off. Since then I have not been allowed to farm."

Local chiefs own most of the land in northern Ghana and rent it out to farmers or sell it to anybody who wishes to buy.

"There was no consultation with us (farmers) before the land was sold and I have not been paid any compensation since I was displaced," Adam told IRIN.

He added: "A few of the farmers were offered employment on the jatropha plantation but many others were left with hunger and no source of income, while others like myself had to raise money to rent another plot of land several kilometers away. It has been a very difficult time for my family."

But BioFuel Africa's chief executive officer Steinar Kolnes said the company offered the farmers options: "We don't pay compensation. ..We gave the farmers two options: To stay and farm their crops alongside the jatropha or leave to other more fertile lands we had provided for them." He said those who chose to leave were given plots up to 10 times the size of their previous plots.

Adam said he knew of no farmers living in the area who have been given alternative land to farm.

Many farmers are trying to make the best of the change, rather than fighting for their land back. "If I get a job with any of these firms I will abandon crop cultivation and join them. And many of my colleagues would do the same," John Akerebo, a farmer in the region, told IRIN.

Over 20 companies from around the world, including from Brazil, China, Germany, Italy, The Netherlands and Norway, are acquiring land in Ghana to produce biofuels, according to the Ministry of Agriculture.

Between 15 million and 20 million hectares of farmland around the world have been subject to biofuels negotiations since 2006, according to the Washington-based International Food Policy Research Institute (IFPRI).

Kwadwo Poku, a local consultant for several of the multinationals with business in Ghana, told IRIN: "With so much land uncultivated [in Ghana], these firms are doing this country a favour by...employing many more farmers."

In a communiqué on its website, BioFuel Africa says only 10 percent of the land in question was being cultivated for food crops and that its project is providing farmers with much-needed employment during the lean season.

The Agriculture Ministry estimates that just 16 percent of Ghana's arable land is cultivated, despite agriculture employing 60 percent of the country's workforce.

Multinationals are attracted to Ghana by the land availability, soil types and a lack of regulation on acquisitions, according to the Food Security Policy Advocacy Network (FoodSPAN), based in the capital Accra.

But David Eli, FoodSPAN chairman, said the growing practice of carving up cultivable land for biofuel production could worsen Ghana's food insecurity. "As a country we don't produce enough food to feed everybody so if the argument is that we have enough land then why don't we invest to cultivate that land for food crops?"

Up to 1.2 million Ghanaians are food insecure, according to the World Food Programme's latest estimates, 453,000 of them in Northern Region. The government is drafting a US$10-million national food security plan, according to Agriculture Ministry director Nurah Gyiele.

The government has recognized the need for more clarity on the rights of farmers and companies in land deals concerning biofuels, according to the Ministry of Agriculture, and has called on the government's Energy Commission to draft legislation on land acquisitions.

Head of the Agriculture Workers Union, Kingsley Ofei Nkansah, said the legislation, which is currently being developed, must ensure that biofuels cultivation be limited to marginal lands; that all acquisitions include compensation for farmers and that chiefs prioritize land for food crop cultivation over biofuels.

You make valid points. When the exhibit was in Chicago the DuSable Museum had me do

Problems With the Recent Exhibit,
African Presence in Mexico
(Oakland Museum of California)

The recent exhibit, The African Presence in Mexico : From Yanga to the Present (May 9 August 23, 2009), at the Oakland Museum of California, attracted many visitors from all walks of life who learned about the Black influence in Mexico . This significant influence has been acknowledged by the Mexican government since 1992, and thus people of African descent have been called the third root of Mexican heritage, along with the Native American and Spanish ethnic roots. The exhibit focused on Afro-Mexicans from the time when the ex-enslaved African Yanga in 1609 led a successful revolt against the Spanish and founded the first free town of San Lorenzo de los Negros in the state of Veracruz . In 1930, this Mexican town was renamed Yanga.

The exhibit organizers claimed that the exhibit is the largest and most complete display to date on the African presence in Mexico . The National Museum of Mexican Art and the Oakland Museum of California are honored to help shed light on this missing chapter in history. While the exhibit did shed some light on the African presence in Mexico , it grossly omitted the African presence and influence in Mexico for thousands of years, dating back to the period of the Olmec civilization around 1000 BCE. The artifacts and images establishing an African presence in ancient Mexico are definitive and undeniable, and this is documented in the works of Dr. Ivan Van Sertima and other scholars. The exhibit should be rated a C- or D+ because of this profound omission of Africans in the Mexico region before Christ.

ONLY PARTIAL ADMISSION

At the end of the exhibit, there was a large placard discussing Dr. Van Sertimas work in a few paragraphs. The placard mentioned that Van Sertimas book, The Came Before Columbus, argues that there was a significant African presence in Mexico several thousand years ago. However, it asked a question, the African Presence in Meso-America, myth or reality? In answering this question, the placard does mention in passing the categories of Van Sertimas arguments of an African influence in ancient Mexico (linguistic, historical, archaeological, botanical, ancient maps, ocean currents, etc.), yet at the same time it dismissed his conclusions with one sweeping statement. The evidence that does support this theory are for the most part isolated artifacts, taken out of their archaeological context, it stated.

CAREFULLY SELECTED IMAGES

Further, the placard did not present Van Sertimas most definitive proof of Africans in ancient America . Instead, it presented three small images shown next to the text, and neither of these images clearly showed an African ethnicity. These images were carefully selected to give an ambiguous and inconclusive view of the Olmec identity, and thus create suspicions about Van Sertimas conclusions. The images presented in They Came Before Columbus and Van Sertimas Journal of African Civilizations were ignored for obvious reasons because any visitor would then be able to see the objective evidence of Africans in ancient Mexico . It would have been more honest for the exhibit officials to present most, if not all, of the 17 heads of the Olmec kings and let the visitors decide on the racial identity of the images. Indeed, the first of these heads rediscovered at Tres Zapotes in 1858 is a 15-ton image of a king with a stunning Africoid appearance. This image and other clearly Africoid artifacts were deliberately left out of the exhibit, which would suggest to the uninformed visitor that Van Sertimas conclusions are unproven.

Olmec king with Africoid hairstyle
Africoid facial with braided hair
features.
(Tres Zapotes)

Thus, the exhibit made note of Van Sertimas research only to dismiss his findings. The main thesis of the exhibit was that there was an African presence in Mexico from the time they were brought there as slaves by the Spanish in the early 1500s, and that from the time of Yanga in the early 1600s Africans have had an important impact on Mexican history and culture. In this regard, the exhibit stated that the Mexican multi-racial society absord[ed] nearly everything African until all traces of African culture would completely vanish into the Mexican culture Mexicanidad. While this absorption process is true, the exhibit shamefully dismissed the absorption of the initial Africans within the ancient Olmec civilization three thousand years ago, and thus the African Presence in Mexico was not a complete display on Black people in Mexico

. This exhibit left the public with the same old misinformation (despite the abundant evidence to the contrary) that Africans first came to the Americas as slaves, rather than as independent traders and rulers. Let the public beware!

We know that Josephus never existed. Proof: the letter "J" was an invention of the 15th century. pryer to that ,there was no letter "J". The letter "I" was elongated at the base with a curl to create the letter "J".

Peace,

For the Yoruba Diagram, see Baba Medahochi Kofi Omowale Zannu Mogbarimu Ajinaku El notes @ <http://singlelink.typepad.com/medahochi/>. It seems the full documents with the Odus is not coming up. When I get a chance to get to my computer I can send you his full documents. This is just one variation of the sign. I was first introduced to this symbol by Dr. Afalobi Epega, a fifth generation Ifa priests out of Ode Remo. This symbol is quite common in Ifa.

For the Dogon symbol, see The Pale Fox, starting at pg 185 by Griaule and Dieterlen. Or you can see Laird Scranton's Sacred Symbols of the Dogon pg. 172.

For the Kongo diagram (the one you see is my own composite of several of the diagrams), see Dr. Kimbwandende Kia Bunseki Fu-Kiau's African Cosmology of the Bantu Kongo. Just read the whole book.

For the Egyptian symbols see Dr. George GM James Stolen Legacy. Here is a decent discussion on Aristotle's The Four Humors: <http://www.homeopat hy.com.pk/ four-humors- basic-concept. php>. And this symbolism of the "sun", symbolic of the human being going through its cycle of conception, life, maturity and death, is present in so many Egyptian scenes as it is too much to demonstrate. That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.

You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got it from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

This stage is called YALA. In the Kongo diagram, on the right side of the image (V2) that stage of development is called KALA and KALA means "burning charcoal" or "black." It is the stage of FIRE, and the bottom is water as well. K's often turn into Y's. YALA and KALA are the same principle and the same word. It is the same in ancient Egypt as the beginning cycle is KPHERA, which is another form of RA or "light" or the "sun."

Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

If you have the opportunity to meet some "Nubians" in Sudan or Ethiopia, they will tell you that their educational system for their "priesthoods" are based on the knowledge of this symbol. Check out Dr. Ben's works where he is talking about being a "360 degree Mason." (See Dr. Ben Ramesis II) That isn't something he made up.

A full discussion of each of these symbols would encompass a large volume and it would demonstrate that it is totally impossible for the Dogon, Yoruba or Kongo-Bantu people to have gotten certain elements of these symbols unless they were in ancient Egypt. Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video: <http://www.ted.>

com/talks/ron_eglash_on_african_fractals.html

If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLES means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

I hope this helps.

Dear Asar,

Sorry, I don't mean to interrupt your discussion with Fari - but I just have a brief question on the intriguing diagrams you present below. They seem to be interpretations/ adaptations of Dogon (pale fox?), Yoruba (Ifa) & other cosmological descriptions - but you've given no references - I'm interested to know, who are the authors of these particular diagrams? - I'm a student of Ifa, and have never seen the path of Odu diagram.

Dell

Subject: Re: [africanclassicalhistory] Problems With Amharic and Egyptian Comparison

Sorry, I will address this later as you have NOT addressed the historical questions I asked you. Again, this is an example of when there are tough questions, you avoid them and move on to something else. The questions are still the same and as long as you keep "skating" around them, you will never reconcile this issue of cognitive dissonance when it comes to African history. Just as a reminder, here are a few of the questions again.

1. Given the fact that the Egyptian and Greek records indicate that there were people already living among the upper Nile what we call Egypt today, before the conquest of the south (Ta-Seti, "Nubia", Ethiopia, whatever you want to call it), how do you hold that Egyptian is monolingual? That there was no influence from the people that lived there?

2. How does a major feature of ancient Egyptian mythology (the four moments of the sun) make it into the Yoruba, Dogon, Akan, Kongo and Zulu mythology, culture and philosophy?
3. Why do we have the same symbols for this philosophy in all of the regions I mentioned above?

Dogon Womb of all Signs and developmental path of life and the sun

Yoruba path of Odu and "four moments of the sun"

Kongo "four moments of the sun"

Aristotle's Four Humors

Egyptian Diagram of Opposites

Egyptian "four moments of the sun"

can demonstrate this same symbolic philosophy all over the continent, but we're going to keep this simple. How do you account for the same symbol, with the same meaning and same purpose and function in Egypt, Kongo, Mali, Nigeria and ancient Greece?

Before you even think that it is "possible" by some supernatural "chance correspondence," to say that each one of these cultures could have thought of these symbols, with the same=2 of function, the same purpose and iconography independently and on their own, is like saying it is also possible for the Khoisan to independently invent the Autobots logo and associate it with the same story line..

Then after you successfully explain that, I want you to explain how these symbols ended up in the ancient writing scripts of West Africans?

Igbo Script and Egyptian

Mande Script and Egyptian

Again, if you are as serious as you say, address the questions I have asked.

Subject: [africanclassicalhistory] Problems With Amharic and Egyptian Comparison

Asar: "Thank You Onyekachi
I ordered this book and it confirms EVERYTHING I have been stating in my debates with Gore"

GORE: Since you have not understood the basics of the comparative method (the method used to demonstrate genetic relationships between languages) or my refutations of your work I can only assume that your thinking this work "confirms EVERYTHING" is yet another misunderstanding.

Asar: "One, it confirms that the Egyptian language is syllabic".

GORE: Perhaps the work claims that the Egyptian language is syllabic (you do not make this clear) but it cannot CONFIRM such unless it has demonstrated this. Has this been defended against Egyptologists? I'm not even asking whether Egyptologists agree (because they may disagree and be wrong) I'm just asking whether the syllabic theory has been defended against their arguments.

Asar: "Two, it confirms that the H is really an SH (CH) sound.
Observe the following from the book:

AMARIGNA EGYPTIAN (per Budge)
sh𐤱𐤥 - then, pastime hau-t - time, period m𐤱𐤥𐤥 - take possession hbt - mission, raid
CH'an𐤥𐤥 load, pack, carry hnn - to be bowed, loaded CH'𐤥𐤥r - LIGHT hrw - day, today, daily shom𐤥𐤥 take office hmi - government
shro - mixture of peas and beans hrw - vegetables sh𐤥𐤥𐤥 flee, to evade haha - to go back, to retreat
CHiru - falcon &nbs
p; hrw - pertaining to Horus (the hawk deity)

GORE: Firstly this does not CONFIRM that the Egyptian `h` is really a `sh` or `ch`. What the list claims, if we follow the methodology of the comparative method, is that Egyptian `h` is the recurrent correspondent of Amharic `ch` and `sh`. You cannot use Amharic to determine what the Egyptian sound would be.

Secondly as a comparative list for the purpose of uncovering genetic relationships this is a poor list. The vocabulary can hardly be described as basic. Basic vocabulary includes words like `foot`, `leg`, `eye`, `arm`, `go`, `stand`, `sun`, `tree` etc. It does not include terms like `government` and `take office`. Don't get me wrong cognates of this nature can be found amongst related languages but when these (words like `government`) are present there will always be an abundance of more basic vocabulary too and they take priority. Where are they here?

Thirdly the meanings are related but not a single one of them are exact. They are not even particularly close. This increases the chance of being able to find `correspondences`. Comparing `peas and beans` to `vegetables` is not impressive. If you were comparing `peas` in one language to `beans` in another this would be closer. Where is the impressive demonstration that makes the case. Again you can find cognates at these sorts of semantic distances but preferably not in the initial demonstration.

Fourthly why are there two correspondents for Egyptian `h` in Amharic. Is there a conditioning factor determining whether it is a `sh` or a `ch`? Why have you not presented in this? Explanations should always be given for double correspondences.

Fifth unless you have some basic idea of the grammar of Amharic you will fail to spot basic errors which the author will make. It is not the first time I have seen this kind of comparison so I know what to expect in terms of mistakes.

Asar:(Remember Wim van Binsbergen's notion of proto-Nostratic *hr for falcon with Egyptian hrw (Horus). The modern name in Nostratic for falcon/hawk is hierax)"

GORE: Nostratic relies on the same poor semantic comparisons and unexplained multiple correspondences. It is hardly a good example.

Asar: "With this evidence plain as day, one can see how the "proto" Indo-European form *s^hl, *sawel or *sul came to be from CH'arar" .

GORE:1) It`s certainly not plain and it`s certainly not evidence, as I have shown above. 2)Borrowing tends to be of words that the borrowers do not have like technical terms. `Sun` is not a technical term but a basic one.3) Furthermore what is your chronology of the Egyptian language and Proto-Indo-European ? 4) Interesting how you are prepared to use reconstructions when they appear to back your claims. 5) Are you claiming that Amharic CH`arar is the original to be comparing this rather than Egyptian Hrw with Proto-Indo-European reconstructions? Have you checked what is the Ge`ez form which would be an older `uncle` language?

Asar:"This would also explain why in the other Niger-Congo languages this became OSORO, IJERU and IZULU."

GORE: Again you need to explain the difference in the vowels. Vowel differences do occur but they come with explanations. You would also have to show that `s` in one language corresponds to `j` in another language and `z` in IsiZulu. Have you done this?

Asar:"They note in the book that the symbol for R is also the symbol for L simultaneously. Seeing how HRW in Nostratic is HIERAX, it should not be an issue equating the Greek HELIOS with CHIRU (Hrw)".

GORE: How exactly? The -os of Greek Heli-os is a grammatical ending and not part of the root. It therefore is not cognate with any supposed -ax in *Hierax which a) cannot be shown to be separate from Hierax, and b) the reconstruction *hierax is dubious because Nostratic is a dubious construct.

Asar: "I can say that this is legit and it matches everything I've come to know by studying the other African languages and oral traditions concerning the script".

GORE: I can say, based on what I've seen so far, that it's not legit.

Asar: "What's in this book also confirms a lot of Ferg Somo's renderings in the Ba-Ntu languages and I see parallels in the Yoruba".

GORE: Ferg's work has the same faults as your own. 1) Trying to compare *-cana and English 'sun' while totally ignoring the Proto-Indo-European reconstruction is poor methodology that even Onyekachi has detected in relation to using Tigrinya rather than Ge'ez. You do not even address this. 2) You do not even address the issue of Amharic and Tigrinya and the relationship they should have with Bantu if you are correct. If you can find cognates in any languages compared with Egyptian then it's probably because your methodology is not strict enough.

Asar: "What this also confirms is Diodorus Siculus' statement concerning the oral traditions of the Egyptians. I will repeat here:

Diodorus Siculus, The Library of History, Books II.3

5 - IV.58, Translated by C.H. Oldfather, Harvard University Press, 2000, informs us that the founders of Pharaonic Egypt and the natives were different people. He goes on to state:

"[The Ethiopians] They say also that the Egyptians are colonists sent out by the Ethiopians, Osiris having been the leader of the colony (...) And the larger part of the customs of the Egyptians are, they hold, Ethiopian, the colonists still preserving their ancient manners (...) Many other things are also told by them concerning their own antiquity and the colony which they sent out that became the Egyptians, but about this there is no special need of our writing anything."

GORE: Diodorus here is referring to Nubia and not the land of Amharic and Tigrinya. Poor methodology.

Asar: "The same way this script is used in Ethiopia for a good number of Ethiopian languages, is the same way the M-du Njora (matṣanṣṣ) was used to write the many languages of Egypt (Gebts)"

GORE: Where have you isolated the different languages that were used to write the Ethiopian script and Egyptian script?

Asar: "Looking at the word Gebts it makes more sense when we look at Aigyptos in the Greek instead of the usual excuse of He.t Ka Ptah. And It's funny how even the in Egyptian the word QBT (Gebts) is translated as a word for a nome in Upper Egypt and the word QMI refers to Upper Egypt in the dictionaries, but among the Ethiopians and the Kenyans respectfully, these terms refer to all of Egypt (Gebts, Ik ami respectfully) ".

GORE: That bit is pure hocus-pocus. Which Kenyans today? You give me references from 1990 or thereabouts for Rwandan and Kenyan "priests" who use mystical terms that are presumably not in any dictionaries from the 1920`s before the Afrocentric fashion became widely known and expect me to take you seriously. Poor, shambolic scholarship.

The Notorious G.O.R.E

PS You post any raw data here and I`ll slaughter it. You can argue all you like around the issue but the raw data I`LL send to Hiroshima!

Subject: [Ta_Seti] Challenge to charcoal glyph in the word KMT

Greetings

I have been recently challenged by a native Ethiopian concerning what the initial glyph is in the word and the meaning of the word KMT. Egyptologists, Eurocentricists and Afrocentricists interpret KMT to mean "the black land." With what has been revealed to me, that notion will be shattered. The issue I have always had is wondering why a "Black" people would name themselves "black" when they are amongst other black people? The reasons I have received never answered the question.

Anyways, at first the glyph was interpreted to be a piece of allegator skin. Later it was interpreted to be a piece of charcoal. What has been told to me is that it is neither and actually represents the end or edge of a river bank. It is interpreted as the port to bring agricultural goods. It is more so a farm development or port to drop off goods. At first I was skeptical because but I remembered the argument from Cameroonian Egyptologist Dr. Oscar Pfouma stating that the term KM across Africa, in terms of nationhood, had nothing to do with the color of one's skin. He provides the following examples as proof:

Egyptic: km "*farm"

Basa: kaam "farm"

Doai: kaam "farm"

Esitako: ekaam "id."

Ngodzin: kam "id."

Runda: kumadin "id."

Egyptic: km "*polis"

Coptic: k𐪎 "Egypt" vs kmom "black"

Balue: kom "country, region"

Okam: ekoma "city"

Ndzem: k𐌶𐌶 rural area"

Bateteka: komwa "country, region"

Bakweri: kumi "country"

Zulu: -khumbi "nation"

Pende: guma "country, region"

Dewoi: gumo "village, city"

Caga: gumi "rural area"

Lingala: -gumba "city"

Galla: gomdji "land which grows warm and healthy cultivated"

What lends support to this theory is the earliest depiction on record of the word KMT in regards to a national designation. The earliest depiction has the N23 (irrigated land) determinative . This would clearly indicate farming or farm land and not a color designation on the land or the people. It also lends support to another definition of the word KMT which means the end, to bring to an end as KM-T would have been the "end" of a merchant's journey from inner Africa along the Nile or the Red Sea. N23

qm = to bring to an end, complete (Budge 770a)

khm, Khmi = to bring to an end, to make an end of (Budge 546a)

km = to bring to and end, to finish, to complete, the end, end of a moment (charcoal biliteral) (Budge 787b)

km-t = end of a period, completion (ibid)

kmi = finished products (ibid)

My issue is that the KM symbol proposed to be the end of a river bank looks nothing of the sort in my opinion. The following symbol I could see:

I don't know if anyone has seen natural wood burning but it looks just like the gardiner sign I16. But then again, there are a lot of symbols that aren't obvious to the modern person.

Another interesting bit of information is the "god" Aten is really a symbol for "ancestors." In Tigrigna the word is "idna" and means "hands." The idea is that the ancestors reach their hands to help and bless the living. At first there doesn't seem to be a connect, but when you examine the following there seems to be some credibility to it:

Notice the "hands" coming from the sun? This is where we would get the hebrew name for god ADONAI coming from IDNA.

This would lend support to my notion that Africans, in regards to words for the "sun" are not really talking about the sun but its effect or by product (light). I remember in a video tape that Dr. Ben, an Ethiopian, stated that the symbol for RA really means "all that god sees" which would symbolically mean that the "sun" is God's "eye." Nothing new here as that is pretty standard across Africa. But in Ethiopia the term "ra-ey" means "sight/vision" and would lend support to Dr. Ben's rendering of the symbol of "RA" meaning "all that god sees." In Ethiopia they argue that the sign for the "sun" really isn't a sun but the pupil of an eye.

When you read John S. Mbiti's African Religion and Philosophy (1969: 47 & 57) he informs us that the Galla people of Ethiopia say that the sun is God's eye. The Balese people of the Congo consider the sun to be God's right eye and the moon his left. Again, the sun is a symbol for light and being able to "see" and is why the Uadjet (eye) is also represented as a snake as snakes are symbolic all across Africa to represent the wave nature of light. By extension being able to "see" is a metaphor for consciousness.

In Egypt Heru is symbolized by God's left eye (the moon) and Djehuti is the right eye (the sun).

This is the notes given by Ashby but I think this is actually wrong.

Djehuti with moon symbol on his head

Greetings,

Bro. Gore. I know the question was not directly addressed to me but in light of a past statement I feel that I ought to respond. You asked Bro. Pruitt if Reparations For Black/African- Americans is The Kind of Conversation That He believes the President Obama should have with White Americans (and the Eurocentric Negro Conservatives, my addition).

Well My Answer is YES!

To be brief I will state that the Marshall Plan for Europe/Japan and the senseless wars of Neo-Colonialism in Asia (Korea, Vietnam, Cambodia etc) and Africa (all over the Continent) has bankrupted this Country for while CASH flowed for the Working Peoples, The Middle Class and The Wealthy The INTEREST from the Unpaid Bills, Debtorship and Squandering 2 Trillion from the National Treasury (The Public Trust Fund) all contributed to the present Economic Collapse and Crisis.

No. 2 : I know that there are many other important factors in addition to this such as The wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, The Energy and Technology failures of Microsoft, Enron and many others. The failures of Lehman Brothers, AIG, Washington Mutual and The Entire Banking/ Financial Industry. The Health Care Insurance Crisis, The Housing and Real Estate Crisis, The Airlines and Auto Industry Crisis and so much more. The Accounts Payable Time for European/Caucasians has Arrived Now and I am not just talking in Dollars and Cents but in life itself (Nature, Spirit, Ancestors, Intelligence, Mind, Psychology, The Elemental Forces of Nature, Physics. The Human Beings and Our Physical Bodies being THE PRODUCTS of ALL of These.!))

Dear Nathaniel,

We've got big news -- Glenn Beck's show is making less than half the money it was making when we started calling on companies to pull their advertisements from the show. This is huge and it's thanks to you -- more than 200,000 ColorOfChange members have spoken out, and 62 advertisers have listened.

Data from a media tracking firm shows how deeply we're hitting Fox's pockets; they are now sacrificing more than a half-million ad dollars a week to keep Beck on the air.

Of course, Beck and his supporters are fighting back with everything they've got. Today, we need your help to make sure the 62 companies who have pulled their ads from Beck's show stand strong, and to turn up the pressure on his remaining advertisers. Please join us in thanking the companies that have pulled their ads, and in calling on his remaining advertisers to stop supporting him:

<http://colorofchange.org/beck/hold/?id=2288-147537>

During the last week in July, Beck's show pulled in over $1 million from advertising. The first week in September, that number was down to less than $500,000, even as his ratings have gone up.¹

It's clear that our campaign is making a significant financial impact, despite Fox's insistence otherwise.

What's happening is a simple matter of supply and demand. Fox has a limited amount of time devoted to ads each day. If 62 companies refuse to run ads during Beck's show, the demand for that time is reduced, and the rates the network can charge for the show plummet. In Beck's case, almost no major companies are willing to advertise during either of his twice-a-day broadcasts, so Fox can't collect as much ad revenue as they could before. If we can keep the advertisers away, Fox will have to decide sometime soon whether it's worth losing money to keep Beck's poison on the air.

Beck's smear campaigns

Beck claims to be a patriot who asks hard questions and gives his viewers the facts. In reality, he consistently uses lies, distortions, and exaggerations to stir up anger and fear, and to distract his viewers from working towards real solutions to the problems facing our country. He seems determined to create an atmosphere in which the White House can accomplish nothing, and he's doing it partly by launching vicious smear campaigns on Obama's character, policies and advisers.

Last week, Beck and his supporters took credit for both Van Jones' resignation² and for the demotion of Yosi Sergeant, who was "reassigned" at the National Endowment for the Arts following vicious attacks by Beck³. And Beck has made it clear he's got other targets.⁴

Holding the line

Our campaign is working. Respectable companies don't want to be associated with Beck or support his show with their dollars. It's resulting in a major loss of funding for his show, and at the same time, it's making clear that Beck's race-baiting and fear-mongering are far outside the mainstream.

The longer Beck stays isolated, the more of a problem he'll be for Fox, and the harder it will be for him to spread his lies and distortions. If we can keep the pressure on, Fox will have to make a choice: 1) drop Beck because it doesn't make business sense to keep him; or 2) communicate to the world that they're so intent on providing a platform for race-baiting and fear-mongering that they don't care if they lose money (a serious problem for a public company like News Corporation, the owner of Fox).

More than ever, it's time to keep the pressure on. You can help by joining us in thanking the advertisers that have stopped supporting Glenn Beck, and calling on those whose ads are still running on his show to follow suit:

Peace Mahari,

I highly recommend you get acquainted with Gerhard Kubik. His work Africa and the Blues is standard for anyone wanting to know and understand the African connection to the Blues. His book is available on Amazon, but you can get the essence from the following link. Hope this helps.

KCDN Child Support Initiative 2009. 14th September 2009

As we invite your support for our last event in 2009, we want to thank you for having been part of the KCDN Family in 2009.

We first invited your support to help us host the 2nd Edition of the KCDN Peace Run/Walk in June, and on June 13th, you made it happen for us.

We then invited your support for the Greening of Nairobi East; A KCDN Initiative in September, and again, on 5th September, you came in handy.

In the 2 events, our children, in the company of their parents came out in large numbers and responded to our call. Their resolve is enough reason to solicit our educational support.

We hence invite you to help us make these children have an eventful end to the year. Our support to them in the enclosed invitation will be our way of wishing all of them a Happy New Year.

We are initiating several fund raising activities and we will invite your support as we roll them out to achieve the following items;

	Quantity	Items needed	Cost in Kshs
1	30,000	Exercise Book-Ruled/Square @ 30.65
2	6,000	Loose Leaf Pads- Ruled/Square @ 40.00
3	2,000	Fountain Pens @ 25.00
4	2,000	Ink Pelican 30ml @ 75.40
5	6,000	Pencils Pelicans @ 7.50
6	6,000	Pelican rubbers @ 15.00
7	2,000	Kamusi Ya Kiswahili @ 645.00
8	2,000	Good News Bible @ 495.00
9	2,000	Mathematical sets Oxford @ 116.00
10	2,000	Rulers Aim Brand @ 11.60
11	2,000	Pencil sharpener @ 7.00
12	2,000	School uniforms, ties, pullovers, PE kits @ 2,500.00
13	2,000	Pairs of shoes and socks @ 1,250.00
		Totals

Kindly read our appeal, and in your personal capacity, be of help to us. You may invite as many friends to join us in this campaign.

We will give out these items to the children during the 2nd Edition of the KCDN Child Support Initiative scheduled to take place on 4th December 2009 in a function that we will host at Komarock Primary School at 10am.

Just like we did last year, kindly give us your support in the form of materials needed, or, make a cheque payable to;

- Text Book Centre Ltd,
- Uniform Distributors Ltd or
- Komarocks Community Development Network

and we will list down all the Friends in our final report. We will also keep you up to date with the drive.

At KCDN, we are determined to make a difference.

Many thanks and blessings.

Dear Nathaniel,
We've got big news -- Glenn Beck's show is making less than half the money it was making when we started calling on companies to pull their advertisements from the show. This is huge and it's thanks to you -- more than 200,000 ColorOfChange members have spoken out, and 62 advertisers have listened.

Data from a media tracking firm shows how deeply we're hitting Fox's pockets; they are now sacrificing more than a half-million ad dollars a week to keep Beck on the air.

Of course, Beck and his supporters are fighting back with everything they've got. Today, we need your help to make sure the 62 companies who have pulled their ads from Beck's show stand strong, and turn up the pressure on his remaining advertisers. Please join us in thanking the comp: that have pulled their ads, and in calling on his remaining advertisers to stop supporting hi
<http://colorofchange.org/beck/hold/?id=2288-147537>

During the last week in July, Beck's show pulled in over $1 million from advertising. The week in September, that number was down to less than $500,000, even as his ratings have up.¹

It's clear that our campaign is making a significant financial impact, despite Fox's insistence otherwise.

What's happening is a simple matter of supply and demand. Fox has a limited amount of time devoted to ads each day. If 62 companies refuse to run ads during Beck's show, the demand for that time is reduced, and the rates the network can charge for the show plummet. In Beck's case, almost no major companies are willing to advertise during either of his twice-a-day broadcasts, so Fox can't collect as much ad revenue as they could before. If we can keep the advertisers away, Fox will have to decide sometime soon whether it's worth losing money to keep Beck's poison on the air.

Beck's smear campaigns

Beck claims to be a patriot who asks hard questions and gives his viewers the facts. In reality, he consistently uses lies, distortions, and exaggerations to stir up anger and fear, and to distract his viewers from working towards real solutions to the problems facing our country. He seems determined to create an atmosphere in which the White House can accomplish nothing, and he's doing it partly by launching vicious smear campaigns on Obama's character, policies and advisers.

Last week, Beck and his supporters took credit for both Van Jones' resignation² and for the demotion of Yosi Sergeant, who was "reassigned" at the National Endowment for the Arts following vicious attacks by Beck³. And Beck has made it clear he's got other targets.⁴

Our campaign is working. Respectable companies don't want to be associated with Beck or support his show with their dollars. It's resulting in a major loss of funding for his show, and at the same time, it's making clear that Beck's race-baiting and fear-mongering are far outside the mainstream.

The longer Beck stays isolated, the more of a problem he'll be for Fox, and the harder it will be for him to spread his lies and distortions. If we can keep the pressure on, Fox will have to make a choice: 1) drop Beck because it doesn't make business sense to keep him; or 2) communicate to the world that they're so intent on providing a platform for race-baiting and fear-mongering that they don't care if they lose money (a serious problem for a public company like News Corporation, the owner of Fox).

HotepMahari,

similar to Baba's song you posted, is an Ethiopian traditional Orthodox Church music only sang during fasting season, it is called 'hudade', may be "hudade music" may pull a song or two of this kind for you. This style of music/song is soft, and uses only one instrument called "Begna" I believe it has 12 strings also is much bigger than guitar. The lyrics of such songs are usually with double meaning, as is typical with scholastic Amharic poetry which carry coded proverbs with deep meanings. I will post some info on this subject some day when I have time to look into it. Peace.

When I get a chance to get to my computer I can send you his full documents. This is just one variation of the sign. I was first

And this symbolism of the "sun", symbolic of the human being going through its cycle of conception, life, maturity and death, is present in so many Egyptian scenes as it is too much to demonstrate. That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.

>

> You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got it from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

>

>

> Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

>

> If you have the opportunity to meet some "Nubians" in Sudan or Ethiopia, they will tell you that their educational system for their "priesthoods" are based on the knowledge of this symbol. Check out Dr. Ben's works where he is talking about being a "360 degree Mason." (See Dr. Ben Ramesis II) That isn't something he made up.

>

> A full discussion of each of these symbols would encompass a large volume and it would demonstrate that it is totally impossible for the Dogon, Yoruba or Kongo-Bantu people to have gotten certain elements of these symbols unless they were in ancient Egypt. Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video: http://www.ted.com/talks/ron_eglash_on_african_fractals.html

> If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLES means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

What the list claims, if we follow the methodology of the comparative method, is that Egyptian `h` is the recurrent correspondent of Amharic `ch` and `sh`. You cannot use Amharic to determine what the Egyptian sound would be.

Basic vocabulary includes words like `foot`, `leg`, `eye`, `arm`, `go`, `stand`, `sun`, `tree` etc. It does not include terms like `government` and `take office`. Don't get me wrong cognates of this nature can be found amongst related languages but when these (words like `government`) are present there will always be an abundance of more basic vocabulary too and they take priority. Where are they here?

Where is the impressive demonstration that makes the case. Again you can find cognates at these sorts of semantic distances but preferably not in the initial demonstration.

There is supposed to be text where Hatshepsut was bashing the Hyksos

You have already informed me it is very hard to see

BEFORE any one could give a translation that Hatshepsut said any thing, they would first have to see the hieroglyphs

There would have to be a drawing or photograph of the hieroglyphics for any one to assert Hatshepsut said any thing about the Hyksos.

I have found multiple references to something the Egyptians wrote, but I can not find the sources any where.

<http://enceg-hieroglyphics.blogspot.com/2009/09/show-us-your-photographs.html> lays out the fact that any one who translates any thing, must first have a drawing or photograph to make their translation from.

I am trying to track down all text that people say deals with the Hyksos. After I find the text (if it exists) I want to see the words they use as their reference to Hyksos.

Does such an image of the hieroglyphics of Hatshepsut's condemnation of the Hyksos exist? If so where can I see that image?

Thanks Sam

For my map demo, I need the hieroglyphic spelling of a couple cities in Egypt.

NOT in our european characters

Thebes, Arvis, Luxor .. I don't want an image with lots of text and poor detail, but if any one can create hieroglyphics of the names of any ancient Egyptian cities where I can copy the text to a map.

Thanks Sam

According to which of the multiple accounts you want to start with, these were immigrants who came to Egypt around the 12th Dynasty, grew stronger and took over northern Egypt.

Hyksos is the topic I decided to investigate. I began a blog and divided it up into single pages because I have/will include many photos.. SO to go through it page by page Start at the page below and click on newer post at the bottom of each page.

IF you find any photographic sources of hieroglyphics supposed to deal with the Hyksos, let me know. The ONLY possible way for any one to translate any hieroglyphic, they would have a photographic of that hieroglyphic to work from.

I have found lots of stories about hieroglyphics from those who have never seen them.

You are welcome to respond to the topic of Hyksos in this group or in private if your post is rejected.

Nkrumah's centenary will re-kindle the spirit of patriotism - Veep

Accra, Sept. 11, GNA - Vice President John Dramani Mahama, on Friday said the centenary celebration of Osagyefo Dr Kwame Nkrumah was a call to Ghanaians, especially the youth to re-kindle the spirit of patriotism. "It is a call to all of us particularly the youth to do what they can for the nation and not what they can get from the country," he said. Vice President Mahama, launching the centenary celebrations in Accra, said the revival of the spirit of nationhood would inculcate in the younger generation higher values of service, and commitment to ideals of the commonwealth beyond material possession and power for self gratification.

The centenary celebrations would extend over the period September 2009 to May 2010; and would be organised around three clusters of activities and events, namely: Kwame Nkrumah's Birthday (September 21), Independence Day (March 6, 2010) and Africa Liberation Day (May 25, 2010).

Mr Mahama said it was worth celebrating the life and works of Dr Nkrumah because he was not just an individual but an institution in Africa and the Diaspora, who fought selflessly for the emancipation and independence of not only Ghana but for the total liberation of the African continent. "Apart from being at the forefront of Ghana's independence and Africa's liberation struggles, the achievements of Nkrumah run through the length and breadth of Ghana. He laid a solid foundation in the country's infrastructural architecture," he said.

He said the many schools, roads, ports, health facilities, a hydro power project and vigorous industrialization and agricultural programmes formed the nucleus of a vision the first President had for Ghana. Vice President Mahama said: "today as African countries enjoy the fruits of independence so is it imperative for us to appreciate the selfless leaders who kept their lives on the line to ensure that we achieved the memorable feat.

"For a people who do not recognize the significance of their history would eventually lose their bearing and values," Mr Mahama said. Commenting on the attributes of Dr Kwame Nkrumah, Mr Mahama said he preached African continental unity and demonstrated it at home and was a cultural icon in whom the embodiment of a truly African vision was personified in his mode of dressing and in the institutions he set up to project the cultural heritage Ghana.

"For those of us who either lived during his lifetime as adults or experienced it as teenagers can testify to a united country that he sought to build. A country devoid of tribalism and ethnic animosity," he said. Mr Mahama stated that there had been no period in the history of Ghana in which the national consciousness, identity and unity were solid and indivisible except during the era of Dr Kwame Nkrumah to the extent that every African and those of African descent identified themselves with Ghana and were even proud to hold Ghanaian passport.

"These are the attributes we need to cherish in order to build a prosperous and united country. So for a person to have lived and died a vicarious life for his compatriots there is no other tribute to give than keeping his name and works continuously aflame," he said. Professor Akilagpa Sawyerr, the Chairman of the centenary celebrations Committee, said between the three clusters, there would be a series of activities/events reflecting all the aspects of the celebrations and spread over the regions.

He said the highest point of the first cluster of events would be a series of events at Nkroful from September 17 to 21, and a Grand Pageant and Durbar of Ghanaians and African Peoples to be held at the Kwame Nkrumah Memorial Park on September 21. Activities to be captured during the year-long celebration include Political/intellectual interventions such as lectures, symposia, students' quizzes and exhibitions, Culture and Arts, renovation of monuments and memorials, and the re-enactment of significant events in Nkrumah's life and time. Vice President Mahama later broke the ground for renovation of the Memorial Park and also unveiled the centenary logo. 11 Sept. 09

What are your thoughts?

<http://www.2013.net/multidim/mayas/nagas.htm>

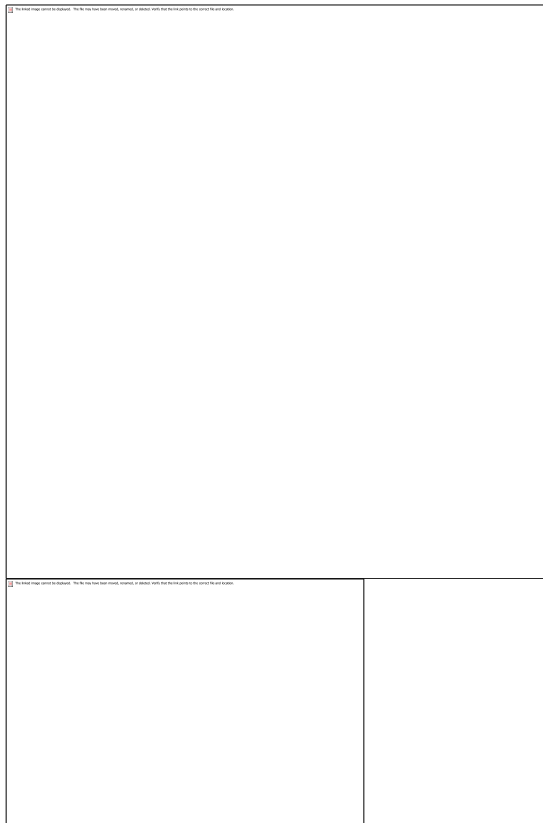

There is definitely an important connection between the old Vedic people and Maya-ancestors. The Mayas are actually referred to in the Mahabharata, one of the main Hindu scriptures, as a tribe having left the Indian subcontinent. There are sources who have revealed those people to be the same as the Nagas, one of the oldest Indian tribes recorded. Those Nagas seem to have been a people, later called Danavas, with a capital Nagapur. They are referred to in another main Hindu-scripture, the Ramayana, as belonging to a Naga-Maya tribe, who is said to have transmitted their culture towards Babylonia, Egypt and Greece (source: Una Vision del Mundo, Prof. G. Zapata Alonzo, Merida, Mexico, 1994, p.71)

These findings point again to Bharat (India's subcontinent) as the cradle-land and pioneering force in the establishment of earth's main civilisations.

There are actually a lot of very interesting correlations:

- There are a lot of similarities between the native Maya language and counting system and the parallel Naga systems. There are similar correlations between other Asian languages as f.i. Japanese (!) and Maya. And some old sanskrit texts were found in Yucatan, Mexico.
- There are a lot of parallel symbols used in both Indian and Maya-culture: the snake (actually referring to the Khi, life energy), Ganesh (the elephant god), the swastika (symbol of cyclic time), solar cosmoglyphs, ideograms etc... The word Maya in Hindu philosophy refers to the word of illusion, but also to the origin of the world; the sanskrit term is related to great, magic, mother.
- Going to the Greek-Egyptian civilisations: have you ever compared the arch of the Agamemnon tomb or palace and the ones you can find in Uxmal?
- The cyclic time approaches omnipresent in both cultures. The understanding of the 'kalpas' had both a scientific but first and foremost a spiritual inspiration. Arguelles refers to it as follows "The common root and interest in chronocosmology of Vedic and Maya is also seen in the cultivation of yoga (Sanskrit: divine union) and yok-hah (Maya: higher truth).

Church of England's ignominious investment in India

Alastair Lawson

27 July 2009

Church of England is taking flak from ActionAid and Survival International for investing 4.1 million dollars in Vedantas Niyamgiri bauxite mining project in eastern India. The company has been accused of forcing tribal people off their land, damaging the environment and destroying wildlife.

The idea that there could be any connection between one of India's most remote and inaccessible areas and the Church of England seems improbable, at first glance.

The Dhongaria Kondh say their way of life is threatened/ Photo credit: BBC

High in the monsoon mists in eastern India, witch doctors in the Niyamgiri hills still make sacrifices to the gods and tribes believe the hills are sacred.

It is a world away from the quiet corridors of Church House the headquarters of the Church of England in London.

But campaigners say that the lives of indigenous people in India are under threat because of a mining project involving a UK company, in which the Church of England has a 2.5m ($4.1m) stake.

Destroying wildlife

The church has been condemned by campaign groups such as ActionAid and Survival International for investing in the Vedanta company, which is about to start mining bauxite used for making aluminium to feed what could become one of the world's biggest refineries nearby.

The company, Vedanta, is also accused of forcing tribal people off the land, damaging the environment and destroying wildlife.

All this on the face of it is highly embarrassing for the Church, which is why its Ethical Investment Advisory Group spokesman Edward Mason chooses his words carefully as he explains that there are no plans at present to withdraw the investment in Vedanta.

"For certain sensitive industries such as mining companies we have a three-year monitoring and engagement process," he said.

"Where we have concerns that standards do not conform to norms of corporate behaviour we prefer to talk to them and bring about change that way."

The church acknowledges that the allegations are "serious".

ActionAid has brought over a member of the Dongria Kondh tribal community to London, to make the case against the mine at Vedanta's annual general meeting in London on Monday. A single share has been bought to enable Sitaram Kulisika to speak at the meeting.

He argues that the mining plans will endanger his community's livelihood.

"Our people have been living in the hills for generations," he says. "We don't need a foreign multinational to move into our area and promise jobs and development that are not required."

The Dongria Kondh survive by gathering fruit, growing small crops of millet and selling jungle plants in the towns at the foot of the hills. The modern world has yet to reach the Niyamgiri hills there's no electricity, no school, no television, no telephones.

'Servants'

Kulisika is accompanied by ActionAid's head of indigenous people's rights, Bratindi Jena, who is equally passionate about the damage she says is being caused by the mining project.

"If you assess the cost benefit analysis of this project there are few benefits," she says.

"Companies like Vedanta want to make tribal people servants in their own homeland. [These people] know what they want out of their relationship with Mother Earth not foreign-backed companies."

Several UK-based aid agencies are campaigning against the project, as well as the prominent environmentalist Bianca Jagger.

But Vedanta says it has the support of the Orissa state government and the law on its side.

"Before we went ahead with this project we consulted exhaustively to assess its environmental and social impact," a spokesman said.

"The campaigners seem to have conveniently forgotten that this is a joint venture with the Orissa government and that it was approved by the country's Supreme Court last year - the highest judicial body in the land.

"They also seem to forget that we are talking about a part of India urgently in need of investment.

This is one of the poorest parts of the country where maternal and infant mortalities are too high and where illnesses such as malaria are rampant. This project offers people a much brighter economic future."

The company accuses groups like ActionAid and Survival International of focusing their campaigns solely on the concerns of the tribal community and ignoring the need of other people in the area for jobs and the improvements in education and healthcare that it says the project will bring.

WOMAN: THE APPLIED SCIENCE OF THE NUMBER 9 AND GOVERNMENT

(by The HIGHLY-Honorable Moorish/Muurish Brother and Elder Taj Tarik Bey)

There are countless books, pamphlets and articles extolling the virtues and greatness of the Ancient Advanced Civilizations and Empires of the Asiatic Moabite/Moorish Nation and t Descendant Nations. Granted, many national names and geographical locations of nations map systems have been changed by European Sociologists and Reconstruction Writers.
Unfortunately, there are at least two (2) major flaws which proliferate these works.

The first major flaw is the popularly accepted false claim that these Ancient Peoples were great quote, unquote BLACK Nation. Fraud!

The second major flaw is the overemphasis on Patriarchal Rulership and Government Structure, relative to these Ancient Civilizations and the implication of only minor support roles by the so-called Black Queens (Women).

One must give all due respect to the researchers, writers, and authors of a number of these literary works many are superlative, well produced and well presented. Nevertheless, these two flaws are too destructive and unbalanced to ignore. They are promoted to hide, distort and skim the truth neutralizing the energy of Natural Positive vibration and proper concepts of nature. These two (2) flaws are inexcusable and arrogantly incorrect.

Addressing the First Major Flaw:

There is not, nor ever was a nation of people attached to the Human/Hue-man family, bearing a pedigree/parentage or National Name such as Negro, Black or Colored etc. To make these brand and label names retroactive in History is not only untrue, but ultimately misleading, destabilizing and non-productive. All of this, done in the name of Black/Negro History, self-esteem, and re-education. Fraud!

The names Negro, Black, and Colored as appellations to the Human/Hue-man Family were coined by the PEREGRINUS (Kracker-Ass Pilgrim) Dutch Master Colonists. The use of these TAGS describe the CHATTEL property of the Albinus Gaul Nations. These NAMES are not proper nouns, but adjectives. They separate the people (who delusionally accept these names as real) from the Human/Hue-man Family. This is one (1) of the deceitful SOCIAL ENGINEERING methods used for justifying the institutionalized less-than-human treatment of the enslaved Asiatic Moors.

These negative and debased words (NEGRO, BLACK, COLORED, etc.) are modern appellations used in Social Affairs and were not put officially into documentation as substitutes for National Names, until the 1700s. Therefore, there is no such thing as any ANCIENT Black History or Black People who did anything on behalf of Humanity/Hue- manity. Undo the fraud!

Addressing the second major flaw:

One must, again, acknowledge and give credit to the great efforts put forth and the quality, presentation and execution of many of the authors, claiming black-ness as a nation of people.

That being said; there is no truth, balance or honor in the spirit of the overall literary works, due to these facts:

When the slave labels and brands of NEGRO, BLACK, COLORED, etc. are attached to any part of the Human/Hue-man Family of Ancient History it did not, does not and cannot apply. These words are European Chattel Brands, and cannot be applied to history, retroactively! Prior to the enslavement of the Moabite/Moorish Asiatic People (which has been accomplished through war and maintained by book burnings and the alteration of records in the late 1700s), no such names were attached to the Moors.

As we enter the realm of Ancient Asiatic Civilizations, in mind, spirit and written form-to retrieve oneness with our Ancient Mothers and Fathers we must also reclaim the truth and reality that most of the Ancient Civilizations were MATRIARCHAL, Not PATRIARCHAL. The fundamental truths of Nature and Natures Laws brings a sense of consciousness and unity of mind with Ancient Ones. Even the Moors adopted the Patriarchal forms of government. The Womb-Men/Wo- Men/Women were always conferred with in serious Counsel before any major actions or decisions were made. This was the standard in Ancient and Modern Moorish Culture. Mutual counsel (balance) with the Men and the Women, in governing the Nations affairs was strictly adhered to.

If one goes into the sphere of the generic and spiritual intelligence of the mind (there is no way out), ALL LIFE COMES OUT OF THE WOMB OF THE MOTHER. MOTHER is the root physical cause, who brings the physical manifest effect of the bodies (Temples) of Man. Matriarchy is the natural state of social order in Nature. Intelligent beings should not be threatened by this truth and fact. Patriarchal forms of government (unbalanced) do not harmonize with Nature. Patriarchal forms of government are unnaturally enforced and coerced political/economic man-made control systems. Patriarchies must be artificial maintained by use of arms, fear, guilt, superstition and religious dogma, due to their lack of harmony with the Natural Universal Order.

Patriarchal Government systems are popular to the Albion (Albino-Mutant) European Nations. Matriarchal forms of Government systems were the norm, in the Ancient Moabite/Moorish Civilizations. Due to the dissolution of the imperial Moroccan Empire and the destructive expansion of Albus Gaul Colonialism, much of the true Asiatic Moorish History, Books, Literature and Sciences, were destroyed and/or put to flame. The Human/Hue-man Family has lost incalculable knowledge due to the massive book burnings by the conquering nations of Christendom. These angry and selfish acts have set the work and human/hue-man progress back a minimum of a thousand years.

The massive book burnings of Moorish Literature and the murder of Moorish Women, by decapitation, brought Western Hemisphere to an extremely low state of humanity/hue- manity. The burning of the Witches of Salam, commonly referred in Union States (U.S.) History, was in reality, the burning at the stake of many Moabite/Moorish Woman called the Witches of Salaam. Salam is Anglis for the Moorish Salaam. Salaam means peace. The purpose of the burnings was to destroy historical evidence and the Earth and Planet (Astrological) cosmology culture of the Indigenous Moors.

The Moabites/Moors were masters of Natures Laws, Herbology, Earth Polarity, Al Chemy, Metallurgy, Astrology, Geometry, Metaphysics, law, government, Anti-Gravity, forces of nature, etc. They lost much of the knowledge due to natural and man-generated destruction. The Peregrines (Pilgrims) called the Moorish Sciences Demonology, and, in the names of their Gods, aimed to destroy the sciences and the people of those sciences (the Moors). The rest is history with current historical abuses and events verifying these facts!

To counter political, economic, social and psychic attacks against the Indigenous Moors the Sciences and History of the Ancient Ones is being exposed to the masses. The negative effects these attacks have had on our people have been devastating. Unfortunately, through subjugation, our people are so backward as to believe (as they have been taught) that human/hue-man beings are identified by colors and shades, as opposed to National Pedigree Names. Our People need to be re-taught the buried and hidden history and culture of their own bloodline the ancient Moabite Moors.

This treatise is presented to and for the Moorish Children, descendants of the Ancient Moabites, for the Royal Future and promised protected lands of their forefathers which they are to be enlightened to and inherit after the universal revelation of truth. THIS IS THEIR BIRTHRIGHT.

Woman, The Divine Source of Physical Life

Woman (Wombed-Man/ Wo-man) is the Divine Source, through which all physical life forms come. She, the Feminine, is without doubt the most powerful being in existence the literal Stargate, the most High Creative Womb. Life comes through the Womb: therefore, all that lives, or is to live, is first, essentially, a part of her (Wombed-Man/ Wo-Man). The manifest energies or MONADS come into existence through her. These facts are clearly written in the book of life Natural Law. SHE is the GATE through which all humanity/hue- manity enters the realm of the flesh Femina and Mas. All humanity/hue- manity is her progeny this is the indisputable fact, which cannot and will not change. Is there doubt?

Woman (Wombed-Man/ Wo-Man) builds the physical forms of man, within her womb bringing life. It is in Womans nature to cultivate and structure civilization with moral governing principles for her offspring (progeny). She then teaches her offspring these systems for survival and sustenance. Matriarchy is the most natural form and order of Government. She, who brings life is best able to cultivate and ordain rules of order for that life! The vibratory energy and vitality of the whole human/hue-man Family is carried by, traced through, and dependant on Woman, HER STATE OF CONDITION AND HER STATE OF MIND!

What and who Woman is, what she knows, what she thinks, how she feels, what she eats, her temperament, in general, and the planets, with the energies and positions in this Solar System combined with the forces in Nature are Her Master Tools! She must be aware of these fundamental natural truths, as they will function positively or negatively, mistaught and subjugated. She must be freed and taught by those who know! If those who know do not assist in her resurrection, then the laws of reciprocity and compensation will manifest with a vengeance through natures mandate this is called JUSTICE the TWO EDGED SWORD!

Her Subjugation Control of the Womb

The European Masters of Slavery and conquerors of Nations are Astrological and Mathematical Scientists. They are well aware of the power which is naturally inherent in Woman (Wombed-Man/ Wo-Man). Never under estimate the genetically- retarded PALE-FACE White Mans cunning and manipulative approach to Government. In order to enslave a people, it is most important to control the Woman (Womb). He who controls the Woman (Womb), surely controls her Nation (Progeny). This is the highest secret knowledge, used by all SLAVE MASTERS. Those having this knowledge, know the KEY to CIVILIZATION!

Knowledge of the workings of the WOMB is so powerful and vital to civilization, that it is kept in Secret Societies and among the Elite and Upper Caste Government Rulers. The study of the WOMB is mandatory in the Science of Government, social correction or engineering controls. Womb Science can be used to the POSITIVE or to the NEGATIVE. WOMB SCIENCE will never be found in any text book, readily available to the masses, less more to STATE WARDS and SLAVES. Most all womb science, which was always a part of Moorish Culture, was stamped out by burnings, lynchings and torture during the early and mid periods of the current Union States (U.S.) Slave Ward and Ward Systems.

To the misfortune of Humanity/Hue- manity, the fundamental truths of Womb science have been lost in allegory, fables, fairy tales or suppressed on a global scale. The mass perpetuation of dogmatic subjugation doctrines and idol-god worship corruptly misrepresented as Godly, has been perpetrated through blind faith religions. All Organized Modern Religions are guilty of subjugating the Moabite Woman and Her offspring, at different levels and degrees. The ultimate purpose of the dogmatic Patriarchal Religious Doctrines is the subtle cultivation of murder, slavery, hatred, theft, suppression, oppression and subjugation of the Moabite Woman. This has been successfully done in the names of the Masculine Idol-Gods and the Worship of them.

Conclusion THE SUBJUGATION OF THE MOABITE WOMAN

The day comes quickly when the Moabite/Moorish Woman will be awakened to Herself, Her TRUE Power and Metaphysical Oneness with the Cosmos. This is called the REVELATIONS of the AGES. Then, and only then, will the world of Human/Hue-man Society begin to ascend to its True Quality of Humanity/Hue- manity and HIGHEST CIVILIZATION ORDER. As long as SHE (the Woman/Wo-Man/ Wombed-Man) is asleep and unconscious, the Moorish Nation will be oppressed. What her state of mind and her social condition reflects so goes the nation. Only SHE produces both Female and Male.

The Natural Asiatic Melaninated Moabite/Moorish Woman and her progeny (offspring) are what their Ancient Mothers and Fathers were without a doubt or contradiction that is Moabite/Moors. Moors are the direct descendants of the Ancient Moabites and are the Ancient and Indigenous Peoples of Northwest, Central and Southwest Amexem, including the adjoining Islands. These lands are known today as the Americas. The word AMERICA is a corruption of the Moorish Latin words Al Moroc and AL Morocco. AL Moroc is Moorish Latin, meaning, descendants of Moroccans.

The Metamorphic and metaphysical rise and ascension of the Moabite/Moorish Woman and her Moorish Nation is called The New Order of the Ages. A NEW Era of time is dawning the Earth.

THE GREAT ARCHITECT AND MASTER BUILDER (WOMAN) IS AWAKENING !!!

Peace on Earth and Good Will To all Men!

In what year exactly did the invaders called the Hyksos invade Egypt?

According to which of the multiple accounts you want to start with, these were immigrants who came to Egypt around the 12th Dynasty, grew stronger and took over northern Egypt.

Hyksos is the topic I decided to investigate. I began a blog and divided it up into single pages because I have/will include many photos.. SO to go through it page by page Start at the page below and click on newer post at the bottom of each page.

IF you find any photographic sources of hieroglyphics supposed to deal with the Hyksos, let me know. The ONLY possible way for any one to translate any hieroglyphic, they would have a photographic of that hieroglyphic to work from.

I have found lots of stories about hieroglyphics from those who have never seen them.

You are welcome to respond to the topic of Hyksos in this group or in private if your post is rejected.

Start here:

<http://hyksos-hoax.blogspot.com/2009/07/hvs-chariots-horses.html>click on Newer Post at the bottom of each page.

If you have any challenges or any thing to add, bring them on thanks Sam

This style of music/song is soft, and uses only one instrument called "Begen" I believe it has 12 strings also is much bigger than guitar. The lyrics of such songs are usually with double meaning, as is typical with scholastic Amharic poetry which carry coded proverbs with deep meanings. I will post some info on this subject some day when I have time to look into it. Peace.

And this symbolism of the "sun", symbolic of the human being going through its cycle of conception, life, maturity and death, is present in so many Egyptian scenes as it is too much to demonstrate. That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.

> >

> > You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got it from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

> >

> >

> > Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

> >

> > If you have the opportunity to meet some "Nubians" in Sudan or Ethiopia, they will tell you that their educational system for their "priesthoods" are based on the knowledge of this symbol. Check out Dr. Ben's works where he is talking about being a "360 degree Mason." (See Dr. Ben Ramesis II) That isn't something he made up.

> >

> > A full discussion of each of these symbols would encompass a large volume and it would demonstrate that it is totally impossible for the Dogon, Yoruba or Kongo-Bantu people to have gotten certain elements of these symbols unless they were in ancient Egypt. Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video: http://www.ted.com/talks/ ron_eglash_ on_ african_ fractals. html

> >

> > If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLE means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

The site is acting up tonight so I didn't listen to or read much.

But aren't the Irish noted for creating "tall tales"?

And should they have anything to do with "supplementing/assisting" the development of Jazz isn't it likely due to their Afrakan blood strain?

Remember the black Irishman?

The king folds her own laundry, chauffeurs herself around Washington in a 1992 Honda and answers her own phone. Her boss's phone, too.

Peggielene Bartels lives in Silver Spring and works as a secretary. When she steps off an airplane in Ghana on Thursday, arriving in the coastal town her family has controlled for half a century, she will be royalty -- with a driver, a chef and an eight-bedroom palace, albeit one in need of repairs she will help finance herself.

"I'm a big-time king, you know," said Bartels, seated at her desk at the Ghanaian embassy just off Van Ness Street NW, where she has worked for almost 30 years.

In the humdrum of ordinary life, people periodically yearn for something unexpected, some kind of gilded escape, delivered, perhaps, by an unanticipated inheritance or a winning lottery ticket.

In Bartels's case, that moment arrived 15 months ago. The phone in her condominium awoke her at 4 a.m.

"Hello, Nana," said the overseas caller -- a relative, as it turned out -- employing a title Ghanaians use to refer to people of stature, from kings and queens to grandparents.

"What you mean, 'Nana?' " answered Bartels, 55, who has no grandchildren -- or children, for that matter. Her husband lives overseas. She thought the call was a prank.

The 90-year-old king of Otum, a town of 7,000 residents an hour's drive from Ghana's capital, had just died, the caller said. The king, as it happened, was Bartels's uncle. The town elders had performed a ritual to choose his successor, praying and pouring schnapps on the ground and waiting for steam to rise as they announced the names of 25 relatives. The steam would signify which name the ancestors had blessed as the new king.

Bartels, the caller said, was Otum's new Nana, with power to resolve disputes, appoint elders and manage more than 1,000 acres of family-owned land.

"Oh, please don't play games with me," Bartels replied, reminding the caller that she was a woman, making her more fit for the title of queen. The caller replied that the kingship was the post that was open.

"Things are changing," she recalls him saying; women can now hold many more positions, even king. "You have to accept it."

Advertisement

Bartels endured three months of sleepless nights as she weighed whether to take the throne. She asked herself, "Why me?" The turning point occurred one morning as she drove to work through Rock Creek Park. A voice inside her pronounced: "You can't escape it. It's yours."

What You Can Do - Message from Van Jones

September 15, 2009

Dear Friends:

My family and I want to thank everyone for the outpouring of love and support that we have received over the past week or so. I resigned from the White House on September 6, and I have remained silent since then - in keeping with my promise not to be a distraction during a key moment in the Obama Presidency.

Over the past several days, however, many people have been asking how they can help and what they can do.

The main thing is this: please do everything you can to support both President Obama and the green jobs movement. Winning real change is ultimately the best response to these kinds of smear campaigns.

I ask everyone to:

1. Support President Obama's efforts to fix our nation's health care, energy and education systems. His victory last fall did not represent the "finish line" in the fight to renew America; his election was just the "starting line." This autumn, it is time to make history again - with victories on health care and clean energy.

2. Sign up to support groups that are working for green jobs.

As others seek to vilify or marginalize the movement for a clean energy economy, the leading groups deserve increased support. This is the year to ensure that the clean energy transformation creates good job opportunities for everyone in America.

3. Spread the green jobs gospel. The ideas and ideals of the green jobs movement are grounded in fundamental American values - innovation, entrepreneurship and equal opportunity. My true thoughts can be found in my book: The Green Collar Economy. Check it out from the library - or order a copy and share it with a friend. See for yourself why clean energy and green jobs are good for our country.

4. Stay connected and speak up for me via your favorite blogs (e.g., Huffington Post, Grist, Jack & Jill, etc.), on message boards and all of your favorite social networking platforms (Twitter, Facebook, etc.). Supporters have set up a couple of them, to help you stay engaged, including: I Stand With Van Jones and I Love Van Jones.

In due course, I will be offering my perspective on what has happened - including correcting the record about false charges. In the meantime, I must get my family affairs in order and sort through numerous offers and options.

I want to be clear that I have nothing but love and admiration for President Obama and the entire Administration. White House staffers are there to serve and support the President, not the other way around. At this critical moment in history, I could not in good conscience ask my colleagues to expend precious time and energy defending or explaining my past. The White House needs all its hands on deck, fighting for the future.

Of course, some supporters actually think I will be more effective on the "outside." Maybe so. But those ideas always remind me of that old canard about Winston Churchill. After he lost a hard-fought election, a friend told him: "Winston, this really is just a blessing in disguise." Churchill quipped: "Damned good disguise." I can certainly relate to that sentiment right now. :)

Nonetheless, we must keep moving forward. Let's continue our work to make an America as good as its promise. These are historic times. And we have a lot more history to make.

Sincerely,

Van Jones

I don't know the origins of the musical intro to this site but the music sounds exactly like ole Mississippi American Blues. I always thought that the Blues was an Afrakan American creation. It would be great to discover it is an Afrakan music idiom imported directly from Afraka!

When I get a chance to get to my computer I can send you his full documents. This is just one variation of the sign. I was first introduced to this symbol by Dr. Afalobi Epega, a fifth generation Ifa priests out of Ode Remo. This symbol is quite common in Ifa.

Here is a decent discussion on Aristotle's The Four Humors: [http://www.homeopat hy.com.pk/four-humors-basic-concept. php](http://www.homeopat hy.com.pk/four-humors-basic-concept.php). And this symbolism of the "sun", symbolic of the human being going through its cycle of conception, life, maturity and death, is present in so many Egyptian scenes as it is too much to demonstrate. That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.

> You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got it from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

>

>

> Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

>

> If you have the opportunity to meet some "Nubians" in Sudan or Ethiopia, they will tell you that their educational system for their "priesthoods" are based on the knowledge of this symbol. Check out Dr. Ben's works where he is talking about being a "360 degree Mason." (See Dr. Ben Ramesis II) That isn't something he made up.

>

> A full discussion of each of these symbols would encompass a large volume and it would demonstrate that it is totally impossible for the Dogon, Yoruba or Kongo-Bantu people to have gotten certain elements of these symbols unless they were in ancient Egypt. Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video: http://www.ted.com/talks/ron_eglash_on_african_fractals.html

> If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLES means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

Again, this is an example of when there are tough questions, you avoid them and move on to something else. The questions are still the same and as long as you keep "skating" around them, you will never reconcile this issue of cognitive dissonance when it comes to African history. Just as a reminder, here are a few of the questions again.

Thanks to you, Glenn Beck Fox are losing money

Dear Nathaniel,

We've got big news -- Glenn Beck's show is making less than half the money it was making when we started calling on companies to pull their advertisements from the show. This is huge and it's thanks to you -- more than 200,000 ColorOfChange members have spoken out, and 62 advertisers have listened.

Data from a media tracking firm shows how deeply we're hitting Fox's pockets; they are now sacrificing more than a half-million ad dollars a week to keep Beck on the air.

Of course, Beck and his supporters are fighting back with everything they've got. Today, we need your help to make sure the 62 companies who have pulled their ads from Beck's show stand strong, and to turn up the pressure on his remaining advertisers. Please join us in thanking the companies that have pulled their ads, and in calling on his remaining advertisers to stop supporting him:

<http://colorofchange.org/beck/hold/?id=2288-147537>

During the last week in July, Beck's show pulled in over $1 million from advertising. The first week in September, that number was down to less than $500,000, even as his ratings have gone up.¹

It's clear that our campaign is making a significant financial impact, despite Fox's insistence otherwise.

What's happening is a simple matter of supply and demand. Fox has a limited amount of time devoted to ads each day. If 62 companies refuse to run ads during Beck's show, the demand for that time is reduced, and the rates the network can charge for the show plummet. In Beck's case, almost no major companies are willing to advertise during either of his twice-a-day broadcasts, so Fox can't collect as much ad revenue as they could before. If we can keep the advertisers away, Fox will have to decide sometime soon whether it's worth losing money to keep Beck's poison on the air.

Beck's smear campaigns

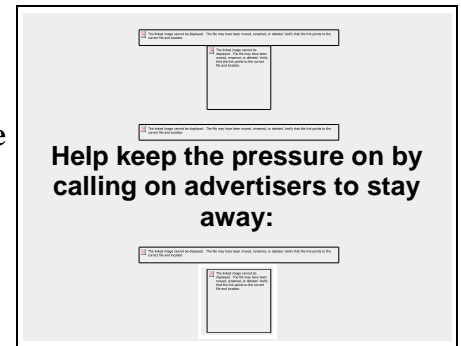

Beck claims to be a patriot who asks hard questions and gives his viewers the facts. In reality, he consistently uses lies, distortions, and exaggerations to stir up anger and fear, and to distract his viewers from working towards real solutions to the problems facing our country. He seems determined to create an atmosphere in which the White House can accomplish nothing, and he's doing it partly by launching vicious smear campaigns on Obama's character, policies and advisers.

Last week, Beck and his supporters took credit for both Van Jones' resignation² and for the demotion of Yosi Sergeant, who was "reassigned" at the National Endowment for the Arts following vicious attacks by Beck³. And Beck has made it clear he's got other targets.⁴

Our campaign is working. Respectable companies don't want to be associated with Beck or support his show with their dollars. It's resulting in a major loss of funding for his show, and at the same time, it's making clear that Beck's race-baiting and fear-mongering are far outside the mainstream.

The longer Beck stays isolated, the more of a problem he'll be for Fox, and the harder it will be for him to spread his lies and distortions. If we can keep the pressure on, Fox will have to make a choice: 1) drop Beck because it doesn't make business sense to keep him; or 2) communicate to the world that they're so intent on providing a platform for race-baiting and fear-mongering that they don't care if they lose money (a serious problem for a public company like News Corporation, the owner of Fox).

More than ever, it's time to keep the pressure on. You can help by joining us in thanking the advertisers that have stopped supporting Glenn Beck, and calling on those whose ads are still running on his show to follow suit:

I think the art on the "war chest or box", found in Tutankhamun's burial chambers expresses the sentiment of "HYKSOS" and their bondage quite well.....you kind find great pictures of it in Mr. Hawaas's book detailing the artifacts found.....I think the word Hyksos is akin to the word "jeuri" in Bantu.....cuz fools rush in, make a mess, and vacate eventually.....

In what year exactly did the invaders called the Hyksos invade Egypt?

According to which of the multiple accounts you want to start with, these were immigrants who came to Egypt around the 12th Dynasty, grew stronger and took over northern Egypt. Hyksos is the topic I decided to investigate. I began a blog and divided it up into single pages because I have/will include many photos.. SO to go through it page by page Start at the page below and click on newer post at the bottom of each page.

IF you find any photographic sources of hieroglyphics supposed to deal with the Hyksos, let me know. The ONLY possible way for any one to translate any hieroglyphic, they would have a photographic of that hieroglyphic to work from.

I have found lots of stories about hieroglyphics from those who have never seen them.

You are welcome to respond to the topic of Hyksos in this group or in private if your post is rejected.

It is simply how I choose to spell it.

I base the choice on the meaning of syllables (I am doing it from memory, so I may be off somewhat).

Afer=hot,warm

ra=Ra

ka=body

Thus "Afer+ra+ka", the hot/warm body of Ra, Afraka.

Just my take, my reason/reasoning.

I don't believe that Europeans just came up with this word willy-nilly. It is quite likely to have Afrakan origins though generally the words end up bastardized.

That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.
 >>
 >> You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got if from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

> >

> >

> > Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

> > A full discussion of each of these symbols would encompass a large volume and it would demonstrate that it is totally impossible for the Dogon, Yoruba or Kongo-Bantu people to have gotten certain elements of these symbols unless they were in ancient Egypt. Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video:

> >

> > If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLES means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

>> GORE: Firstly this does not CONFIRM that the Egyptian `h` is really a `sh` or `ch`. What the list claims, if we follow the methodology of the comparative method, is that Egyptian `h` is the recurrent correspondent of Amharic `ch` and `sh`. You cannot use Amharic to determine what the Egyptian sound would be.

>> Secondly as a comparative list for the purpose of uncovering genetic relationships this is a poor list. The vocabulary can hardly be described as basic. Basic vocabulary includes words like `foot`, `leg`, `eye`, `arm`, `go`, `stand`, `sun`, `tree` etc. It does not include terms like `government` and `take office`. Don't get me wrong cognates of this nature can be found amongst related languages but when these (words like `government`) are present there will always be an abundance of more basic vocabulary too and they take priority. Where are they here?

>>

>> Thirdly the meanings are related but not a single one of them are exact. They are not even particularly close. This increases the chance of being able to find `correspondences`. Comparing `peas and beans` to `vegetables` is not impressive. If you were comparing `peas` in one language to `beans` in another this would be closer. Where is the impressive demonstration that makes the case. Again you can find cognates at these sorts of semantic distances but preferably not in the initial demonstration.

>>

>> Fourthly why are there two correspondents for Egyptian `h` in Amharic. Is there a conditioning factor determining whether it is a `sh` or a `ch`? Why have you not presented in this? Explanations should always be given for double correspondences.

In memory of Master Emmanuel Aguer Ater, we will be converging at the Komarock Canal 3rd October 2009 at 7.00am to clean up the rest of the Canal. This was the resolution we reached during the Baraza that was held today at the same venue.

The Baraza was addressed by the area chief Mr. Hilary Chumo and his 2 assistants Mr. Othman of Komarock and Charles of Kayole. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. Ater Aguer, the father to the late Emmanuel Aguer Ater.

In the Baraza, security and environmental matters were of grave concern. And we are happy that issues of security and environment are of great concern to the administration.

Our only disappointment was the absence of the area councillor and our stone throwing champion MP Mr Waititu.

Among other rafted issues agreed on, Chief Chumo will lead a clean up campaign along the bridge on 3rd October 2009 at 7.00am.

We appeal to all people of goodwill to join us on this day as we clean up the rest of the Komarock Canal in memory of this gallant son of Africa.

We are inviting the Prime Minister Hon Raila Amolo Odinga, to lead this campaign on this day. He stood tall with us at our hour of need.

Peace and blessings,

DOs Baraza in Komarock Ph3A/3B at the Bridge

We are having the DOs baraza in Komarock today at 3pm at the Phase 3A/3B bridge. The meeting will be addressed by the area DO, the Provincial Administration team, Community leaders. The area councilor and MP will be in attendance.

We will be addressing 2 key issues; security and environmental conservation.

We have had a series of cases of security scare and it is important for all area residents, their leaders and the security team to put their minds together and address the rising cases. You will recall that only last Monday, our son, Emmanuel Aguer was brutally murdered and his body dumped at the back gate to his grand mothers house.

As area leaders, we must thank the Prime Minister the Hon Raila Odinga for his financial support to the family during these trying moments. We must also thank the police, the provincial administration and the area residents for coming together at this time and for their prompt response to our calls.

You will also note that some amongst us have been dumping all their waste along the bridge, and it is definitely our responsibility to maintain our environment clean.

It is with this in mind that the DO and his team have decided to call the residents together to help chat the way forward.

All are invited and more so, our brothers and sisters from the media.

Among his possessions was this beautifully decorated wooden war chest. When King Tutankhamun died he was buried in a very small tomb with only four chambers. After his death his tomb was only visited once by tomb robbers and then its location was forgotten until Howard Carter discovered it again in 1922.

///

Is this the chest you speak of ?

According to this particular listing :

18th Dynasty 1550-1295 BC Ahmose first king of the 18th dynasty and is reported to have driven out the Hyksos (those he drove out are NEVER identified as Hyksos, they are not identified as Kings)

After the death of Ahmose came

Ahmose

Amenhotep I
Thutmose I
Thutmose II
Hatshepsut
Thutmose III
Amenhotep II
Thutmose IV
Amenhotep III
Amenhotep IV
Neferneferuaten
Tutankhamen

By the time King Tut got born, the 'Hyksos' were long gone from Egypt.

If this is not just something you read.. if you can actually point out any hieroglyphics on the war chest that mention Hyksos, show where on the box the information is written so we can compare the hieroglyphic words in all references we read contain information about Hyksos.

My response involves a number of diagrams which could affect the readability and comprehension of what's being stated if they do not show up or are not accurately aligned in the email. So I have made my response into a pdf and it is posted at the below link. I also didn't want to attach it because some people aren't able to access the attached file.

Peace Mahari

I will be dealing with this word in the soon to be released work The Bakala of North America. I can assure you that that's not the origins of the word Africa. You would have to demonstrate it in Egyptian texts, or find it in combination even in a standard Dictionary: not each phoneme separate.

The prevailing scholarship states that Africa is named after the tribe called AFRI in Tunis. After Scipio the younger defeated Hannibal, the name of this tribe became the name of the territory of North Africa the Romans ruled. AFRI was Latinized to AFRICUS. But it is more likely they derived it from AVRIQHA or AFRIQHA. That is a variation of the name AOURIGHA which is a name of a people in Tunis. The Canaanites founded a settlement called Qeret Hhaddasshat in Tunis. There they met several groups called AURIGHA, and IFURCES or AFARIK of Corippus. The Aourigha were a land owning people whom the Cannanites rented land from.

When the Arabics arrived they called them IFRIQIYA or IFRIQIYAH. Ifriqiya was the area comprising the coastal regions of what are today western Libya, Tunisia and easter ALgeria. There is also a Christian Berber group in N. Africa that are named AFARIQA.

All of this to say that more than likely Africa has nothing to do with Egyptian combinations of AFER, RA and KA. We know Europeans are in the habit of naming vast areas of territory after a small group of people.

Subject: [Ta_Seti] Re: Problems With Amharic and Egyptian Comparison

It is simply how I choose to spell it.

I base the choice on the meaning of syllables (I am doing it from memory, so I may be off somewhat).

Afer=hot,warm

ra=Ra

ka=body

Thus "Afer+ra+ka" , the hot/warm body of Ra, Afraka.

Just my take, my reason/reasoning.

I don't believe that Europeans just came up with this word willy-nilly. It is quite likely to have Afrakan origins though generally the words end up bastardized.

And this symbolism of the "sun", symbolic of the human being going through its cycle of conception, life, maturity and death, is present in so many Egyptian scenes as it is too much to demonstrate. That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.
 > >
 > > You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got it from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.
 > >

>>

>> Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

>>

>> If you have the opportunity to meet some "Nubians" in Sudan or Ethiopia, they will tell you that their educational system for their "priesthoods" are based on the knowledge of this symbol. Check out Dr. Ben's works where he is talking about being a "360 degree Mason." (See Dr. Ben Ramesis II) That isn't something he made up.

>>

>> A full discussion of each of these symbols would encompass a large volume and it would demonstrate that it is totally impossible for the Dogon, Yoruba or Kongo-Bantu people to have gotten certain elements of these symbols unless they were in ancient Egypt. Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video: http://www.ted.com/talks/ron\_eglash\_on\_african\_fractals.html

>>

>> If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLES means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

>>

>> Asar: "Thank You Onyekachi

>> I ordered this book and it confirms EVERYTHING I have been stating in my debates with Gore"

>> nce you have not understood the basics of the comparative method (the method used to demonstrate genetic relationships between languages) or my refutations of your work I can only assume that your thinking this work "confirms EVERYTHING" is yet another misunderstanding.

>>

>> Asar: "One, it confirms that the Egyptian language is syllabic".

>>

>> GORE: Perhaps the work claims that the Egyptian language is syllabic (you do not make this clear) but it cannot CONFIRM such unless it has demonstrated this. Has this been defended against Egyptologists? I'm not even asking whether Egyptologists agree (because they may disagree and be wrong) I'm just asking whether the syllabic theory has been defended against their arguments.

>>

>> Asar: "Two, it confirms that the H is really an SH (CH) sound.

>> Observe the following from the book:

>>

>> AMARIGNA EGYPTIAN (per Budge)

>> shäu - then, pastime hau-t - time, period >> mäCH'äbät' - take >> possesion hbt - mission, raid

>> CH'anä - load, pack, carry hnn - to be bowed, loaded

>> CH'ärär - LIGHT hrw - day, today, daily >> shomä - take office hmi - government

>> shro - mixture of peas and beans hrw - vegetables

>> shäshä - flee, to evade haha - to go back, to retreat

>> CH'iru - falcon &nbs

>> p; hrw - pertaining to Horus (the hawk deity)

>>

>> GORE: Firstly this does not CONFIRM that the Egyptian `h` is really a `sh` or `ch`. What the list claims, if we follow the methodology of the comparative method, is that Egyptian `h` is the recurrent correspondent of Amharic `ch` and `sh`. You cannot use Amharic to determine what the Egyptian sound would be.

>>

>> Secondly as a comparative list for the purpose of uncovering genetic relationships this is a poor list. The vocabulary can hardly be described as basic. Basic vocabulary includes words like `foot`, `leg`, `eye`, `arm`, `go`, `stand`, `sun`, `tree` etc. It does not include terms like `government` and `take office`. Don't get me wrong cognates of this nature can be found amongst related languages but when these (words like `government`) are present there will always be an abundance of more basic vocabulary too and they take priority. Where are they here?

>> Thirdly the meanings are related but not a single one of them are exact. They are not even particularly close. This increases the chance of being able to find `correspondences`. Comparing `peas and beans` to `vegetables` is not impressive. If you were comparing `peas` in one language to `beans` in another this would be closer. Where is the impressive demonstration that makes the case. Again you can find cognates at these sorts of semantic distances but preferably not in the initial demonstration.

>>

>> Fourthly why are there two correspondents for Egyptian `h` in Amharic. Is there a conditioning factor determining whether it is a `sh` or a `ch`? Why have you not presented in this? Explanations should always be given for double correspondences.

>>

>> Fifth unless you have some basic idea of the grammar of Amharic you will fail to spot basic errors which the author will make. It is not the first time I have seen this kind of comparison so I know what to expect in terms of mistakes.

>>

>> Asar: (Remember Wim van Binsbergen's notion of proto-Nostratic *hr for falcon with Egyptian hrw (Horus). The modern name in Nostratic for falcon/hawk is hierax)"

>>

>> GORE: Nostratic relies on the same poor semantic comparisons and unexplained multiple correspondences. It is hardly a good example.

>>

>> Asar: "With this evidence plain as day, one can see how the "proto" Indo-European form *sóh<sub>2</sub>wl, *sawel or *sul came to be from CH'arar" .

>>

>> GORE: 1) It's certainly not plain and it's certainly not evidence, as I have shown above. 2) Borrowing tends to be of words that the borrowers do not have like technical terms. `Sun` is not a technical term but a basic one. 3) Furthermore what is your chronology of the Egyptian language and Proto-Indo-European? 4) Interesting how you are prepared to use reconstructions when they appear to back your claims. 5) Are you claiming that Amharic CH'arar is the original to be comparing this rather than Egyptian Hrw with Proto-Indo-European reconstructions? Have you checked what is the Ge'ez form which would be an older `uncle` language?

>>

>>

>> GORE: Again you need to explain the difference in the vowels. Vowel differences do occur but they come with explanations. You would also have to show that `s` in one language corresponds to `j` in another language and `z` in IsiZulu. Have you done this?

>>

>>

>> GORE: How exactly? The -os of Greek Heli-os is a grammatical ending and not part of the root. It therefore is not cognate with any supposed -ax in *Hierax which a) cannot be shown to be separate from Hierax, and b) the reconstruction *hierax is dubious because Nostrati

>> c is a dubious construct.

>>

>> Asar: "I can say that this is legit and it matches everything I've come to know by studying the other African languages and oral traditions concerning the script".

>>

>> GORE: I can say, based on what I've seen so far, that's it's not legit.

>>

>> Asar: "What's in this book also confirms a lot of Ferg Somo's renderings in the Ba-Ntu languages and I see parallels in the Yoruba".

>>

>> GORE: Ferg's work has the same faults as your own. 1) Trying to compare *-cana and English `sun` while totally ignoring the Proto-Indo-European reconstruction is poor methodology that even Onyekachi has detected in relation to using Tigrinya rather than Ge`ez. You do not even address this. 2) You do not even address the issue of Amharic and Tigrinya and the relationship they should have with Bantu if you are correct. If you can find cognates in any languages compared with Egyptian then it's probably because your methodology is not strict enough.

>>

>> Asar: "What this also confirms is Diodorus Siculus' statement concerning the oral traditions of the Egyptians. I will repeat here:

>>

>> Diodorus Siculus, The Library of History, Books II.3

>> 5 - IV.58, Translated by C.H. Oldfather, Harvard University Press, 2000, informs us that the founders of Pharaonic Egypt and the natives were different people. He goes on to state:

>>

>> "[The Ethiopians] They say also that the Egyptians are colonists sent out by the Ethiopians, Osiris having been the leader of the colony (...) And the larger part of the customs of the Egyptians are, they hold, Ethiopian, the colonists still preserving their ancient manners (...) Many other things are also told by them concerning their own antiquity and the colony which they sent out that became the Egyptians, but about this there is no special need of our writing anything."

>>

>>

>> GORE: Diodorus here is referring to Nubia and not the land of Amharic and Tigrinya. Poor methodology.

the facts that the " Hyksos " from Phr. Salitis to Phr. Akenaton and Osarseph of On( The Moses of the Bible and Koran ) were nothing but disgruntled elements of The Egiptian Pantheon who succeeded in the challenge to authority and founded their own State System in North Egypt and Canaan .!

I think the art on the "war chest or box", found in Tutankhamun' s burial chambers expresses the sentiment of "HYKSOS" and their bondage quite well..... .you kind find great pictures of it in Mr. Hawaas's book detailing the artifacts found..... .....I think the word Hyksos is akin to the word "jeuri" in Bantu..... ....cuz fools rush in, make a mess, and vacate eventually.. .....

IF you find any photographic sources of hieroglyphics supposed to deal with the Hyksos, let me know. The ONLY possible way for any one to translate any hieroglyphic, they would have a photographic of that hieroglyphic to work from.

I have found lots of stories about hieroglyphics from those who have never seen them.

Let me make clear that the illustration (a copy of a probably 19th Dynasty relief, judging by its style) is placed there ONLY to depict a chariot.

///

That illustration is used by an array of different web authors

They place that image in the context of their Hyksos topic. Their topic is NOT chariots, but Hyksos.

<http://images.google.com/images?hl=en&source=hp&q=hyksos&gbv=2&aq=f&oq=&aqi=>

All thumb nails to DIFFERENT web pages about Hyksos

Their topics in which they inject this image is about Hyksos ... read the text the web authors include

<http://www.scinet.cc/articles/egypt/historyofegypt.html>

The Hyksos took control of Egypt in 1800 BC, claiming the throne for themselves. Dynasties 13 through 17 ruled simultaneously during this period, as the Egyptians struggled to regain power over the Hyksos. In the meantime, the Egyptians secured horses of their own, and watched and waited for the right opportunity.

<http://www.all-about-egypt.com/18th-dynasty.html>

The Hyksos were an emigrant people who settled in northern Egypt and gradually gained political power, so that by 1600 B. C., Lower Egypt was ruled by them. Their first king, Salitis, established his kingdom in Memphis, but then moved the capital to the city of Avaris. Hyksos is the hellenized term for the Egyptian name "heqa khasewet", which means Alien Rulers. They are credited for introducing the horse and chariot to Egypt. It took the Egyptians nearly a century to expel them to what is now Israel's border with Syria. Avaris was totally destroyed by Ahmose

Their topic has nothing to do with chariots, but Hyksos.

I would guess most of these web authors do not publish this stuff with the intent to deceive, but they read it, believed it and parroted it in their own web sites.

That is the reason I promote the concept of any one claiming any thing to be true, to investigate the source.

This particular 'illustration' kind of looks like a revised image from "the Tut war chest"

Take the 'illustration' used in the context with "Ahmose driving out the Hyksos", flip it horizontally and do a little art work and you have a similar image to that on the "Tut war chest"

Regardless where the 'illustration' comes from when the public sees an image of a guy in a chariot in a battle, with the caption "Ahmose driving out the Hyksos", they will be deceived into believing this is actually an image on a tomb wall of "Ahmose driving out the Hyksos"

If the hieroglyphic word Hyksos is found on any tomb or stela of Ahmose .. OR .. If there are any images of Hyksos on any wall, stela of Ahmose, let me know.

It is simply how I choose to spell it.
I base the choice on the meaning of syllables (I am doing it from memory, so I may be off somewhat).
Afer=hot,warm
ra=Ra
ka=body
Thus "Afer+ra+ka" , the hot/warm body of Ra, Afraka.
Just my take, my reason/reasoning.
I don't believe that Europeans just came up with this word willy-nilly. It is quite likely to have Afrakan origins though generally the words end up bastardized.

When I get a chance to get to my computer I can send you his full documents. This is just one variation of the sign. I was first introduced to this symbol by Dr. Afalobi Epega, a fifth generation Ifa priests out of Ode Remo. This symbol is quite common in Ifa.

And this symbolism of the "sun", symbolic of the human being going through its cycle of conception, life, maturity and death, is present in so many Egyptian scenes as it is too much to demonstrate. That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.

>>

>> You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got if from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

>>

>> This stage is called YALA. In the Kongo diagram, on the right side of the image (V2) that stage of development is called KALA and KALA means " burning charcoal" or "black." It is the stage of FIRE, and the bottom is water as well. K's often turn into Y's. YALA and KALA are the same principle and the same word. It is the same in ancient Egypt as the beginning cycle is

KPHERA, which is another form of RA or "light" or the "sun."

> > Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video: http://www.ted.com/talks/ron\_eglash\_on\_african\_fractals.html

> > If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLE means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

What the list claims, if we follow the methodology of the comparative method, is that Egyptian `h` is the recurrent correspondent of Amharic `ch` and `sh`. You cannot use Amharic to determine what the Egyptian sound would be.

> > Secondly as a comparative list for the purpose of uncovering genetic relationships this is a poor list. The vocabulary can hardly be described as basic. Basic vocabulary includes words like `foot`, `leg`, `eye`, `arm`, `go`, `stand`, `sun`, `tree` etc. It does not include terms like `government` and `take office`. Don't get me wrong cognates of this nature can be found amongst related languages but when these (words like `government`) are present there will always be an abundance of more basic vocabulary too and they take priority. Where are they here?

> > Thirdly the meanings are related but not a single one of them are exact. They are not even particularly close. This increases the chance of being able to find `correspondences`. Comparing `peas and beans` to `vegetables` is not impressive. If you were comparing `peas` in one language to `beans` in another this would be closer. Where is the impressive demonstration that makes the case. Again you can find cognates at these sorts of semantic distances but preferably not in the initial demonstration.

You do not even address this. 2) You do not even address the issue of Amharic and Tigrinya and the relationship they should have with Bantu if you are correct. If you can find cognates in any languages compared with Egyptian then it's probably because your methodology is not strict enough.

If 62 companies refuse to run ads during Beck's show, the demand for that time is reduced, and the rates the network can charge for the show plummet. In Beck's case, almost no major companies are willing to advertise during either of his twice-a-day broadcasts, so Fox can't collect as much ad revenue as they could before. If we can keep the advertisers away, Fox will have to decide sometime soon whether it's worth losing money to keep Beck's poison on the air.

This guy is awesome and bold If I might say! I love this, are any of these youtube videos on dvd? Africa is owed so much recognition.....so much history was either stolen and made believed someone else invented or said it or simply buried so deeply in the hopes it may never be discovered. Shameful!

Thank you sooo much!

It is simply how I choose to spell it.
I base the choice on the meaning of syllables (I am doing it from memory, so I may be off somewhat).
Afer=hot,warm
ra=Ra
ka=body
Thus "Afer+ra+ka" , the hot/warm body of Ra, Afraka.
Just my take, my reason/reasoning.
I don't believe that Europeans just came up with this word willy-nilly. It is quite likely to have Afrakan origins though generally the words end up bastardized.

Here is a decent discussion on Aristotle's The Four Humors: http://www.homeopathy.com.pk/ four-humors- basic-concept. php. And this symbolism of the "sun", symbolic of the human being going through its cycle of conception, life, maturity and death, is present in so many Egyptian scenes as it is too much to demonstrate. That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.

>>

>> You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got it from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

>>

>>

>> Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

> >

Check out Dr. Ben's works where he is talking about being a "360 degree Mason." (See Dr. Ben Ramesis II) That isn't something he made up.

> >

> > A full discussion of each of these symbols would encompass a large volume and it would demonstrate that it is totally impossible for the Dogon, Yoruba or Kongo-Bantu people to have gotten certain elements of these symbols unless they were in ancient Egypt. Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video: http://www.ted.com/talks/ron\_eglash\_on\_african\_fractals.html

> >

> > If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLES means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

They seem to be interpretations/ adaptations of Dogon (pale fox?), Yoruba (Ifa) & other cosmological descriptions - but you've given no references - I'm interested to know, who are the authors of these particular diagrams? - I'm a student of Ifa, and have never seen the path of Odu diagram.

Again, this is an example of when there are tough questions, you avoid them and move on to something else. The questions are still the same and as long as you keep "skating" around them, you will never reconcile this issue of cognitive dissonance when it comes to African history. Just as a reminder, here are a few of the questions again.

Given the fact that the Egyptian and Greek records indicate that there were people already living among the upper Nile what we call Egypt today, before the conquest of the south (Ta-Seti, "Nubia", Ethiopia, whatever you want to call it), how do you hold that Egyptian is monolingual? What the list claims, if we follow the methodology of the comparative method, is that Egyptian `h` is the recurrent correspondent of Amharic `ch` and `sh`. You cannot use Amharic to determine what the Egyptian sound would be.

> > Secondly as a comparative list for the purpose of uncovering genetic relationships this is a poor list. The vocabulary can hardly be described as basic. Basic vocabulary includes words like `foot`, `leg`, `eye`, `arm`, `go`, `stand`, `sun`, `tree` etc. It does not include terms like `government` and `take office`. Don't get me wrong cognates of this nature can be found amongst related languages but when these (words like `government`) are present there will always be an abundance of more basic vocabulary too and they take priority. Where are they here?

> > Thirdly the meanings are related but not a single one of them are exact. They are not even particularly close. This increases the chance of being able to find `correspondences`. Comparing `peas and beans` to `vegetables` is not impressive. If you were comparing `peas` in one language to `beans` in another this would be closer. Where is the impressive demonstration that makes the case. Again you can find cognates at these sorts of semantic distances but preferably not in the initial demonstration.

You do not even address this. 2) You do not even address the issue of Amharic and Tigrinya and the relationship they should have with Bantu if you are correct. If you can find cognates in any languages compared with Egyptian then it's probably because your methodology is not strict enough.

The king folds her own laundry, chauffeurs herself around Washington in a 1992 Honda and answers her own phone. Her boss's phone, too.

Peggielene Bartels lives in Silver Spring and works as a secretary. When she steps off an airplane in Ghana on Thursday, arriving in the coastal town her family has controlled for half a century, she will be royalty -- with a driver, a chef and an eight-bedroom palace, albeit one in need of repairs she will help finance herself.

"I'm a big-time king, you know," said Bartels, seated at her desk at the Ghanaian embassy just off Van Ness Street NW, where she has worked for almost 30 years. In the humdrum of ordinary life, people periodically yearn for something unexpected, some kind of gilded escape, delivered, perhaps, by an unanticipated inheritance or a winning lottery ticket.

In Bartels's case, that moment arrived 15 months ago. The phone in her condominium awoke her at 4 a.m.

"Hello, Nana," said the overseas caller -- a relative, as it turned out -- employing a title Ghanaians use to refer to people of stature, from kings and queens to grandparents.

"What you mean, 'Nana?' " answered Bartels, 55, who has no grandchildren -- or children, for that matter. Her husband lives overseas. She thought the call was a prank.

The 90-year-old king of Otuam, a town of 7,000 residents an hour's drive from Ghana's capital, had just died, the caller said. The king, as it happened, was Bartels's uncle. The town elders had performed a ritual to choose his successor, praying and pouring schnapps on the ground and waiting for steam to rise as they announced the names of 25 relatives. The steam would signify which name the ancestors had blessed as the new king.

Bartels, the caller said, was Otuam's new Nana, with power to resolve disputes, appoint elders and manage more than 1,000 acres of family-owned land.

"Oh, please don't play games with me," Bartels replied, reminding the caller that she was a woman, making her more fit for the title of queen. The caller replied that the kingship was the post that was open.

"Things are changing," she recalls him saying; women can now hold many more positions, even king. "You have to accept it."

Bartels endured three months of sleepless nights as she weighed whether to take the throne. She asked herself, "Why me?" The turning point occurred one morning as she drove to work through Rock Creek Park. A voice inside her pronounced: "You can't escape it. It's yours."

What You Can Do - Message from Van Jones

September 15, 2009

Dear Friends:

My family and I want to thank everyone for the outpouring of love and support that we have received over the past week or so. I resigned from the White House on September 6, and I have remained silent since then - in keeping with my promise not to be a distraction during a key moment in the Obama Presidency.

Over the past several days, however, many people have been asking how they can help and what they can do.

The main thing is this: please do everything you can to support both President Obama and the green jobs movement. Winning real change is ultimately the best response to these kinds of smear campaigns.

I ask everyone to:

1. Support President Obama's efforts to fix our nation's health care, energy and education systems.

His victory last fall did not represent the "finish line" in the fight to renew America; his election was just the "starting line." This autumn, it is time to make history again - with victories on health care and clean energy.

2. Sign up to support groups that are working for green jobs.

As others seek to vilify or marginalize the movement for a clean energy economy, the leading groups deserve increased support. This is the year to ensure that the clean energy transformation creates good job opportunities for everyone in America.

3. Spread the green jobs gospel. The ideas and ideals of the green jobs movement are grounded in fundamental American values - innovation, entrepreneurship and equal opportunity. My true thoughts can be found in my book: The Green Collar Economy. Check it out from the library - or order a copy and share it with a friend. See for yourself why clean energy and green jobs are good for our country.

4. Stay connected and speak up for me via your favorite blogs (e.g., Huffington Post, Grist, Jack & Jill, etc.), on message boards and all of your favorite social networking platforms (Twitter, Facebook, etc.). Supporters have set up a couple of them, to help you stay engaged, including: I Stand With Van Jones and I Love Van Jones.

In due course, I will be offering my perspective on what has happened - including correcting the record about false charges. In the meantime, I must get my family affairs in order and sort through numerous offers and options.

I want to be clear that I have nothing but love and admiration for President Obama and the entire Administration. White House staffers are there to serve and support the President, not the other way around. At this critical moment in history, I could not in good conscience ask my colleagues to expend precious time and energy defending or explaining my past. The White House needs all its hands on deck, fighting for the future.

Of course, some supporters actually think I will be more effective on the "outside." Maybe so. But those ideas always remind me of that old canard about Winston Churchill. After he lost a hard-fought election, a friend told him: "Winston, this really is just a blessing in disguise." Churchill quipped: "Damned good disguise." I can certainly relate to that sentiment right now. :)

Nonetheless, we must keep moving forward. Let's continue our work to make an America as good as its promise. These are historic times. And we have a lot more history to make.

Sincerely,

Van Jones

| 29908|2009-09-18 09:43:46|matt mercer|Re: Tut-war-chest-tied-to-Hyksos?|

I was refering to the "forms" of artwork on the chest during a reign after many years of civil war in the dynasty that Akhenaten inheirited. Especially in the scene that depicts the various foreign captors in bondage. The language of this kingdom is not just heiroglyphic, and I appreciate your earnest effort to inspire more intellectual and scholarly culpability in translation, but remember the general populace of these eras were most likely stuck in an elementary school level of "formal" education, so I think it is wise to see the artwork of these periods as an extension of the language and a counterpart to a broader spectrum of interpretation that expresses a history of leaders and friends that must preserve the works that endure throughout the chaos of war. If you are looking for concrete proof, perhaps the classical artwork and literature of the "Egyptians" can help you sort that out.....

Thanks
MATT

Isn't this dangerous. Americans do have the right to "freedom of speech." I'm not a fan of Glenn Beck. I became aware of him listening to the radio. At first I was shocked and appalled, but I kept listening because I knew that he represents a certain mindset out there that I need to be aware of. I don't think we should put a "muzzle" upon anyone's right to say whatever, even the haters especially b/c I don't want them to then turn around and try to muzzle me b/c I exercised my right of freedom of speech and cause me to lose my job, etc b/c of something I wrote on the Internet. If one wants to not support the advertisers that's YOUR right, But Watch, listen, and be mindful, be very mindful.

This sorta of thing reminds me of that mindset that was saying there should be an ordinance/law against the "N" word. I question the young men who were talking to me about it, and my question was "who would they arrest?" "Who use the N word more than you? Ni...., they rap about it, and its peppered thru out their conversations. You don't want to 'shut up' your, for lack of a better word, enemy, especially when they're irrational. An irrational person will hurt you, and whose more irrational than a racist. You want to watch, listen and study him, b/c he studies you. And make no mistake the Democrats aren't angels. Democrats vs Republicans? Good cop, bad cop. They're both in agreement, they're just arguing over the methodology.

He's insane, obsessed, greedy and an idiot. All the things that typify the Republicans. These are the character traits that they need. Unless you are wealthy, own a huge business and are wealthy who would support Republican political and economic positions? Only greedy, obsessed, insane idiots.

This is huge and it's thanks to you -- more than 200,000 ColorOfChange members have spoken out, and 62 advertisers have listened.

> Data from a media tracking firm shows how deeply we're hitting Fox's pockets; they are now sacrificing more than a half-million ad dollars a week to keep Beck on the air.

> Of course, Beck and his supporters are fighting back with everything they've got. Today, we need your help to make sure the 62 companies who have pulled their ads from Beck's show stand strong, and to turn up the pressure on his remaining advertisers. Please join us in thanking the companies that have pulled their ads, and in calling on his remaining advertisers to stop supporting him:

> It's clear that our campaign is making a significant financial impact, despite Fox's insistence otherwise.

> What's happening is a simple matter of supply and demand. Fox has a limited amount of time devoted to ads each day. If 62 companies refuse to run ads during Beck's show, the demand for that time is reduced, and the rates the network can charge for the show plummet. In Beck's case, almost no major companies are willing to advertise during either of his twice-a-day broadcasts, so Fox can't collect as much ad revenue as they could before. If we can keep the advertisers away, Fox will have to decide sometime soon whether it's worth losing money to keep Beck's poison on the air.

> Beck's smear campaigns

> Beck claims to be a patriot who asks hard questions and gives his viewers the facts. In reality, he consistently uses lies, distortions, and exaggerations to stir up anger and fear, and to distract his viewers from working towards real solutions to the problems facing our country. He seems determined to create an atmosphere in which the White House can accomplish nothing, and he's doing it partly by launching vicious smear campaigns on Obama's character, policies and advisers.

> Last week, Beck and his supporters took credit for both Van Jones' resignation<sup>2</sup> and for the demotion of Yosi Sargent, who was "reassigned" at the National Endowment for the Arts following vicious attacks by Beck <sup>3</sup>. And Beck has made it clear he's got other targets.<sup>4</sup>

> Our campaign is working. Respectable companies don't want to be associated with Beck or support his show with their dollars. It's resulting in a major loss of funding for his show, and at the same time, it's making clear that Beck's race-baiting and fear-mongering are far outside the mainstream.

> The longer Beck stays isolated, the more of a problem he'll be for Fox, and the harder it will be for him to spread his lies and distortions. If we can keep the pressure on, Fox will have to make a choice: 1) drop Beck because it doesn't make business sense to keep him; or 2) communicate to the world that they're so intent on providing a platform for race-baiting and fear-mongering that they don't care if they lose money (a serious problem for a public company like News Corporation, the owner of Fox).

"Oketch Odhiambo"

Date: Friday, September 18, 2009, 9:17 AM

A memorial Service led by Bishop Ezekiel was conducted in memory of the late Emmanuel Aguer Ater in Komarock Phase 2 this afternoon.

The service was attended by HE Majok Guandong, the Ambassador of Sudan to Kenya, HE Andragu Duku, Head of Mission, Government of Southern Sudan, Mr. Jervasio O Okot, Information and Publication Officer, Government of Southern Sudan Nairobi Liaison Office, Odhiambo T Oketch representing the People of Kenya, and more so, the Right Hon Prime Minister Raila A Odinga, who has stood firmly with us through this trying moment, and many brothers and sisters from the Southern Sudan living in Kenya.

I was accompanied by the officials of the Komarock Youth Secretariat.

In my speech on behalf of the People of Kenya, and on behalf of the Prime Minister of the Republic of Kenya, and on behalf of the Provincial Administration Embakasi District, and on behalf of all the absent local leadership, I conveyed our heartfelt messages of condolence to Mrs Ater Aguer Ater, HE the Ambassador, HE the Head of Mission and to the people of Southern Sudan and Sudan in general.

I assured the family that the Government of Kenya is taking this matter very seriously and efforts are being done to track down the killers. We are living in hard times where criminals are living with us, walking with us, and it must become our responsibility as citizens to help reduce crime.

I noted that crime is all over the world, but we must not put efforts in place because insecurity is an issue all over. We must remain vigilant at all times. I assured the family of Ater that all Kenyans share in his loss because a child is never born to the parents alone. A child is born to the entire community and as such, his loss is our loss.

In memory of Emmanuel, I invited the Ambassador and the Head of Mission to join us in October 2009 to help clean Komarock Canal, an invitation which they accepted. I also made a proposal for the envisaged Arboretum at the Canal to be named Emmanuel Memorial Park in memory of this gallant son of Africa.

This will be officially communicated to the Prime Minister and the Mayor of Nairobi.

Mr Duku thanked the Prime Minister for having called him immediately the report was made. He said more so, his emotional and material support to the family. He said this was a sign of true brotherhood and as such, the loss of Aguer must not be viewed as conflict between our two countries. This is a criminal act that must be viewed as such.

He passed the message of condolences from the Council of Ministers in Southern Sudan to the family. The council was chaired by HE President Salva Kir. They all shared in the loss of Emmanuel.

He also said that a Primary School is going to be built in Twic County in memory of Emmanuel and it will be named after him.

Mr. Guandong praised the long standing relations between Kenya and Sudan and thank the Government of Kenya for having hosted the people of Southern Sudan for the last 20 years. He passed his messages of condolence to the family and thanked Kenyans for their comfort all along.

Lets all stand up and be strong in Memory of this son of the soil.

Peace and goodwill to all mankind.

Good information, Asar.

It will be interesting to see what their names mean.

Til then, the name remains undetermined.

After Scipio the younger defeated Hannibal, the name of this tribe became the name of the territory of North Africa the Romans ruled. AFRI was Latinized to AFRICUS. But it is more likely they derived it from AVRIQHA or AFRIQHA. That is a variation of the name AOURIGHA which is a name of a people in Tunis. The Canaanites founded a settlement called Qeret Hhaddasshat in Tunis. There they met several groups called AURIGHA, and IFURCES or AFARIK of Corippus. The Aourigha were a land owning people whom the Cannanites rented land from.

It seems the full documents with the Odus is not coming up. When I get a chance to get to my computer I can send you his full documents. This is just one variation of the sign. I was first introduced to this symbol by Dr. Afalobi Epega, a fifth generation Ifa priests out of Ode Remo. This symbol is quite common in Ifa.

And this symbolism of the "sun", symbolic of the human being going through its cycle of conception, life, maturity and death, is present in so many Egyptian scenes as it is too much to demonstrate. That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.
> > >
> > > You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got if from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

> > >

> > > This stage is called YALA. In the Kongo diagram, on the right side of the image (V2) that stage of development is called KALA and KALA means "burning charcoal" or "black." It is the stage of FIRE, and the bottom is water as well. K's often turn into Y's. YALA and KALA are the same principle and the same word. It is the same in ancient Egypt as the beginning cycle is KPHERA, which is another form of RA or "light" or the "sun."

> > >

> > > Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

> > >

> > > If you have the opportunity to meet some "Nubians" in Sudan or Ethiopia, they will tell you that their educational system for their "priesthoods" are based on the knowledge of this symbol. Check out Dr. Ben's works where he is talking about being a "360 degree Mason." (See Dr. Ben Ramesis II) That isn't something he made up.

> > >

> > > A full discussion of each of these symbols would encompass a large volume and it would demonstrate that it is totally impossible for the Dogon, Yoruba or Kongo-Bantu people to have gotten certain elements of these symbols unless they were in ancient Egypt. Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video: http://www.ted.com/talks/ron\_eglash\_on\_african\_fractals.html

> > >

> > > If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLES means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

>>> Asar: "I can say that this is legit and it matches everything I've come to know by studying the other African languages and oral traditions concerning the script".

>>>

>>> GORE: I can say, based on what I've seen so far, that's it's not legit.

>>>

>>> Asar: "What's in this book also confirms a lot of Ferg Somo's renderings in the Ba-Ntu languages and I see parallels in the Yoruba".

>>> GORE: Ferg's work has the same faults as your own. 1)Trying to compare *-cana and English `sun` while totally ignoring the Proto-Indo-European reconstruction is poor methodology that even Onyekachi has detected in relation to using Tigrinya rather than Ge'ez. You do not even address this. 2) You do not even address the issue of Amharic and Tigrinya and the relationship they should have with Bantu if you are correct. If you can find cognates in any languages compared with Egyptian then it's probably because your methodology is not strict enough.

>>>

>>> Asar: "What this also confirms is Diodorus Siculus' statement concerning the oral traditions of the Egyptians. I will repeat here:

>>>

>>> Diodorus Siculus, The Library of History, Books II.3

>>> 5 - IV.58, Translated by C.H. Oldfather, Harvard University Press, 2000, informs us that the founders of Pharoanic Egypt and the natives were different people. He goes on to state:

>>>

>>> "[The Ethiopians] They say also that the Egyptians are colonists sent out by the Ethiopians, Osiris having been the leader of the colony (...) And the larger part of the customs of the Egyptians are, they hold, Ethiopian, the colonists still preserving their ancient manners (...) Many other things are also told by them concerning their own antiquity and the colony which they sent out that became the Egyptians, but about this there is no special need of our writing anything."

>>>

>>>

>>> GORE: Diodorus here is referring to Nubia and not the land of Amharic and Tigrinya. Poor methodology.

>>> Asar: "The same way this script is used in Ethiopia for a good number of Ethiopian languages, is the same way the M-du Njora (matyṛt anyṛT'yṛyṛ) was used to write the many languages of Egypt (Ge-bTS)"

>>>

>>> GORE: Where have you isolated the different languages that were used to write the Ethiopian script and Egyptian script?

>>>

>>> Asar: "Looking at the word Gebts it makes more sense when we look at Aigyptos in the Greek instead of the usual excuse of He.t Ka Ptah. And It's funny how even in Egyptian the word QBT (Gebts) is translated as a word for a nome in Upper Egypt and the word QMI refers to Upper Egypt in the dictionaries, but among the Ethiopians and the Kenyans respectfully, these terms refer to all of Egypt (Gebts, Ik >>> ami respectfully) ".

>>>

>>> GORE: That bit is pure hocus-pocus. Which Kenyans today? You give me references from 1990 or thereabouts for Rwandan and Kenyan "priests" who use mystical terms that are presumably not in any dictionaries from the 1920's before the Afrocentric fashion became widely known and expect me to take you seriously. Poor, shambolic scholarship.

The Kennedy seat: movement

It looks like the Massachusetts state legislature is closer to changing the rules to fill Ted Kennedy's seat on an interim basis. From the Globe:

In a key development, House Speaker Robert A. DeLeo, who has been publicly noncommittal, made a decision to back the proposal and was privately calling members yesterday to make the case. House vote-counters said support among lawmakers numbers in the mid-80s - more than enough in the 160-member body.

Gov. Patrick [Mass. first Afro-american elected Governor] has signaled privately that he'd like to sign the bill by Friday and make an appointment within days, possibly having an interim senator in place by next week.

But in the other chamber, Senate President Therese Murray has remained far more reserved in her support, talking with senators but not advocating for the change, according to Senate sources.

Temporary senator? Mike Dukakis. He won't try to stay in the seat, and he doesn't care what Republicans think of him.

New York - US President Barack Obama will host a special meeting (Sept. 22) for African heads of state when they attend the UN General Assembly in New York next week, a US official said Monday. Obama will host a luncheon for presidents and prime ministers of sub-Saharan African nations and invitations have been sent out, said US Ambassador to the UN Susan

"The luncheon will focus on building a 21st century partnership to increase social and economic development."

Rice said Obama will also meet with countries that have contributed the largest number of police and troops to UN peacekeeping operations around the world.

Obama, who will make his first visit to the UN as US president, will take part on September 22 in a climate change summit and address the 64th UN General Assembly session the same day.

Next, a clarification: there will be at least six different Swine Flu vaccines, not 6 shots for each person. Very disturbing news from Leicester, England and from the US dosage trials this week made it clear that they were already testing a squalene adjuvanted vaccine by Novartis. In Leicester the tests were on 100 healthy people whose antibody production was so enormous that they were only going to need one shot of the vaccine. The government was, of course, trumpeting this as a victory when, in reality, such a tremendous immune response to the immune system irritant (which is what an adjuvant is) bodes very, very ill for the people whose bodies have responded with such vigor.

There is no way to shut off the immune system activation once the squalene has been injected, which is why it is so very, very dangerous. It attacks and attacks and attacks and the result, which used to be called "Gulf War Syndrome" will shortly be known as "Swine Flu Vaccine Syndrome".

Third, another clarification: yes, there is a million, not a thousand or a hundred thousand, a MILLION times more squalene in this vaccine than in the Vaccine A of Gulf War Syndrome fame. Our assertion about the amount of squalene was questioned by some and reported on Jeff Rense's site as completely accurate; see: <http://www.rense.com/general87/mill.htm>

That might make people more anxious to demand the right to self shield rather than take the vaccine or face incarceration. You know where the link is, but here it is again for those of you who want it now:

We are at just under 2 million emails in this campaign. We estimate we need a couple of times that to get the legislation we want passed. Now would be a good time to get busy making that happen. Remember, it is legitimate to send 1 email for each member of your household or family, then please spread the word.

State governments are beginning to mandate this uninsurable, un-safety-tested and unproven vaccine for first responders, led by New York State where we understand that many nurses and teachers are facing loss of jobs if they don't take the jab.

Ordinary civilians are not safe either, with Massachusetts about to pass a law criminalizing vaccine resistance.

The Department of Defense has declared that the Swine Flu Vaccine will be mandatory for all people in uniform. That is a violation of the 2005 Amended Permanent Injunction issued by Judge Sullivan of the DC Federal District Court which required that the squalene containing vaccine only be used if the use were voluntary.

IF you will support us, we will go into Federal Appeal Court that oversees both the DC District Court and the FDA. Since the government never appealed Judge Sullivan's findings that squalene is dangerous and is an unapproved drug, the government is bound by those findings

Furthermore, it would be very, very helpful if we had information on the following things, which you can send directly to me at releyes@gmail.com with VACCINE in the subject line:

[Donation
Now](#)

Index

1. Are you a currently-serving uniformed service person with a diagnosed medical reason to not take the vaccine? Have you suffered previous vaccine injury which was diagnosed? Do you have Gulf War Syndrome? Are you immuno-compromised? Do you have heavy metal poisoning? Do you have some other reason that has already been diagnosed that would provide a contraindication to taking a vaccine? to taking THIS vaccine? Did you develop Guillan Barre Syndrome from a vaccine shot? Meningitis? Seizure Disorder? Fainting?

We are looking for something that will stand up in Court (medical records needed) so that we can make the argument that your very life and health are being threatened by this vaccine.

Yes, we know that the life and health of every single person faced with the jab is being threatened, but we need someone in imminent danger of being irreversibly harmed by this policy. We need your name, email, phone number, age, rank and a concise history of the problem. Please, please, do not write an email on this subject if you suspect you will be harmed but do not have a formally diagnosed reason that you believe means that you will be harmed by the shot. We are looking for very specific information that we can use to stop this atrocity in court and evidence rules are very different from our common understanding of how dangerous this monstrous vaccine program is.

Being pregnant might work, especially if you are having complications.

Also, if you are an employee of a municipality or company which is demanding that you get the shot as a condition of continued employment, please write me an email with MANDATORY in the subject line to the same email, releyes@gmail.com. Tell me your name, phone number, position and the name of the company. If you have a written document from them stating that you must get vaccinated or you will lose your job, that is very helpful. Please attach it to the email.

You see, the Judge said squalene-laced Vaccine A could only be used as a voluntary vaccination, even if the President issues an "Emergency Use Authorization." We need this information as quickly as you can get it to us.

What is support?

First and foremost, support means helping to get us the information, getting the word out to your peers, friends, etc., and asking others to send us the information we are asking for above so that we can construct our legal actions accordingly.

Second, this is expensive. The Trustees do everything that we do without a penny of pay. We need money to pay other lawyers, file papers, get the legal research done that we need, etc. Small donations or large ones, they all add up. Here is the donation link to set up a recurring donation to support this legal action and the very likely appeal that we will need to go into.

This Federal Court of Appeals is often called "the Little Supreme Court" because it hears appeals from the main federal agencies and this Court frequently finds against the FDA. We can succeed if we all pull together and support this effort. We are prepared to seek a "stay" (an injunction) against FDA approval of the "swine flu vaccine" since the FDA is ignoring our emergency Citizens Petition, formally filed with them on August 31, 2009 as Docket No. FDA-2009-P-0418.

Please make two recurring donations: the one ending in the number "6" will be earmarked for the legal fund. The other one, ending in any other number, will be used to keep the Natural Solutions Foundation working for you just like this.

We call this funding campaign, "Going for the Sixes..."

The strategy, then, in a nutshell, is to make it clear that mandating a squalene vaccine is illegal in this country.

Making it available under pressure is coercion and that is illegal, too. We won't stand for it and we predict the courts will not stand for it either, if we have the resources to do it!

Help us with donations and information and we can stop this abomination!

Friday, 18 Sep, 2009

[illegible]

Marshall could never forcefully claim the Dravidian affiliation of the Indus Valley civilisation. For Wheeler, 37 skeletons vindicated his mentor. 'It may be no conjecture... Aryans slaughtered aborigine men, women and children,' he said in a 1947 article in the Bulletin of Archaeological Survey. But Hindu nationalists were not at ease with the Aryan Invasion theory. ?Flickr photo

The name's Kasab

KARACHI: The undeciphered script of the Indus Valley civilisation holds the key to a question with sharp political overtones: were the people of the subcontinent's earliest recorded civilisation Aryans or Dravidians? Or neither?

In 1946, an India's archaeological survey team was at one of its favourite digs when it stumbled upon 37 skeletons. Two lay on the steps of a well with visible marks of head injury. Five were on the steps of another well room. A few others were hastily buried as if times were so bad that the dead could not be taken to the cemetery.

'Men, women, children seemed to have been massacred in streets and left dying or, at best, crudely covered without any last rite,' wrote Mortimer Wheeler, who led the expedition.

Archaeologists were at a site on the west bank of River Indus that is now Pakistan's Sindh province. For veterans of this dig, the area's local name seemed appropriate. The Sindhis called it Moenjo Daro, meaning mound of the dead, but for the University of London-educated Wheeler, it was time to revisit history textbooks.

As an undergraduate, he had learnt by rote a sentence in the Cambridge History of India: The history of India is, in large measure, a struggle between newcomers and earlier inhabitants.

More than 1,500 sites of the Indus Valley civilisation have been discovered since 1924 when Moenjo Daro and Harappa were first excavated. Archaeologists believe the area is roughly a quarter of Europe. Dholavira in Gujarat is the last major site discovered. It was excavated in the 1990s.

Wheeler recollected what his mentor at the archaeological survey, John Marshall, often said that ancient people on the banks of Indus were Dravidians. In 1924, Marshall led an expedition to Moenjo Daro and Harappa, 500km away and announced a civilisation as ancient as Mesopotamia and as grand as Egypt. Excavation doubled the recorded age of the civilisation in the Indo-Pak subcontinent, shifting it to about 2500 BC from inscriptions of Ashoka in 250 BC.

Marshall could never forcefully claim the Dravidian affiliation of the Indus Valley civilisation. For Wheeler, 37 skeletons vindicated his mentor. 'It may be no conjecture... Aryans slaughtered aborigine men, women and children,' he said in a 1947 article in the Bulletin of Archaeological Survey.

Those were the tumultuous times. The Indo-Pak subcontinent was split into two nations and buffeted by partition. Initial reactions to Wheeler's announcement were muted. But the English archaeologist had stirred up a hornets' nest. The Aryan invasion theory was more than 70 years old then.

But several Hindu nationalists were never at ease with Aryan Invasion theory. It struck at root of their belief that the earliest Indians were Aryans. Indologist P V Kane fired the first salvo.

In 1950, he denounced Wheeler and Marshall as typical Englishmen who find invaders everywhere. Kane argued that Moenjo Daro was a large city and had there been an invasion, Wheeler should have found more than 37 skeletons.

'If Dr Marshall and Dr Wheeler had not been so blinkered they would have seen the people of Indus for what they were,' he said.

He was referring to a seal dug out by Marshall. On it was inscribed a horned person seated on a stool, its arms covered with bangles and was flanked by small figures of tigers, elephants. For Kane, this was the Vedic deity Pasupati, precursor to Shiva. It was proof that the people of Indus Valley were Aryans. But in a later article he counselled caution: resolution to the Indus Valley mystery lay in its seals. ?PPI

If any one can find the hieroglyphic word which translates to Asiatic, let me know were it is so I can isolate it and see if it is found in any other hieroglyphics in which they say the word Asiatic exists.

The mission of the Survey since its founding in 1924 has been to produce photographs and precise line drawings of the inscriptions and relief scenes on major temples and tombs at Luxor for publication

THE 'CHICAGO HOUSE METHOD'

Founder James Henry Breasted committed the Epigraphic Survey to the preservation of Egypt's cultural heritage by non-destructive means: through documentation so precise it could stand alone as a replacement in the absence of the original monument. Large-format photography (8x10, 5x7, and 4x5 inch negatives) is an essential tool in this process, and one of the first goals of Chicago House was to create a photographic archive of as many of Egypt's accessible standing monuments as possible, photographed inside and out.

But Breasted understood that photographs alone cannot capture all the details of the often damaged wall scenes of individual monuments; the light source that illuminates also casts shadows which obscure details. To supplement and clarify the photographic record, precise line drawings are produced at Chicago House which combine the talents of the photographer, artist, and Egyptologist. First the wall surface is carefully photographed, with a large-format camera whose lens is positioned exactly parallel to the wall to eliminate distortion. From these negatives photographic enlargements up to 20x24 inches are produced, printed on a special matt-surface paper with an emulsion coating that can take pencil and ink lines.

An artist takes this enlarged photographic print mounted on a drawing board to the wall itself, and pencils directly onto the photograph all of the carved detail that is visible on the wall surface, adding those details that are not visible or clear on the photograph. Back at the house the penciled lines are carefully inked with a series of weighted line conventions to show the three dimensions of the relief, and damage that interrupts the carved line is rendered with thin, broken lines that imitate the nature of the break.

When the inking is complete, the entire photograph is immersed in an iodine bath that dissolves away the photographic image, leaving just the ink drawing. The drawing is then blueprinted, the blueprint is cut into sections and each section is mounted on a sheet of stiff white paper. These 'collation sheets' are taken back to the wall where the inked details on the blueprint are thoroughly examined by two Egyptologist epigraphers, one after the other. These epigraphers pencil corrections and refinements on the blueprint itself with explanations and instructions to the artist written in the margins. The collation sheets are then returned to the artist, who in turn takes them back to the wall and carefully checks the epigraphers' corrections, one by one. When everyone is in agreement, the corrections are added to the inked drawing back in the studio, the transferred corrections are checked for accuracy by the epigraphers, and the drawing receives a final review by the field director.

No where have I found any one who ever saw a photograph of the Hatshep/Hyksos Hieroglyphic... but the ONLY source the translation can be traced to is Breasted.

Breasted was into extensive photographic techniques inside of the tombs, then rendering those photos into sketches

When Breasted was hanging out, photography was thriving and he was a pioneer in perfecting photography inside of the tombs .. but where is the Hatshep/Hyksos photo?

This "Epigraphic Survey" is the kind of preservation I speak of.

Know that any information that is supposed to be from ancient Egypt was first photographed, taken to a desk where it could be viewed closely and then translated.

If there is no photograph of the source of any thing the ancient Egyptians wrote, then those who tell the story are not the authors, but parrots repeating something they read.

To me, this is a worth while project <http://oi.uchicago.edu/research/projects/epi/>

This event sounds really exciting...historical Questions in the back of just one mind:

Considering his short time in office and on a percentile basis - has Mr. "O" received more threats than other Presidents? If so which ones and when?

Has any white entity stepped forward to point an accusing finger in the face of "white-racism as it raised its ugly head?

Means nothing - just curious to know these statistics.

New York - US President Barack Obama will host a special meeting (Sept. 22) for African heads of state when they attend the UN General Assembly in New York next week, a US official said Monday. Obama will host a luncheon for presidents and prime ministers of sub-Saharan and African nations and invitations have been sent out, said US Ambassador to the UN Susan Rice.

"The luncheon will focus on building a 21st century partnership to increase social and economic development in Africa," Rice said.

Rice said Obama will also meet with countries that have contributed the largest number of police and troops to UN peacekeeping operations around the world.

Obama, who will make his first visit to the UN as US president, will take part on September 22 in a climate change summit and address the 64th UN General Assembly session the same day.

It is not about those who write about things, but those who claim to have a source

If Sethe has any photographs of this hieroglyphic, show us where we can see it

If Sethe created any sketches of this hieroglyphic, show us where this person is said to have created a sketch

=====

What I said, a quote from your quote was

No where have I found any one who ever saw a photograph of the Hatshep/Hyksos Hieroglyphic... but the ONLY source the translation can be traced to is Breasted.

#1 It remains a fact ... NO where have I found any one who saw a photograph of the Hatshep/Hyksos Hieroglyphic

#2 If you or any one has seen such a photograph, show us, and none of the rest of us can say this any more, nor will we need to.

It is not he who writes about a photogrpah or sketch created by others, but here I say The ONLY source of the Hatshep/Hyksos translation is Breasted.

It does not matter if Sethe or Mickey Mouse writes about a sketch/photo if they do not claim it is theirs, then that is the end of a claim to be a creator.

Please find the context of what I wrote about Sethe which makes you believe I claimed he was the author of a photo or sketch?

If indeed Sethe has claims to be one who produced a Hatshep/Hyksos sketch, how about sharing it, so his source can be investigated.

More on this phase as I investigate the Hyksos story

I agree with you basically. However, one could not call this censorship. He IS free to say what he wants but it is harmful to spew his evil words and tactics. We must force him to find another way to do it and he can.

I love the idea of boycotting. I think we should use it more frequently - as one of our weapons - because money and power is the only thing that Americans respect. The Christian ethics they claim and purport to cling to is a lie. It is CLEARLY a lie. I think we ought to use it against the banks and credit card companies as well.

We have money and we spend money. I don't think we realize how many people - different types of people - that our money supports. But since we have not yet reached the point where we love and respect ourselves we seldom think "I have power; I should use it for me/us".

Good information, Asar.

It will be interesting to see what their names mean.

Til then, the name remains undetermined.

After Scipio the younger defeated Hannibal, the name of this tribe became the name of the territory of North Africa the Romans ruled. AFRI was Latinized to AFRICUS. But it is more likely they derived it from AVRIQHA or AFRIQHA. That is a variation of the name AOURIGHA which is a name of a people in Tunis. The Canaanites founded a settlement called Qeret Hhaddasshat in Tunis. There they met several groups called AURIGHA, and IFURCES or AFARIK of Corippus. The Aourigha were a land owning people whom the Cannanites rented land from.

It seems the full documents with the Odus is not coming up. When I get a chance to get to my computer I can send you his full documents. This is just one variation of the sign. I was first introduced to this symbol by Dr. Afalobi Epega, a fifth generation Ifa priests out of Ode Remo. This symbol is quite common in Ifa.

And this symbolism of the "sun", symbolic of the human being going through its cycle of conception, life, maturity and death, is present in so many Egyptian scenes as it is too much to demonstrate. That's why I provided that one link from the Ptolomatic era.

> > >

> > > You have to be symbolically literate and catch the "subtle" nuances. For instance, if you notice the Dogon "Womb of all Signs", at first glance you would not think that it and the Kongo Dikenga diagram are the same. All African systems who borrow signs adapt it, nativize it if you will, to their own cultural ideas; but still preserving the essence of where they got it from. From my research, I say the Dogon actually got if from the Kongo. Here's why, If you turn the symbol to its side, to where the side for "water" is on the bottom, you will notice that the area of "fire" will be on the right side of the image.

> > >

> > > This stage is called YALA. In the Kongo diagram, on the right side of the image (V2) that stage of development is called KALA and KALA means " burning charcoal" or "black." It is the stage of FIRE, and the bottom is water as well. K's often turn into Y's. YALA and KALA are the same principle and the same word. It is the same in ancient Egypt as the beginning cycle is KPHERA, which is another form of RA or "light" or the "sun."

>>>

>>> Again, no one, independently can "just come up" with an elaborate system like this and have the same principles in the same position. It is just impossible. You have to ask yourself, "whose symbol is this originally?" I believe that this is a Bantu system that was introduced into ancient Egypt because no where in Africa is this philosophy more elaborated on than in the Kongo, Uganda region. When you talk to elders they will unequivocally state that these signs are Batwa and that most of your signs and religious ideas in Africa come from the Batwa.

>>>

>>> If you have the opportunity to meet some "Nubians" in Sudan or Ethiopia, they will tell you that their educational system for their "priesthoods" are based on the knowledge of this symbol. Check out Dr. Ben's works where he is talking about being a "360 degree Mason." (See Dr. Ben Ramesis II) That isn't something he made up.

>>>

>>> A full discussion of each of these symbols would encompass a large volume and it would demonstrate that it is totally impossible for the Dogon, Yoruba or Kongo-Bantu people to have gotten certain elements of these symbols unless they were in ancient Egypt. Their whole culture is based on these principles. The same with the Zulu. Check out the Zulu houses, their design and what they mean. Keep in mind everything I have said and then watch this video: http://www.ted.com/talks/ron\_eglash\_on\_african\_fractals.html

>>>

>>> If you truly understand what this symbol really means, then you'll understand the meaning behind the Sphinx and the philosophy and purpose of the Pyramids. Here's a clue, the name for a pyramid is called MR. The Greeks inform us that the word pyramid means "fire within" coming from the words "Pyramis" and "Pyramidos". PYRE means "fire." In Yoruba the word IMOLES means "house of light" and refers to the ancestors. R and L are interchangeable. We compare the consonants MR (Egypt) and ML (Yoruba). In Bantu it is UMIRIRO, again MRR. Now read Dr. Fu-Kiau's book and let's see if you can put it together. I will elaborate on this in a future work I will publish called The Ena, The Ancestors and the Papyrus of Ani.

What the list claims, if we follow the methodology of the comparative method, is that Egyptian `h` is the recurrent correspondent of Amharic `ch` and `sh`. You cannot use Amharic to determine what the Egyptian sound would be.

>>> Secondly as a comparative list for the purpose of uncovering genetic relationships this is a poor list. The vocabulary can hardly be described as basic. Basic vocabulary includes words like `foot`, `leg`, `eye`, `arm`, `go`, `stand`, `sun`, `tree` etc. It does not include terms like `government` and `take office`. Don't get me wrong cognates of this nature can be found amongst related languages but when these (words like `government` ) are present there will always be an abundance of more basic vocabulary too and they take priority. Where are they here?

> > >

Comparing `peas and beans` to `vegetables` is not impressive. If you were comparing `peas` in one language to `beans` in another this would be closer. Where is the impressive demonstration that makes the case. Again you can find cognates at these sorts of semantic distances but preferably not in the initial demonstration.

Have you checked what is the Ge`ez form which would be an older `uncle` language?

You do not even address this. 2) You do not even address the issue of Amharic and Tigrinya and the relationship they should have with Bantu if you are correct. If you can find cognates in any languages compared with Egyptian then it's probably because your methodology is not strict enough.

>>>

>>> Asar: "What this also confirms is Diodorus Siculus' statement concerning the oral traditions of the Egyptians. I will repeat here:

>>>

>>> Diodorus Siculus, The Library of History, Books II.3

In response to my statement: No where have I found any one who ever saw a photograph of the Hatshepsut/Hyksos Hieroglyphic...

One wrote:

///

"How about Norman de Garis Davies, who made an epigraphic copy in 1931"

///

All I can find on this guy is in French ( I think, so it is not a source I can investigate)

In order for Garis to make a sketch of the hieroglyphics, he would have

- a) Taken a desk inside of the tomb or written on the floor as tourist walked by him.
- b) He would have taken a photo or used some one else's photo to create his sketch from.

c) As of yet I have NOT been able to find the sketch of the hieroglyph from Davies. I have continued to search. If you can produce the source, that would be great.

d) If Davies produced a drawing from a photo, an image of that photo would be tops.

e) What I am looking for specifically is the sketched or photographed part of the hieroglyph that includes the word Hyksos or Asiatic. I want to compare the Hatsheput word rendered to Hyksos/Asiatic with the other hieroglyphics said to have this word and see if they are the same words or completely different words.

You wrote: How about Norman de Garis Davies, who made an epigraphic copy in 1931. Great, show us an image of this sketch, find the line in which the word Asiatic/Hyksos is written so I can see the hieroglyphic spelling of this word.

Just to the right of the Hatshepsut inscription, it states the Hyksos had a pizza business .. of course if any one looks at a surface where the information is destroyed, they can concoct any thing they want and future generations would never know they have been deceived.. especially if the author of the concoction had some fancy title.

=====

The first American to get a PhD in Egyptology (1894, from the University of Berlin), James Henry Breasted was the founder of the Oriental Institute in Chicago.

We can guess Breasted would have been at least 24 in 1894. We know that his photographic techniques were instrumental in the development of the method used by the university in documenting historic artifacts.

http://lh4.ggpht.com/\_rb3EfVqgMWI/SrTypAuzZ-I/AAAAAAAAENC/wcYVbOYmnY8/s512/JamesHenryBreasted.jpg

( I doubt that any one took a desk inside of the tombs, sat there and sketched the images by candle light.) The important part here is the ability to finally nail down a person who is credited with making a sketch of the hieroglyph... A person who actually saw it or saw a photograph of it. It is this person who established the step of starting with high resolution photos which were taken to buildings, placed on a desk and reconstructed.

The next step is to compare any photograph of the hieroglyph with the sketch. Photographic documentation is essential to keep the honest, honest and for the mistakes to be corrected.

When I inquired about this particular inscription, I got this reply

The inscription is written on the facade of a rock cut shrine in Middle Egypt known today as the Speos Artemidos, which is near Beni Hasan.

The inscription is almost impossible to see and photograph as it is in shadow most of the time

It is essential to photograph and digitalize all remaining images/hieroglyphics for future generations.

I share a common problem with many others. I like all kind of Egyptology topics and I like to play Mexican Jumping Bean.. going from one to another... but I decided to take just one topic to keep jumping back to .. Hyksos. What ever your topic of choice is, you might trace down the source of any information to see if the source can be documented or if it is but web site parrots, pasting the gossip of other web site parrots.

The Epigraphic Survey based at Chicago House in Luxor, Egypt, is directed by W. Raymond Johnson, PhD, Research Associate (Associate Professor).

The mission of the Survey since its founding in 1924 has been to produce photographs and precise line drawings of the inscriptions and relief scenes on major temples and tombs at Luxor for publication. .

THE 'CHICAGO HOUSE METHOD'

Founder James Henry Breasted committed the Epigraphic Survey to the preservation of Egypt's cultural heritage by non-destructive means: through documentation so precise it could stand alone as a replacement in the absence of the original monument. Large-format photography (8x10, 5x7, and 4x5 inch negatives) is an essential tool in this process, and one of the first goals of Chicago House was to create a photographic archive of as many of Egypt's accessible standing monuments as possible, photographed inside and out.

But Breasted understood that photographs alone cannot capture all the details of the often damaged wall scenes of individual monuments; the light source that illuminates also casts shadows which obscure details. To supplement and clarify the photographic record, precise line drawings are produced at Chicago House which combine the talents of the photographer, artist, and Egyptologist. First the wall surface is carefully photographed, with a large-format camera whose lens is positioned exactly parallel to the wall to eliminate distortion. From these negatives photographic enlargements up to 20x24 inches are produced, printed on a special matt-surface paper with an emulsion coating that can take pencil and ink lines.

An artist takes this enlarged photographic print mounted on a drawing board to the wall itself, and pencils directly onto the photograph all of the carved detail that is visible on the wall surface, adding those details that are not visible or clear on the photograph. Back at the house the penciled lines are carefully inked with a series of weighted line conventions to show the three dimensions of the relief, and damage that interrupts the carved line is rendered with thin, broken lines that imitate the nature of the break.

When the inking is complete, the entire photograph is immersed in an iodine bath that dissolves away the photographic image, leaving just the ink drawing. The drawing is then blueprinted, the blueprint is cut into sections and each section is mounted on a sheet of stiff white paper. These 'collation sheets' are taken back to the wall where the inked details on the blueprint are thoroughly examined by two Egyptologist epigraphers, one after the other. These epigraphers pencil corrections and refinements on the blueprint itself with explanations and instructions to the artist written in the margins. The collation sheets are then returned to the artist, who in turn takes them back to the wall and carefully checks the epigraphers' corrections, one by one. When everyone is in agreement, the corrections are added to the inked drawing back in the studio, the transferred corrections are checked for accuracy by the epigraphers, and the drawing receives a final review by the field director.

Consultations between artist, epigraphers, and field director, the consensus of all talents combined, ensures a finished 'facsimile' drawing that is faithful to what is preserved on the wall in every detail; this is the essence of what is generally referred to as the 'Chicago House Method.' The corrected ink drawings, photographs, text translations, commentary, and glossaries are then taken back to Chicago for processing and publication in large folio volumes for distribution worldwide.

CONSERVATION PROGRAMS

Under Lanny Bell's directorship twenty years ago the Epigraphic Survey added conservation to its program and a conservator to the staff. Now, because of rapidly changing conditions in Egypt that are causing the monuments to decay at an ever faster rate, we have expanded our conservation programs even further.

CHICAGO HOUSE

The Chicago House photographic archive is a major research collection containing over 18,000 negatives and 20,000 prints ranging in date from the late-nineteenth century to the present. A project to conserve, register, and provide proper archival storage for the collection was recently completed and a catalog of the archival holdings, 'The Registry of the Photographic Archives of the Epigraphic Survey,' was published in 1995. In 1999 the Chicago House Imaging Center was formed to coordinate the scanning of the entire archive onto CD-ROM for inclusion in our Photo

BTW, do you know the origin or ancestral history of you surname?

Such names as Moore, Moreno, Morris, etc. are supposed to have origins in the Moors.

>> Dear Nathaniel,

>> We've got big news -- Glenn Beck's show is making less than half the money it was making when we started calling on companies to pull their advertisements from the show. This is huge and it's thanks to you -- more than 200,000 ColorOfChange members have spoken out, and 62 advertisers have listened.

>> Data from a media tracking firm shows how deeply we're hitting Fox's pockets; they are now sacrificing more than a half-million ad dollars a week to keep Beck on the air.

>> Of course, Beck and his supporters are fighting back with everything they've got. Today, we need your help to make sure the 62 companies who have pulled their ads from Beck's show stand strong, and to turn up the pressure on his remaining advertisers. Please join us in thanking the companies that have pulled their ads, and in calling on his remaining advertisers to stop supporting him:

>> <http://colorofchange.org/beck/hold/?id=2288-147537>

>> During the last week in July, Beck's show pulled in over $1 million from advertising. The first week in September, that number was down to less than $500,000, even as his ratings have gone up.1

>> It's clear that our campaign is making a significant financial impact, despite Fox's insistence otherwise.

>> What's happening is a simple matter of supply and demand. Fox has a limited amount of time devoted to ads each day. If 62 companies refuse to run ads during Beck's show, the demand for that time is reduced, and the rates the network can charge for the show plummet. In Beck's case, almost no major companies are willing to advertise during either of his twice-a-day broadcasts, so Fox can't collect as much ad revenue as they could before. If we can keep the advertisers away, Fox will have to decide sometime soon whether it's worth losing money to keep Beck's poison on the air.

>> Beck's smear campaigns

>> Beck claims to be a patriot who asks hard questions and gives his viewers the facts. In reality, he consistently uses lies, distortions, and exaggerations to stir up anger and fear, and to distract his viewers from working towards real solutions to the problems facing our country. He seems determined to create an atmosphere in which the White House can accomplish nothing, and he's doing it partly by launching vicious smear campaigns on Obama's character, policies and advisers.

>> Last week, Beck and his supporters took credit for both Van Jones' resignation<sup>2</sup> and for the demotion of Yosi Sergeant, who was "reassigned" at the National Endowment for the Arts following vicious attacks by Beck<sup>3</sup>. And Beck has made it clear he's got other targets.<sup>4</sup>

>> Our campaign is working. Respectable companies don't want to be associated with Beck or support his show with their dollars. It's resulting in a major loss of funding for his show, and at the same time, it's making clear that Beck's race-baiting and fear-mongering are far outside the mainstream.

>> The longer Beck stays isolated, the more of a problem he'll be for Fox, and the harder it will be for him to spread his lies and distortions. If we can keep the pressure on, Fox will have to make a choice: 1) drop Beck because it doesn't make business sense to keep him; or 2) communicate to the world that they're so intent on providing a platform for race-baiting and fear-mongering that they don't care if they lose money (a serious problem for a public company like News Corporation, the owner of Fox).

>> More than ever, it's time to keep the pressure on. You can help by joining us in thanking the advertisers that have stopped supporting Glenn Beck, and calling on those whose ads are still running on his show to follow suit:

Obama will host a luncheon for presidents and prime ministers of sub-Saharan and African nations and invitations have been sent out, said US Ambassador to the UN Susan Rice.

Hypothetical-Hieroglyphic-names

As for Canaanites ruling Egypt, give me a break. Canaan was not an empire united under one power. Canaan was divided into dozens of tribes/nations. The artifacts from Canaan/Palestine are nothing compared to the Egyptian civilization.

In the bible stories, the Israelites did not come riding in on chariots

Genesis 41:42 And Pharaoh took off his ring from his hand, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and arrayed him in vestures of fine linen, and put a gold chain about his neck;

Genesis 41:43 And he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had.

Joseph got to ride in on Pharaoh's second chariot he had parked in the garage.

Genesis 46:5 And Jacob rose up from Beersheba: and the sons of Israel carried Jacob their father, and their little ones, and their wives, in the wagons which Pharaoh had sent to carry him. .. The Israelites did not even have their own transportation, Pharaoh had to send wagons to pick them up.*

The whole 'Hyksos' caper is the promotion of European 'Jews' who try to make the world believe their ancestors ruled Egypt.

=====

There is no hieroglyphics that tie any of the Egyptian enemy to the same population. Hieroglyphics are just little pictures instead of letters. The pictures (glyphs) AND the sequence they were arranged, determined the meaning of the hieroglyphic text.

In this example

1 Identified a people in a tomb in the 12th dynasty

2 Identified a people in the 14th dynasty

3 Identified a people in the 15th dynasty

4 and 5 identified a people in the 18th dynasty

http://lh5.ggpht.com/\_rb3EfVqqMWI/SrVz-BjX8YI/AAAAAAAAEOA/BZ-gavFH0Js/words-b.jpg

These hieroglyphics were found in different areas in different decades. Ok, Mr. Translator were the Egyptians identifying the same population or are these the identifications of different populations?

To generate these hypothetical names I used a silly hieroglyphic generator and each word is from 1 Germans, 2 Spanish, 3 Russians, 4 Americans, 5 French.

It is that simple, if you use the characters of Europeans, swap which character and which arrangement, that particular arrangement identifies a specific people.. and if it is a different arrangement, then it is the identification of a different people.

Look at countries around the world. They have conflicts with others from multiple outside nations and from inside factions. Why would any one just assume the reference in the different hieroglyphic sources are a reference to the same population?

There are multiple different sources from different decades and different parts of Egypt in which people assert, identify Hyksos.

The test is simple, extract the word said to be Hyksos or Asiatic from each source and place them where you can see them all, and see if they are the same or totally different hieroglyphic words.

Germans, Spanish, Russians, Americans, French .. hieroglyphic or European character sets, different characters in different arrangements is a different word.

Take all the hieroglyphics in which the Egyptians identify their enemy ... take that word which they call their enemy .. and place the hieroglyphic name of each enemy like the above example.

I don't know, but I am guessing most or all of these hieroglyphic sources identify each of their enemy with different hieroglyphic words?

It does not prove conclusively they were not the same people, but it does prove conclusively that there is not a shred of evidence connecting the enemy in one hieroglyphic source with an enemy in another hieroglyphic source ... The Egyptians were surrounded with other tribes/nations on all sides.

IF there are major deviations in a photograph and a sketch, then that sketch is not a copy at all. I DO KNOW LOTS about photography. I know how to use cross lighting, filters and other tricks to bring out images not noticed by the eye.

By comparing a sketch with the original photograph, then that sketcher's work can be checked.

IF any one actually stood in a tomb sketching an image, they would have least photographed it. Even tourist take their cameras when they go to Egypt.. Show me your sketch and show my your photo of what you sketched form [Questioner] Roughly what percentage of the angry anti-government "movement" (as typified by the tea parties, the 9/12 March on Washington, the town-hall protests, etc) is made of citizens who are genuinely disturbed by the sense they are being lied to, and how much of this "movement" is made of of racists and sore losers from the last election?

[Zeta Response] We have addressed this recently, stating that during times of turmoil and rapid change, the unease affects the populace who then look for any reason, any scapegoat, to blame. Obama is not lying. His pace of change, which requires the cooperation of Congress, is not what might be hoped, but he is attempting to deliver what he promised. There are those who want all the Bush criminals punished, when as we have explained this would divert all the resources and the attention of Congress away from crying needs of the people. Percentagewise, it would be 5% who feel disappointment in Obama, interpreting the slow pace to be a "lie", with 37% angry because they do not know who to blame for their troubles, and the remainder incitement from the GOP who hope to reclaim their former dominance in Washington DC.

[Questioner] It seems as if the "collective unconscious" of man is becoming more accepting of the possibility of catastrophic earth changes. One assumes that this has been a part of the plan all along as this is how critical info is made available in a non threatening manner?

[Zeta Response] Our stance all along has been that the common man is not the problem during any disclosure about aliens or Planet X. It is the establishment, who control what the armies of the world do, who can invoke martial law and send their militaries into the streets to mow down the common man, who are to be feared during any sudden disclosure. Those in power, the very wealthy and the politically powerful, fear losing their perch. They assume they have control now, and cannot imagine being without their wealth and power. When the Earth changes occur, it is increasingly obvious that Global Warming or any activity in the Sun is not the cause. Signs in the sky have already begun, with sightings of the Second Sun or related phenomena. These elite will bunker themselves, go into hiding, and when this occurs they will not have the clout to invoke martial law or try to exterminate large segments of the populace in order to make themselves feel secure. The changeover in the US administration from Bush to Obama is a major step in this direction. But there are other steps to come that will move this scenario forward.

[Questioner] Weeks ago the Zetas confirmed the man convicted of the Lockerbie bombing was, in fact, not guilty. Now the Brit's top terror suspect has been released from "virtual house arrest to avoid disclosing secret evidence against him". What does that mean? National security claims have always served to prevent such disclosures in the past. What is their fear? <http://www.timesonline.co.uk/tol/news/politics/article6824172.ece>

[Zeta Response] Gitmo is likewise filled with men who have done no crime. In the false War on Terror, which justified the invasion of Iraq which was in fact an oil snatch, required monsters behind bars. That they were behind bars is no indication of their guilt or that they were ever a threat. Now that different hands are in charge of the War on Terror, some of these matters are being set right.

Empires that expanded into Egypt

These are boundary maps.. just outlines of ancient empires. I have multiple map programs. I used my Map Maker Toolkit for most of them. It is a mapping program used in schools and has ancient empires already prepared. What the program did not have, I got off the internet.

They do not have to be accurate, because no such maps are. Maps give you the general outline of borders or empires.

Would I be so goofy to say no outsiders ever ruled Egypt? Here are a few and I am only looking at populations north of Egypt.

By the outline of these maps..

The Israelites never ruled Canaan. They just won some and lost some battles. These other sub tribes of Canaan was there before and long after the Israelites were scattered through out Asia and north Africa.

Through the Israelites were commanded to drive out the inhabitants of the land, it Never happened:

Joshua 15:63 As for the Jebusites the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the children of Judah could not drive them out; but the Jebusites dwell with the children of Judah at Jerusalem unto this day

Joshua 17:12 Yet the children of Manasseh could not drive out the inhabitants of those cities; but the Canaanites would dwell in that land

Judges 1:19 And the Lord was with Judah; and he drave out the inhabitants of the mountain; but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron.

Judges 1:21 And the children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebusites that inhabited Jerusalem; but the Jebusites dwell with the children of Benjamin in Jerusalem unto this day

Judges 1:32 But the Asherites dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land: for they did not drive them out.

The Canaanite Empire never ruled Egypt. Canaan was like Africa having MANY divided nations inside of its land area.

In the bible accounts of the Israelites they were just a family of less than 70 before they went into Egypt. They were in captivity for 430 years. When they returned they held power at times for a few hundred years, then by the time of 2nd Kings, they were scattered again. They NEVER drove out the original Asian tribes of Canaan.

The other tribes lived right in the midst of the Israelites.. such as the Hittites.

2 Samuel 11:3 David's neighbor was a Hittite.

These multiple tribes remained there long after the Israelites were dispersed .

Canaan was not a united empire at any time, just a pot luck of divided factions that fought among themselves

=====

The Akkadian Empire only reached as far as the Sinia, so they never ruled.

=====

(Greeks) Alexandria ruled Egypt

=====

Assyria ruled Egypt

=====

Babylon only reached as far as the Sinia

=====

The Byzantine empire ruled Egypt

=====

The Hittites never ruled Egypt

=====

The Ottoman Empire ruled Egypt

=====

The Persian Empire ruled Egypt

=====

The Roman Empire ruled Egypt

Of course multiple empires ruled Egypt through the centuries and they are documented.

The idea that any of the divided factions of the tribes of Canaan ruled Egypt, is only in the vapor from flapping lips.

=====

If I have missed any empires that reached into Egypt, let me know. This album contains all the empires listed above.

HYK-Hatshepsut-n-da-Hyksos

A little over a month ago I was told of another source identifying the Hyksos.

From this web page

The doorway leads into a hall, its ceiling is decorated with hieroglyphs and relief's which are now very worn and difficult to read in some parts.

The most important was inscribed by Hatshepsut on the architrave over the entrance and denounces the ?Asiatics of Avaris? (the Hyksos) who ruled Egypt.

Hatshepsut describes the chaos of Hyksos rule

#1 I can not find one photo of the specific area where these hieroglyphics exist.

#2 I can not find one image of a sketch of any who was supposed to have sketched the hieroglyphics.

#3 I can not find one photograph of the hieroglyphic, that any sketch was made from

I have communicated with lots of people who tell what is in the inscription but NONE of them can produce an image of the hieroglyphic sketch or a photo of the original glyphs.

So far I have read something about these guys in connection with the inscription.

Norman de Garis Davies

Professor Sethe

James Henry Breasted

From what I have read so far, there are claims that these guys created sketches of the hieroglyphic... BUT no where can I find an image of their sketches, so far.

Assuming they actually do exist, it would be great to place the sketches side by side for a comparison.

In the information on Breasted, he is depicted as an excellent photographer and knew how to arrange lighting to bring out the best detail.

A camera and the proper lighting can produce details that can not be seen with the human eye.

So far, every one I have heard tells about the information from a sketch they have never seen.. and the location where the hieroglyphic is said to be, has deteriorated and the image can not be seen today.

I like to include images of the statue/image/hieroglyphic in the topic, but until some one produces an image of it, I could only include a picture of a puff of smoke.

=====

Let's say the hieroglyph was in tact and they said exactly what they have been translated to.

=====

Hatshepsut:

Hear ye, all people and folk as many as they may be, I have done these things through the counsel of my heart. I have not slept forgetfully, (but)

a) I have restored that which had been ruined.

b) I have raised up that which had gone to pieces formerly,

c) since the Asiatics were in the midst of Avaris of the Northland,

d) and vagabonds were in the midst of them, overthrowing that which had been made.

=====

Assuming this text did exist before it crumbled..

a) Does not mention that Hatsheput encountered, but she had repaired/restored that which had been ruined.

b) Nothing about any encounter with any foreigners, but the words of the restoration of that which had gone to pieces.

c) Does not say the Asiatics and Hatsheput were in a rumble, but it says the Asiatics were (past tense) in Avaris.

d) Vagabonds .. is a reference to slackers, hippies... Vagabond: 1. A person without a permanent home who moves from place to place. 2. A vagrant; a tramp. 3. A wanderer; Of, relating to, or characteristic of a wanderer; nomadic.

Of course this would include shepherds .. and Egypt was full of shepherds centuries before and after the Hyksos accounts.

"The vagabonds were in the midst of them (speaking about Asiatics) overthrowing that which had been made"

If this translation is correct, it would appear the vagabonds were destructive to the Asiatics.

e) In the mythical stories of the Hyksos, Avaris was their capital. If this were the capital of the Hyksos, they would not be destroying their own pad.

The only way Hyksos destruction of Avaris fits, is IF it were ruled by the Egyptians and the Hyksos invaded the capital of the Egyptians.

f) As for the word translated to Asiatics, it is important to see the actual photographic or sketched image of this word so it can be compared to other text in which hieroglyphics are translated to Asiatics.

We can see if this word identifies the same subset of enemy or if the Egyptians were writing about different groups.

=====

18th Dynasty 1550-1295 BC

Ahmose ... drove out the unidentified enemy ... he died

Amenhotep I ... grew up, ruled and died

Thutmose I ... grew up, ruled and died

Thutmose II... grew up, ruled and died

Hatshepsut ... grew up.

.. put her thoughts on this surface.

So of course this enemy was driven out long before Hatsheput was ever born.

IF this translation is of a hieroglyphic that actually existed, there is nothing about any encounter of Hatsheput with the 'Hatsheput', but the basic information is about Hatshepsut's clean up/rebuilding after the 'Hyksos' were long gone.

A man sitting in his cabin shooting at the Indians does not destroy that which he has built. The destroyers will be the Indians who shoot flaming arrows to destroy the man and his family.

g) NOTHING here states this enemy ever ruled Avaris. If they ruled Avaris they would have protected it (not destroyed it). The only way this enemy would have destroyed this city is if the Egyptians ruled it, and the enemy invaded it.

TEST TIME

In your translation from this hieroglyphic sketch/photo you have never seen.

h) Give the line(s) which speaks of Hatshepsut repairing/rebuilding that city

i) Give the line in which this enemy is identified by where they originated from.

j) Give the line in which it states that Hatshepsut encountered this enemy.

k) Give the line in which this enemy is said to have ruled Avaris

I always thought that those who knowingly promoted false information was identified as liars, but here I guess, most are just Lemmings who parrot what they have heard.

By the translation you embrace, show me which of this information does exist and which of this information does NOT exist?

Maps / Empires

Ethiopia/Cush/Nubia/Sudan

If you look at map outlines closely, you will find an array of variations. The creation of maps to display large land areas is not an intent to be accurate, but to show the general outline and it's relevance to other known places.

When I create ancient maps, I like to include modern day nation boundaries. Those who have a knowledge of geography, can then see the location of that empire and who lives in that land area today.

How do we create the outline of a map? We find land marks/known places of the past which location is known today..... then we draw lines ... dot to dot ... just like you did when you were a kid.

That is why there are an array of maps with variations (except of course the thousands of maps you find on the internet, which are copied from some one else then pasted)

=====

Empires start by little factions that invade others. If there is resistance the battle is on. After the battle is won the trumpet takes the conquered men and places in it's own army... as the snow ball grow, the empire expands.

When an empire expands, it is likely to continue until a greater force stops it.

In the bible accounts of the Canaanites, there are an array of different tribes. These tribes may not have existed in the period of the "Hyksos" accounts, but the ancestors of the many tribes did not drop out of a flying saucer.

The Jebusites, Amorites, Philistines, Horites.... before this period of time may have been divided into many smaller tribes.

The identity of a nationality, depends only on who is in political control. In the latter centuries all the subsets of tribes were tied to the identification of Palestinians.

Your ancestors do not determine your nationality ... Chinese, Japanese, Irish, Germans, Polish, British, Russian, the original natives in the land I live are called Americans.

When the Persians ruled, When the Babylonians ruled, all of those tribes in Canaan belonged to those empires.

=====

The physical heritage of any original population can be determined ONLY by the examination of the physical remains of those who lived in a land before outsiders polluted their gene pools... OR to examine their population that has been separated from outsiders.

Any one who has ever examined any in tact photos of schools for Native American, knows they were a black race with no curly hair. If you look through hundreds of early pre 1900 (non faded/damaged) photos of Native Americans, you get the drift.

In populations where native Americans live with Europeans, many are no different than the rest of us. If you go to a reservation out west... then move further from the tourist traps... you will get an idea of what their ancestors looked like.

=====

I first worked in Alexandria when I was in Egypt. The predominate race was Asian ... like Pakistanis or natives of India. As I moved south to Cairo, the Negro population increased. I never made it to southern Egypt, but from the films I have seen from the cities in of southern Egypt, they are predominately Negroes.

When painted images are exposed to the elements, they fade, get lighter, crack and peel. From the thousands of images in the tombs, you can see the colors the ancient Egyptian artist chose to reproduce an image of those they painted ... but better yet, forensic scientist have specific test to compare the physical remains of people in different parts of the world.

From what I can speculate, ancient Egyptians were a composite of Africans and Asians.

On the last project I worked on we drove from Cairo through isolated areas to a the Red Sea. There was a pit stop about mid way. When I got out for the rest the people there lived like they did 4000 years ago. There was not a white face among them. They looked at me (bond hair/blue eyes white skin) like they had seen an alien.

Far from the cities these populations of Egyptians had never mixed with outsiders from Europe.

We can tell what the ancient Egyptians were looking at when they created pictures of the Nubians.

Like many neighboring empires at times they traded with each other, fought against each other and joined forces as allies against others.

=====

I have seen in documentaries one speculation is that Abu Simbel was built by the Egyptians as kind of a scare crow or to impress Nubians with their great power.

Abu Simbel is about 20 miles north of the present day Egyptian (southern border) or about 140 miles south of The Aswan Dam.

http://lh3.ggpht.com/\_rb3EfVqqMWI/SrfaxbtqUUI/AAAAAAAAEPE/xgRm54DzN4g/Empire-Cush.jpg

2 Chronicles 12:3 and in other verses, "Ethiopians"/Cushites and Egyptians are connected together. Of course the actual words in the scriptures is that Moses's second wife was a Cushite (not Ethiopian).

The most trustworthy records of Egyptian/Cushite records will be found in the hieroglyphics and wall paintings of the Egyptians.

The difference in the Cushites and the "Asiatics" is we can identify an actual population or empire they were tied to.

As for the ability to create a map of the empire of the Cushites, I have no given land marks to start with... just don't know.

Dear Friend,

Four minutes thats all you need to learn just what you get from health insurance reform. Take the few minutes and watch now:

The details the President outlines in this video are those that every American needs to know. No matter your political party or whether or not you have insurance, his plan for health care security and stability matters to all of us.

Millions of American citizens cannot get health insurance and 14,000 are losing their insurance every day. If we do nothing, half of Americans under the age of 65 will lose their health insurance at some point in the next ten years.

Thats not right. Plain and simple. For Americans with insurance as well as those without it, inaction is not an option. In America, no one should go broke because they get sick.

Bottom line health insurance reform will provide more security and stability to those who have health insurance, coverage for those who dont, and will lower the cost of health care for our families, our businesses, and our government.

As the President says, now is the time to deliver the change we need on health care. Forward this email and make sure your family, friends and social networks take four minutes and watch this video.

Thank you,
David

| 29943|2009-09-22 03:44:29|Ferg|How to play down Bantu|
Asar.

Here is an article I acquired from the Mero discussion group. Notice how the playing down of Bantu-Niger Congo language is portrayed in favour of other languages even when the root do not match the consonants. Incidentally the Arabic word Jin, an evil spirit must be derived from the word for name. As you know Obenga showed that Bantu used Rina, Lina, Jina for name. Perhaps you could add from your end Niger-Congo's connections with the name of a person.

rn, name (Wb 425,1-428,19), one of the soul elements of the Egyptian personality, coptic : ran (SB), ren (ALM), len (F), rin (P), absolutely distinct of Berber : ism, pl. ismawen, Arab : ism (W. Vychichl, 1983, 176) and Western Chadic : angas-sura : *__m, name, angas: sm, name, fame, sura, goemy: sum, mupun : s__m, name, honor (G. Takacs, 2004, 338), proto-Ron : *sum. Proto-Nilotic : ka-Rin, Western Nilotic (luo, nweer, shilluk) : *rin, the name, dinka : rin, name, reputation.

West Chadic, angas-sura : *rin, shadow, spirit, as an element of the personality, distinct of *__m, name, honor, fame, mupun: riin, shadow of person, spirit, karekare : rini, shadow, one's senses thinking clearly (G. Takacs, Comparative Dictionary of the Angas-Sura languages, 2004, 310). Bokkos: rin, spirit.

The angas-sura and the bokkos (Ron family) share the root **s-m*, name with Berber and Semitic, and move in a Benoue-Congo linguistic environment. So, it's noteworthy that angas-sura and bokkos use the Nilotic root with the meaning of spirits. It may 5 Notice the lack of semantic and phonetic correspondences of the Bantu root for name (PB Guthrie **g□*, variante **jina*) with the Chadic one. However, because of the dynamics of languages contacts, the Western Chadic sha : ayin, name, as its meaning suggests, comes from the Benoue-Congo vocabulary (Tapshin (Nigerian Plateau) : kyin, Pe : ti-yin, PJ **gyin*, name (cf. R. Blench), while the name of the tongue, di-les, comes in Fyem from the Chadic Ron languages (Chadic : **les*, angas-sura : **lis*, Egyptian : ns, represented by the 'pastoral' hieroglyph of a bovine tongue, Coptic : las, Berber : **les*. These few examples are not surprising. The Chadic connection is detectable in the Egyptian language

The grammatical and lexicographic affinities of the spongy Egyptian vehicular with Chadic is well-known (Diakonoff, 1998; Takacs, 1999). Its earlier ancestor could be located in the south of Upper Egypt (Diakonoff, 1998) or, earlier, in the Sahara (Wendorf, 2004), where Takacs suggests to place 'a long co-existence' of the ancestors of Egyptians, Chadics, and Nilo-Saharans (Takacs, 1999, 47). This short vocabulary of the mind shared by the ancestors of Chadic-speakers (therefore also Cushitic-speakers), Nilotic-speakers and Egyptian-speakers suggests further northern borderlines of their homeland than the Wadi Howar proposed by Blench 'as a matter of fact, its southern borderline (map 2). Pushed out of the eastern Sahara by desertification, some of these ancestors of Chadic-speakers people spread southwards to Ennedi by the Wadi Howar, and the west, or to the east, to Sudanese and Ethiopian regions. Some stayed in actual Oasis, or joined their inhabitants. Others moved towards the Nile from a large range of saharo-nubian areas, reaching Nekhen or Abydos.

These linguistic data, as the archaeological facts, are concordant with the first sets of genetic findings :

On the one hand, in Upper Egypt, ?? the Gurna population has conserved the trace of an ancestral genetic structure from an ancestral East African population, characterized by a high M1 haplogroup frequency. The current structure of the Egyptian population may be the result of further influence of neighbouring populations on this ancestral population?

(Stevanovitch A, Gilles A, Bouzaid E, Kefi R, Paris F, Gayraud RP, Spadoni JL, El-Chenawi F, Boud-Colomb E. Mitochondrial DNA sequence diversity in a sedentary population from Egypt. Ann Hum Genet. 2004 68: 23-39)<sup>6</sup>.

On the other hand, ??the Chadic branch is linguistically close to the East African Cushitic branch (of Afro-Asiatic) although they are separated by 2000 km of territory with different Semitic and Nilo-Saharan peoples live today.

<sup>6</sup>For data on another (ancient) Upper Egyptian population, and its sub-saharan affinities, see Eric Crubezy.

>>> Dear Nathaniel,

>>> We've got big news -- Glenn Beck's show is making less than half the money it was making when we started calling on companies to pull their advertisements from the show. This is huge and it's thanks to you -- more than 200,000 ColorOfChange members have spoken out, and 62 advertisers have listened.

>>> Data from a media tracking firm shows how deeply we're hitting Fox's pockets; they are now sacrificing more than a half-million ad dollars a week to keep Beck on the air.

>>> Of course, Beck and his supporters are fighting back with everything they've got. Today, we need your help to make sure the 62 companies who have pulled their ads from Beck's show stand strong, and to turn up the pressure on his remaining advertisers. Please join us in thanking the companies that have pulled their ads, and in calling on his remaining advertisers to stop supporting him:

>>> <http://colorofchange.org/beck/hold/?id=2288-147537>

>>> During the last week in July, Beck's show pulled in over $1 million from advertising. The first week in September, that number was down to less than $500,000, even as his ratings have gone up.<sup>1</sup>

>>> It's clear that our campaign is making a significant financial impact, despite Fox's insistence otherwise.

>>> What's happening is a simple matter of supply and demand. Fox has a limited amount of time devoted to ads each day. If 62 companies refuse to run ads during Beck's show, the demand for that time is reduced, and the rates the network can charge for the show plummet. In Beck's case, almost no major companies are willing to advertise during either of his twice-a-day broadcasts, so Fox can't collect as much ad revenue as they could before. If we can keep the advertisers away, Fox will have to decide sometime soon whether it's worth losing money to keep Beck's poison on the air.

>>> Beck's smear campaigns

>>> Beck claims to be a patriot who asks hard questions and gives his viewers the facts. In reality, he consistently uses lies, distortions, and exaggerations to stir up anger and fear, and to distract his viewers from working towards real solutions to the problems facing our country. He seems determined to create an atmosphere in which the White House can accomplish nothing, and he's doing it partly by launching vicious smear campaigns on Obama's character, policies and advisers.

>>> Last week, Beck and his supporters took credit for both Van Jones' resignation<sup>2</sup> and for the demotion of Yosi Sergant, who was "reassigned" at the National Endowment for the Arts following vicious attacks by Beck<sup>3</sup>. And Beck has made it clear he's got other targets.<sup>4</sup>

>>> Holding the line

>>> Our campaign is working. Respectable companies don't want to be associated with Beck or support his show with their dollars. It's resulting in a major loss of funding for his show, and at the same time, it's making clear that Beck's race-baiting and fear-mongering are far outside the mainstream.

>>> The longer Beck stays isolated, the more of a problem he'll be for Fox, and the harder it will be for him to spread his lies and distortions. If we can keep the pressure on, Fox will have to make a choice: 1) drop Beck because it doesn't make business sense to keep him; or 2) communicate to the world that they're so intent on providing a platform for race-baiting and fear-mongering that they don't care if they lose money (a serious problem for a public company like News Corporation, the owner of Fox).

>>> More than ever, it's time to keep the pressure on. You can help by joining us in thanking the advertisers that have stopped supporting Glenn Beck, and calling on those whose ads are still running on his show to follow suit:

Tehenu / Ancient Libians

The Egyptians called the population of Libya and the land Tehenu. But since the Temehu were also referred to as "the Westerners", those who inhabited the area immediately west of the Nile, it becomes difficult to separate between the two Berber groups, so, the Egyptians did not always discriminate between the Temehu and the Berbers.

This kind of thing leaves you speechless..not surprised but speechless! There is a lot of fear among most racists now because they can sense a shift taking place and don't know what to think or feel so when you feel that things are slipping out of your control you respond out of anger! It's so sad for this poor man and my heart goes out to him. If the people of that city does not start speaking up and challenging this kind of brutality, it is going to continue. We are on our way to a race war which is going to get pretty bloody and I have to have faith that the one power, which is greater than man intervenes!!

No, Sister Mrs. Susan Rice is not related to Missy Coondollezza Rice! No way

Even if she was, the two are about as different as honey is to poisonous cyanide!

On many maps Kadesh is near Petra (below the dead/salt sea) in Jordan
On this wikipedia map.. if Qadesh = Kadesh... some one is in error?

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/File:Hitt\_Egypt\_Perseus.png

I know there are lots of locations with the same names and the same places often have multiple names.. is there anything in the text of the Egyptians to identify the actual place?

Does text from the Hittites and Egyptians both exist about this battle of Quedesh/Kadesh

There is a lot of info about the battle, in which hieroglyphic is it found?

EGYPT vs HITTITES

(The only Kadesh I can find is near Petra in Jordan, not Syria?)

I

n 1288 B. C. in the city of Kadesh in Syria. The Egyptians were led by Ramesses II.

The Hittites were forced to retreat to the safety of the city before they were surrounded on both sides by Egyptian troops. This was considered a great victory for the Egyptians, but it appears the Egyptians never took the city. They instead signed a peace treaty with the Hittites.

EGYPT VS SYRIANS

BATTLE OF MEGIDDO

In 1479 B.C., at the Battle of Megiddo, Pharaoh Tuthmosis III had over 20,000 men under his command to do battle against Syria's 15,000 man army. The Egyptians won the battle, capturing over two hundred chariots and two thousand horses from the defeated Syrians.

I am not sure where Kadesh and Meggido are. Too many contradictory maps. It will be important to establish the time line when the Egyptians were fighting all of these enemy when I get to the punch line.

Blacks in Mexico: A Forgotten Minority

By Alexis Okeowo / Yanga Tuesday, Sep. 15, 2009

Gaspar Yanga was a leader of a slave rebellion in Mexico during the early period of Spanish colonial rule

Anwar Vazquez

The first town of freed African slaves in the Americas is not exactly where you would expect to find it and it isn't exactly what you'd expect to find either. First, it's not in the United States.

Yanga, on Mexico's Gulf Coast, is a sleepy pueblito founded by its namesake, Gaspar Yanga, an African slave who led a rebellion against his Spanish colonial masters in the late 16th century and fought off attempts to retake the settlement. The second thing that is immediately evident to visitors who reach the town's rustic central plaza: there are virtually no blacks among the few hundred residents milling around the center of town.

Mirroring Mexico's history itself, most of Yanga's Afro-Mexican population has been pushed to neighboring rural villages that are notable primarily for their deep poverty and the strikingly dark skin of their inhabitants. Mexico's independence from Spain and new focus on building a national identity on the idea of mestizaje, or mixed race, drove African Mexicans into invisibility as leaders chose not to count them or assess their needs. Now many blacks want to fight back by improving the shoddy education and social services available to them and are petitioning for the constitution to recognize Afro-Mexicans as a separate ethnic group worthy of special consideration. (See graphics of slavery and the Americas.)

"The two races that are most discriminated against here are the blacks and the indigenous but it is more accepted against blacks," says Hemeregildo Fernandez, a doctor in Yanga and one of the few blacks still living in town. His office is tucked on a narrow street that juts off the main square, where the rotund man with warm brown skin and salt-and-pepper hair receives a fluctuating stream of patients. The majority of the black Mexican population works in agriculture, fishing or construction, and while, like Fernandez, some have achieved notable positions in coastal towns, he says, "Most blacks have no economic power."

Many of the country's mexicanos negros (black Mexicans), as they are called, know that their ancestors arrived in chains on boats that docked at ports in the sultry, steamy state of Veracruz. But they don't know much else. Indeed, Afro-Mexicans say that much of the history of los mexicanos negros is untaught or ignored by the rest of the country. Apart from Yanga, Afro-Mexicans claim Vicente Guerrero, who served briefly as President in the early 19th century and gave his name to the state of Guerrero, as one of their own, as well as revolutionary José Martí Morelos, who was executed by the Spaniards in 1815. (Read a story about an indigenous mother who might lose her child because she doesn't speak English.)

Black Mexican activists estimate the population of Afro-Mexicans at about 1 million, but there are no official figures. Earlier this year, they petitioned the National Institute of Statistics and Geography to include the Afro-Mexican population as a separate category in the next census, in 2010. Official statistics do not recognize blacks as a separate ethnic group (56 indigenous groups are officially accredited, the largest ones being the Nahuatl and the Maya, numbering more than 2 million each). As a result, Afro-Mexicans say they have been left out of institutional programs and are without a cultural identity. The group Mexico Negro A.C. is linking with similar Afro-descendant organizations in Latin America that have achieved success in securing better treatment. "We no longer want to be detained by security agents in our own country who say that in Mexico there are no blacks," says Rodolfo Prudente Dominguez, an activist with Mexico Negro.

The Afro-Mexicans face considerable hurdles. Prevailing stereotypes paint the group as happy to live the simple life apart from the rest of society, with no interest in education. The all-black shantytowns near Yanga lack schools, and eager young migrants who move to bigger cities for work complain of blatant discrimination. A report released late last year by Mexico's Congress said that roughly 200,000 black Mexicans who reside in the rural areas of Veracruz and Oaxaca and in tourist cities like Acapulco are out of the reach of social programs like employment support, health coverage, public education and food assistance.

Afro-Mexican culture expert Luz Maria Montiel acknowledges that blacks are particularly marginalized and excluded, to the point that it is impossible to find any mention of them in official records. Yet she argues that it is impractical for blacks to seek constitutional recognition. "It would be impossible to make a law for each of the populations that make up our multicultural nation," she says. Dominguez disagrees: "We are a totally different cultural group from indigenous groups and mestizos of our country, with a particular lifestyle and characteristics that do not respond to public policies that are designed for indigenous groups."

Date: Wednesday, September 23, 2009, 10:50 AM

There was a very important event at the City Council of Nairobi that was held yesterday, 22nd September 2009 and which was addressed by His Worship the Mayor Mr. Geoffrey Majiwa, the PS Performance Contracts Steering Committee Mr. Richard Ndubai, the Town Clerk Mr. Phillip Kisia and Mr. Odhiambo T Oketch, Chair to the Team of Evaluators. In attendance were the 2 Deputy Town Clerks Ms Jane Ndong'a and Mr. Abdi and the employees of the City Council of Nairobi.

We also had the entire team of Evaluators in attendance.

When people put in some positive efforts in their work, it is important to appreciate that effort. And this is what the Town Clerk convened the meeting for; to appreciate the positive efforts by some staff of the Council. And to encourage the Departments that did not perform so well to pull up their socks next time.

The City Council of Nairobi has been in the news for some of the bad news. These constitute a very small percentage of all the efforts being put in place. The sad reality is that we have a lot of effort that is very positive that is not being mentioned and that we have some of the best employees in public service at this house that is more often than not associated with acrobatics and side shows from the town fathers.

I want to believe that time has come when we must all join in as stake holders in our city and appreciate the good work that is being done. Let us compliment the good as we castigate the poor show. The irony is that the 6% that is bad overshadows the 94% that is good.

During the award ceremony for the best performers, City Treasurers Department took the coveted number. They were followed by Engineer, Audit, Inspectorate and Public Health Departments in that order. The rest struggled with the other numbers and it means that they must put in more efforts at service delivery to enable them join the top league next year.

In terms of personnel, special mention was made of the top six performers which I want to mention not in the awarded order; Nick Otieno, Eng G Kamau, Jackson Getahi, Dr Charles Wanyonyi, Daniel Kibet and Ekaya Ghonzour. These were the six top achievers with points of 80% and above. This is something that we must applaud and appreciate.

As residents of Nairobi, I want to believe that time has come for us to engage the Council and ensure that officers so employed to serve us deliver on that promise. It does not pay when we complain in a vacuum. Let us all come forward and be proud of our Council.

We live most of our lives here and if it stinks, let's say so. If it shines, let's proclaim it at the roof tops. By so doing, we will keep the sectional heads on their toes, and Nairobi will deservedly compete Singapore and the rest.

Bravo to the team at the City Hall; His Worship the Mayor, the Town Clerk and all the employees of the City Council of Nairobi.

Odhiambo T Oketch

It's so sad for this poor man and my heart goes out to him. If the people of that city does not start speaking up and challenging this kind of brutality, it is going to continue. Len Horowitz - Pandemic Charges
Filed With FBI In NYC
9-17-9

LOS ANGELES, CA -- Drug-industry investigators have uncovered documents exposing an international drug ring, operating from New York City , is behind the H1N1 swine flu fright and vaccination preparations.

Dr. Leonard G. Horowitz and Sherri Kane, an investigative journalist, have released evidence in legal affidavits that leaders of a private global biotechnology "trust" are behind the pandemic flu, including its origin and alleged prevention via vaccinations. Their documents, being sent by attorneys to the FBI this week, evidence industrialists are operating a crime ring within the "Partnership for New York City " (PNYC), and are behind the pandemic's creation, media persuasions, vaccination preparations, and health official promotions.

"David Rockefeller' s trust, that engages several powerful partners on Wall Street, including media moguls Ruppert Murdoch, Morton Zuckerman, Thomas Glocer, and former Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York , Jerry Speyer, are implicated in advancing global genocide," Dr. Horowitz wrote to FBI directors.

"This 'partnership' controls biotechnology research and development globally.

Health commerce internationally is also controlled virtually entirely by this trust that also exercises near complete control over mainstream media to promote/propagandize its products and services for the drug cartel's organized crime. This trust, in essence, makes or breaks medical and natural healing markets, primarily through the mass media companies and propaganda it wields for social engineering and market building," Dr. Horowitz wrote.

Among the revelations from the Horowitz-Kane research are those linking Larry Silverstein of Silverstein Properties, Inc., and the 9-11 terrorist attacks, to the drug cartel's geopolitical, economic, and population reduction activities. Mr. Silverstein, leaser of the World Trade Center who authorized to have Building-7 "pulled" [detonated] is a chief suspect in the "9-11 truth" investigation. Silverstein is currently landlord and co-partner in the biotechnology trust founded by David Rockefeller and implicated by these new discoveries.

Given the unprecedented nature and urgency of these findings, Dr. Horowitz has posted his affidavit for public review on FLUscam.com, hoping wide spread dissemination will prompt governments worldwide to cease mass vaccination preparations to avoid becoming accessories.

"The last time I contacted the FBI I warned them about the impending anthrax attacks one week before the first mailings were announced in the press," Dr. Horowitz recalled. "It took them 6 months to respond. When they did, they made me a suspect in the mailings. This time I am warning the Justice Department a month before the deadliest genocide in history.. I'm praying they'll take kindly to my appeal for a PNYC investigation, and Court-ordered injunction, to stop the vaccinations for public protection."

Phoenicia' [actually Canaanites]; and their trade routes... were located all over the known world...

.... the Phoenician trade and civilization had been passed on to other civilizations/cultures for centuries before...after Minoans..., Tyre, Mycenaean Greek, Doric Greeks, Athenian Greeks, Macedonian Greeks, and Romans...

///

So they would have reached Greece and encountered populations of Europeans.

In those centuries, they traded women like baseball cards. They even sold their own daughters. I can imagine such women would have been very exotic and very valuable.

Today it is illegal to introduce new species into countries that do not have them. We can see how the introduction of different races changed the face of America and Australia.

Not only would human trade have existed, but different crafts or different plant life.

In British exploration, one of the tasks was to bring back new plant life from different parts of the world.

It appears the Phoenicians would have been key players in spreading technology and different forms of life.

As for Phoenicians = Canaanites, there appeared to be an array of separate tribes of Canaanites. According to these maps, the Phoenicians spread far north of Canaan.

One thought is the Phoenicians as shown in those different areas were not tied together by one central government, but they were separate populations that lived by the sea?

Is there ever a central "KING/capital" ever identified for Phoenicians?

It appears the Phoenicians were interacting with the Egyptians before 3000 BC, if so they would have introduced new kind of species and inventions to and from Egypt.

Speculation based on imagination is entertaining, but I wonder if there are any physical evidence of any thing from Egypt carried to other parts of the world.

The greatest concentration of Phoenicians and origin appears to be between northern Syria to northern Canaan, along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea.

The colonies of the Phoenicians had one thing in common, they were all on islands or along the coast of the sea.

http://lh5.ggpht.com/\_rb3EfVqqMWI/Srufv\_XOfpI/AAAAAAAAEPs/38FpYd83ja8/Empire-Phonecian-a.jpg

Human, animal and plant life would have been swapped between the Egyptians and all places the Phoenicians traded. That is the way trade worked... another population having some thing you do not have (which has value), is swapped for something you have that is of value to them... supply and demand.

Did the Egyptians have a hieroglyphic spelling for Phoenicians that is different than that of Canaanites or did they use the same hieroglyphic spelling for all non Egyptians?

The large network of rivers that flow from the Mediterranean sea to north Egypt is the ideal path of traders and invaders.

In any Egyptian text that mentions any conflict with Phoenicians, are there any locations of battles/encounters, outside of Egypt?

I finally tracked down a copy of

Davies Great Speos Inscription

From The Journal of Egyptology Vol 32, 1946

The Deputy Director of The Egypt Exploration Society, sent the files to me, but I found a source I did not know about before.

I have seen web sites connected to JSTOR many times, but it meant nothing to me.

It appears that JSTOR is connected to an array of universities and Egyptology Societies
The catch is you must be a member of a university or an Egyptology Library connected to JSTOR

I suppose some of you have university connections. If you did not know what this "non profit organization, that digitalizes documents" and you want to do research like most of mine.. what some guy wrote on their web page, JSTOR appears to be a source to go to the horses mouth.

Davies Great Speos Inscription

We finally got high speed internet in our area, but I paid a year ahead on my dial up so I need to hold my breath.

With dial up, it took me about two hours to download

The 15 page pdf file .. and a 9.8 MB, jpg image of the sketch (Gardiner, Davies' Copy.jpg)

Until I ask the guy if it is ok, I won't share it.

You can find out how to obtain this file and other files from Egyptology Societies from JSTOR

support@jstor.org

In case you didn't know it, this and other Egyptology societies are supported by government grants and their information is public domain... I think

If a researcher is working from a sketch of a hieroglyphic that no longer exists, they will have to work for what that artist left behind.

Here I am guessing the horizontal lines .. means strike through or "I can't really be sure what this glyph is" ???

While the line numbers are essential, horizontal lines can and should be rendered to vertical lines if possible. It is a problem I never thought of before when creating standards, but even the horizontal lines can be kept in tact with a little additional lines in the program.

What % of hieroglyphic text is written horizontally?

The standard digital code would make research a snap, only if the Egyptology community adopts it.

=====

This is a hieroglyphic I have been told has a word that translates to "Asiatic" .

If every set of glyphs were given a 4 digit code assigned to it

- a) The transcriber could create that glyph by typing it's number and
- b) As each hieroglyphic source was typed into a data base, that digital code would be placed in that file.

Hypothetical a word took 3 glyphs 0157.0027.1002 (periods take the place of spaces)

If the standardized program read these numbers it would create the set of glyphs.

If a search for this word was placed in the standardized program, it could search thousands of hieroglyphic sources that had been entered into the data base and display the same word in it's context.

To understand the meaning Egyptians applied to words, seeing it in the context of different works would give more information as to what a set of hieroglyphics actually meant to the Egyptians.

If a word was thought to translate to the European word Asiatic and in a cross reference it was found the same word was applied to an Egyptian's brother and in another source, it was applied to another Egyptian's camel ... translators would rethink what the word actually meant.

If different translators looked at different sources of hieroglyphics and determined that a set of glyphs held the European meaning, Asiatic, they could cross reference their word with other sources which were believed to have that meaning.

How fast could one research for specific hieroglyphic text? Do a search on Google and see their search program finding a word or a phrase in a couple million web pages in a matter of seconds.

Assigning each glyph a standard 4 digit number is the key to do a super search on every hieroglyphic entered into a common data base.

Creating a standard set of fonts for all glyphs is the key to placing all transcribers on the same page and all future readers of hieroglyphics would have the ability to recognize which glyph they were looking at.

More about standard glyphs.. later

| 29979|2009-09-25 13:09:39|odhiambo okecth|Re: [NewVisionKenya] Re: Fw: City Council of Nairobi|

Doc,

Very positive comments, can we engage with more Kenyans on this. This input will be very valuable to some of us.

Last year, the City Council of Nairobi subjected their Departments to set achievable targets. This was contained in the performance contracts that they signed as Departments and as Sectional Heads.

We were hence called in to evaluate if this was achieved, and to determine proof of the same.

In our evaluation processes with the 16 Departments, all Sectional Heads appeared before us and in an interactive process, we looked at what they had done, the results achieved in relevance to the performance contracts that they signed, we visited sights to confirm doubts that we had, heard the challenges they faced in the course of their duty and in so doing, we also came up with our own informed opinion and gave recommendations.

This was an interactive process that aimed at looking and self assessing if the staff at the Council truly did what they had set for themselves to be done. We were not subjecting the staff to new matrix. But given that the Council has become this transparent, we must invite comments and suggestions from the general public so that this process can be enriched.

It is that interactive process with the public, the ultimate consumers of services by the Council, that will help drive Nairobi to being a destination of choice in the world. And this invites all our input as Nairobians.

Public Servants are being subjected to performance contracts in Kenya so that the public can gauge if they are truly working and delivering their side of the bargain. In performance contracting, achievable targets are set, and each officer must play his part for realization of the same.

When we were called in, some of us had very negative attitude about what the officers at City Hall do. In most cases, we have been associating the City Hall only with the kind of brawls that the press like giving coverage. The good work that the officers do is more often not given a mention in our local media and for this I will forever accuse the press. [in light touch, they are my friends].

Just a case in point, when councilors could not agree on the composition of the committee heads yesterday, the media was all over, for all the wrong reasons. It makes you think, are members of our media stations vultures only looking for carcasses. Yet, when the Council was appreciating their best Departments and their best performers, the media chose not to attend. How does this kind of information reach out to the public?

How do you engage the Council by only highlighting the 6% that is wrong, and basically not a function of the Departmental Deliveries. The Councilors are just busy bodies who fight for crumbs all the time. They form not part of the performance contracts by the employees, yet, they get all the media attention, again, for all the wrong reasons. {Editors, are you listening}. The Council employees do the work for which praise need be made.

Having seen and listened to the officers first hand, I want to invite all of us to have positive attitudes in our approach to the City Council. As you truly note, good work ought to be appreciated, and it is us, not anyone else, who will motivate and encourage these employees to stand up and be counted. But if it stinks, let us all shout.

Highlighting the brawls at the Council is not news anymore.

Oketch,

Would you share with us the evaluation criteria and the improvements they measured.

I ask for this reason: that improvement is relative and that attainment of ultimate standards should be the objective.

Example: back in my primary school, I came ahead in my school! I was the top student at CPE (that is what it was called in my time) but my marks were not good enough to give me a place in secondary school! It took me another try in the following year to pass with marks to enter secondary school!

Question: did those honoured at City Hall really reach the ultimate standard (equivalent to be admitted to secondary school) or did they lead, as I did but never got marks for secondary school.

That said, I like the awards in that they can generate friendly competition that can spur change and improvements.

Kind regards.

Invitation to programmers

Font entry by typing numbers

Interested in creating fonts AND have computer programming skills?

A great application for the creation of fonts... Hieroglyphics

The concept of translation is NOT the replacement of words, but the rendering information from one language to another.

In a translation, those who read/hear it, need no special training to understand the meaning. That is what is going on in Egyptology confusion (not translation)

Put this word in a sentence "aAmw", how many people do you know who would have a clue of it's intended meaning? Unless you have special training, you do not have a clue of the meaning of all that gobbly goop.

Creating words with the pronunciation of the ancient Egyptians?

Get a grip on it, no one on earth has a clue of what ancient Egyptian words sounded like. The people who make up these sounds and spellings are making up their own words, that do not exist in any modern language on earth.

If they stop wasting their time inventing their own language, they can use a common language, even "educated people" can understand.

=====

Translation is NOT an exact science. In hieroglyphics, there are many translations of the same text. There is still debate going on about the correct translation of The Rosette Stone.

Before getting to the translation part, let's start with TRANSCRIBING . Here I mean duplicating the glyphs in a hieroglyphic source, to a digital file.

http://lh4.ggpht.com/\_ayPPipCUNVY/SqP6nv-OC9I/AAAAAAAAAB2Y/MnhDi-HGUfK/glyph-numbers.jpg

Ancient Egyptian words are created out of a sequence of little pictures, like above, but some times, they are just little geometric symbols.

In our culture we only have 26 symbols to create our language. In hieroglyphics, they say there are over 2,500 glyphs?

I am guessing a fraction of the total are used in most hieroglyphic sources?

The number of glyphs is not important for the programmer who would work on the number to glyph phase.

=====

I never took any programming classes, but years ago I taught myself basic programming. There is a utility that let's you convert numbers to symbols... visible characters begin with 32

```
5 FOR R=100 TO 255
```

```
6 PRINT R;" ";CHR$(R);" ";
```

```
10 NEXT R
```

Results:

```

```

This is the ASCII code.

With similar programming, typing any number could produce any corresponding glyph.

This principal could be expanded to 200 or 10,000 glyphs. You type in the number and the corresponding glyph will be typed in the word processor.

The abstract words now used to represent a glyph is just confusing. It is as easy to remember 33=an owl, 222=a donkey or 1011 = a crown, as it would be to remember.

Bloop=an owl, hoptie =a donkey or wigwag= a crown. We are oriented with numbers, we do not need to create and learn a language from outer space in order an ancient language.

The numbers entered needs to be 4 digit numbers. The transcriber need not type all numbers, the data entry program could do that.

Type 1, 12 or 123 and I can create a program that will pad it with leading zeros

1- 0001, 12-0012, 123-0123

Punctuation or a space following a number is translated into meaning the end of that number, so the program adds the number of zeros to make it a 4 digit number.

All glyphs will have a corresponding 4 digit number. This is essential to create a universal data base.

Once a standard set of glyph fonts were created and each font was given it's own number, the next step would be the training of transcribers.

A transcriber being one who memorizes (and/or) has a quick reference to the number of a glyph.

Instead of drawing a duck, type in 213.. which becomes 0213

The glyph of the duck appears in the word processor and 0213 goes into the unseen file.

As the transcriber completes the source, the unseen file is filled with a series of 4 digit numbers. Any one with a program that reads that data, can load the simple ASCII data (numbers) and display the same glyphs in their own word processor...

To BOOT

ONCE any hieroglyphic source has been entered into the data base, it can be shared by researchers until the cows come home.. AND

Any researcher can search every glyph ever entered into the common data base for any key words or key phrases.

<http://lh4.ggpht.com/ayPPipCUNVY/SqP6nv-OC9I/AAAAAAAAAB2Y/MnhDi-HGUFk/glyph-numbers.jpg>

How would you spell duck in hieroglyphics.. 213, which would place the glyph of a duck in the word processor display. A lot of time it would be easier to type a number than to draw the glyph.

In this system as you typed the numbers the glyphs above would appear in the hieroglyphic word processor.

Unlike our system with 26 letters, it would take 50 key boards to be able to enter possible glyphs needed.. but if you could type a number and that number place the correct glyph in the word processor, you would be in business.

Can you write a computer program that lets you type in a particular font, by typing in a number?

Send me an e-mail if you are into the development of a hieroglyphic entry method.

Here is the group where I am talking to myself about such ideas, hoping some others interested in hieroglyphics will take the ball and run with it

President "Chavez " says : "Africa represents the heart of globe and we are part of that continent"

Caracas: 21. 9. 2009 - JANA

President Hugo Chavez of Venezuela said: (Africa is the heart of the globe and we are considered part of that continent).

In an interview yesterday in televised program in the capital Caracas added: (The freedom fighter " Simon Bolivar has said that Spain itself is no longer European country because African blood is flowing inside its veins).

Chavez sees that history testifies that civilization was born in the Black Continent and from there it expanded to the rest of world continents.
He stressed on the necessity that Venezuela should become a bridge linking South America with Africa.

The Venezuelan President expressed his hope that the coming second South America-Africa Summit due to convene in Venezuela would bring big results and that integration agreements will be signed between countries of both continents.

Black Press convention boycotts South Carolina

By NNPA | Last updated: Sep 24, 2009 - 10:47:49 AM

Printer Friendly Page

LOS ANGELES (NNPA) - The National Newspaper Publishers Association, the Black Press of America, has announced that it will not hold its mid-winter conference in South Carolina scheduled for January 2010. The organization of more than 200 Black-owned newspapers is joining the NAACP economic boycott of the state that has been in effect since July 1999 when the South Carolina NAACP called for it as a protest of the Confederate flag a symbol of racial hatred atop the State House and inside the House and Senate chambers. The boycott, still in effect, calls on groups and individuals to avoid traveling to the state for business or pleasure and discourages residents from visiting South Carolina beaches or patronizing restaurants and motels.

This announcement comes on the heels of South Carolina Republican Representative Joe Wilson's outburst of You lie! that broke decorum during President Barack Obama's address Sept. 9 to the Joint Houses of Congress on health care reform.

Rep. Wilson's outburst was viewed as ghastly by both Democrats and Republicans who refused to defend him.

As African-American newspaper publishers, we stand in solidarity with the NAACP and fully support the economic boycott of South Carolina, said NNPA Chairman Danny J. Bakewell, Sr. Rep. Wilson's remarks were racist, disrespectful, and a disingenuous violation not only of President Obama but to the institution of the presidency and only solidified our position and the importance in not spending Black dollars where Black people are not respected. The continued public and blatant disrespect of President Barack Obama by members of Congress will not be rewarded with our dollars nor will a state that continues to uphold America's shameful past by flying the Confederate flag.

The NNPA is currently considering North Carolina in lieu of its decision to boycott South Carolina. The group joins a host of other organizations and businesses that refuse to hold conventions or meetings in South Carolina.

Mr. Bakewell Sr., elected NNPA chairman in June, is executive publisher of the Los Angeles Sentinel, the largest and most read Black newspaper west of the Mississippi and owner of WBOK radio station in New Orleans, La.

Mr. Bakewell knows well the power of economic boycott. He is CEO of The Bakewell Company, one of the largest Black-owned development companies in the United States. The company is responsible for the development of more than one million square feet of retail space in predominantly Black communities, including Compton and South Central Los Angeles.

David Rohl is welcome to respond to my questions. People who write books have a bully pulpit, they can say what ever they want with out cross examination and their readers never get to see them avoid embarrassing questions.

There is no text from the mythical Hyksos, every bit of information used comes from the hieroglyphics or the bible.. I will be glad to respond to any source of your choice.

After beginning with every thing I could read I started dissecting the 'proofs' piece by piece.

I have added lots of images, so I divided my blog into one page at a time. That means when you get to the bottom of each page, you need to click on Newer Post to advance to the next post

In many ways, Lou Jing is a typical young Shanghainese woman. Pretty and confident, she speaks Mandarin heavily accented with the lilting tones of the Shanghai dialect and browses the malls of this huge city for the latest fashions.

But there is one thing that distinguishes this 20-year-old from her peers, something that has made her the unwitting focus of an intense public debate about what exactly it means to be Chinese: the color of her skin. Born to a Chinese mother and an African-American father whom she has never met, the theater student rocketed into the public consciousness last month when she took part in an American Idol-esque TV show, "Go! Oriental Angel." (See pictures of modern Shanghai.)

The marketing gurus for the series could hardly have dreamed of a better promotional gimmick when they started to investigate the backgrounds of the dozens of pop star wannabes to root out the competitors' mushy stories of triumph over adversity that are a well-worn staple of the genre. Here was a tale guaranteed to attract eyeballs - a girl of mixed race brought up by a single Chinese mother struggling to gain acceptance in a deeply conservative, some would say racist, society.

The strategy worked - perhaps too well. In August, Lou's appearance on the show not only boosted viewer numbers, but sparked an intense nationwide debate about the essential meaning of being "Chinese." Over the last month on Internet chat rooms, where modern China's sensitive issues are thrashed out by netizens long before they reach the heavily censored mainstream media, Lou's ethnicity has been the subject of a relentless barrage of criticism, some of it crudely racist. They think she should not have been allowed to compete on a Chinese show, or at least not to be selected to represent Shanghai in the national competition. She doesn't have fair skin, which is one of the most important factors for Chinese beauty. What's more, her mother and her biological father were never married. Morally, this kind of behavior shouldn't be publicized, so she shouldn't have been put on TV as a young "idol."

These kinds of posts on the most popular chat rooms have attracted thousands of comments. A few have been supportive of Lou, but the rest range from expressions of fear and ignorance to outright racism. One of the most popular posts about Lou Jing on the KDS Life forum asks in mock-seriousness: "Is it possible that she is Obama's daughter?" Another poster said: "I can't believe she's so shameless that she would go on TV." Most of the critics are agreed on one point - that this black woman cannot be regarded as a "real" Chinese.

As recently as the 1970s, foreigners were largely barred from living in China, let alone marrying a local. China does not easily accept mixed race children as "true-blooded" Chinese: As soon as a child is born, Chinese parents are required to register with the authorities as to which of the 56 government-approved ethnic groups their child belongs; there are no mixed-race categories. For her part, Lou feels she is very much Chinese. "When I meet somebody for the first time, they'd often ask me how I can speak Chinese so well, and I tell them 'Because I'm a Chinese, of course I can speak my mother-tongue well.'" Lou says defiantly. "I don't like to be treated differently."

As China undergoes an astonishing demographic shift and more foreigners make their homes in the Middle Kingdom, Lou is by no means the only one being treated differently. Recent decades have seen a surge in the number of mixed-race couples. According to the data offered by Shanghai Civil Affairs Bureau, from 1994 to 2008, each year, there are about 3,000 more mixed race marriages in Shanghai. But as the children of that first generation of mixed-race marriages now come of age, their moves to gain acceptance in society - like Lou's participation in the TV show - have exposed a deep-running vein of xenophobia in Chinese society. Last year, Ding Hui, a young man of African-Chinese ethnicity, caused a stir when he was called up to the national volleyball team, prompting much soul-searching about whether this athlete should be allowed to represent China alongside other 'pure-blooded' Chinese competitors. Eventually, Ding Hui did go on to play in the national team.

"As China continues to open up, this kind of phenomenon will become ever more prevalent," says David Zweig, a professor of Humanities & Social Sciences at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. "This is part of the process of internationalization, but we can only hope that Chinese people, including netizens and the people whose views tend towards extremism, can come to accept that there are many mixed-race people both in China and worldwide."

As for Lou, she found the whole experience more than a little disturbing. She did well in the show, ranking in the top 30 contestants before she was eliminated. Now she's back to her normal life as a college junior - with a little new insight into her home. "Through this competition, it's really scary to find out how the color of my skin can cause such a big controversy."

Dear Group,

I have heard that this beloved brother man is not of this world, that is, he is one or more or even all of the following three things:

A WALK-IN, a STARCHILD, or quite possibly the reincarnation of the 18th century liberator John Brown! Your guess is as good as mines!

All things aside, one thing is sure, make his movie CAPITALISM: A LOVE STORY A MUST SEE! If you miss it, do not blame little me or the devil!

'Capitalism' as Comedy and Tragedy Now Playing in NY and L.A.

Friday, September 25th, 2009

Friends,

The time has arrived for, as Time magazine called it, my "magnum opus." I only had a year of Latin when I was in high school, so I'm not quite sure what that means, but I think it's good. I've spent nearly two years on this new movie, "Capitalism: A Love Story," and have poured my heart and soul into this project. Many early critics and viewers have called it my "best film yet." That's a hard call for me to make as I'm proud of all of my films -- but I will tell you this: What you are about to see in "Capitalism" is going to stun you. It's going to make some of you angry and I believe it's going to give most of you a new sense of hope that we are going to turn the sick and twisted mess made by the last president around. Oh, and you're going to have a good laugh at the expense of all the banking and corporate criminals who've made out like bandits in the past year.

I'm gonna show you the stuff the nightly news will rarely show you. Ever meet a pilot for American Airlines on food stamps because his pay's been cut so low? Ever meet a judge who gets kickbacks for sending innocent kids to a private prison? Ever meet someone from the Wall Street Journal who bluntly states on camera that he doesn't much care for democracy and that capitalism should be our only ruling concern?

You'll meet all these guys in "Capitalism." You'll also meet a whistleblower who, with documents in hand, tells us about the million-dollar-plus sweetheart loans he approved for the head of Senate Banking Committee -- the very committee that was supposed to be regulating his lending institution! You'll hear from a bank regulator why Timothy Geithner has no business being our Treasury Secretary. And you'll learn, from the woman who heads up the congressional commission charged with keeping an eye on the bailout money, how Alan Greenspan & Co. schemed and connived the public into putting up their inflated valued homes as collateral -- thus causing the biggest foreclosure epidemic in our history.

There is now a foreclosure filed in the U.S. once every seven-and-half SECONDS.

None of this is an accident, and I name the names others seem to be afraid to name, the men who have ransacked the pensions of working people and plundered the future of our kids and grandkids. Somehow they thought they were going to get away with this, that we'd believe their Big Lie that this crash was caused by a bunch of low-income people who took out loans they couldn't afford. Much of the mainstream media bought this storyline. No wonder Wall Street thought they could pull this off.

Jeez, I guess they forgot about me and my crew. You'd think we would've made a better impression on these wealthy thieves by now. Guess not.

So here we come! It's all there, up on the silver screen, two hours of a tragicomedy crime story starring a bunch of vampires who just weren't satisfied with simply destroying Flint, Michigan -- they had to try and see if they could take down the whole damn country. So come see this cops and robbers movie! The robbers this time wear suits and ties, and the cops -- well, if you're willing to accept a guy in a ballcap with a high school education as a stand-in until the real deal shows up to haul 'em away, then I humbly request your presence at your local cinema this weekend in New York and Los Angeles (and next Friday, October 2nd, all across America).

In the meantime, you can catch us on some of the TV shows that have been brave enough to let me on in the past week or so:

- Nightline (as we take a stroll down Wall Street to Goldman Sachs)
- Good Morning America (where they let me talk about Disney employees who don't get medical benefits)
- The View (where the Republican co-host told everyone to go see it! Whoa!)
- The Colbert Report (this guy is a genius, seriously)
- Larry King (where a spokesperson for the Senator who got the sweetheart loans responds for the first time)
- Keith Olberman (where we both wonder just how long these media corps are going to let us get away with what we do)
- Wolf Blitzer (yes, he's back for more abuse - and lovin' it)

... And the amazing Jay Leno. This man called me after seeing the movie and asked me to be his only in-studio guest on the second night of his new prime-time show. I said, "Jay, shouldn't you be thinking of your ratings in the first week of the show? Are you sure you didn't misdial Tom Hanks' number (the area code where I live is 231; 213 is LA)?" He told me he was profoundly moved by this film. So I was the guest on his second show, and he told all of America it was my "best film" and to please go see "Capitalism: A Love Story." That was Jay Leno saying that, not Noam Chomsky or Jane Fonda (both of whom I love dearly). The audience responded enthusiastically and, after 20 years of filmmaking, it was a moment where I crossed over deep into the mainstream of middle America. Jay's bosses at General Electric musta been... well, let's just say I hope they didn't place a reprimand in his permanent record. He's one helluva guy (and following the example he set with his free concerts for the unemployed in Michigan and Ohio last spring, I've gotten permission from the studio to do the same with my film in ten of the hardest-hit cities in the U.S. next week).

Oh, and he made me sing! Prepare yourself!

Thanks everyone -- and see you at the movies!

HE MyK IN A NUTSHELL. Posted by uwagboe ogieva at 11:00 AM on September 16,

Now Diaspora Africans have uniform culture, traditions and spirituality with continental Africans.

Religion is perhaps the most potent binding force there is. In fact, there is no other binding as potent and total. It encompasses a peoples outlook, traditions, culture and philosophy of The food we eat and how we prepare it, our manner of dressing, the names we bear, the w speak or rear our children and our attitude to life generally are controlled by our religions. because of public persecution and the mental and psychological damage we have suffered result of slavery and colonialism, we are ashamed to flaunt what is ours. We hide our nati essence behind the popular alien ones.

Every conquering religion claims superiority over those before it and that life began with its advent. Without destroying what is on the ground there is no space for the new religion to begin to breathe and expand. After 2,000 years of Christianity and 1,500 years of Islam, they remain the minority religions of the world compared with their older spiritual movements in Asia and China. Christianity and Islam draw a significant chunk of their membership from conquered people, especially from Blacks. So, they are religions of coercion rather than of freewill, and that makes them even more irrelevant and less spiritual.

We as a group, are the most bastardized of people on earth by foreign religions and ideas. Our masters baby religions take away our human essence, values, and worth, by insisting that our native attributes are evil, primitive, and irrelevant. If we marry in our traditional way, it is barbaric and uncivilized. Our burial rites are savage and ungodly.

Our history began with our enslavement and colonization, and our IQ is lower than that of the Chimpanzee. So we openly throw away our African traditions to aspire to the benefits of our masters superior ways of life. We bleach, hot-comb our hair, answer our oppressors names, and aspire to speak, think, and dress like them.

Now we are neither White nor Black. If anything, we are half Arab or White and half Black, and we are confused because we cannot progress as a people until we decide who we want to be. And if we choose to become fully Arab or Caucasian, are we acceptable to them?

We cannot pull ourselves out of our pains through foreign religions that disrespect our humanity, contributions, and largely treat us as lower than wild animals. To move up, we must demolish what is holding us down. That is why the truth about spirituality is being exposed now and through Africa, the cradle from where life began.

For every race or group of people, there must be a messenger or diviner. Every race or group of people must have a guide, a spiritual rallying point, a center of gravity that holds its children together before it can begin to impact on the worlds civilization. Buddha was there for the Indians, Moses for the Jews, Confucius for the Chinese, Christ in myth for the Caucasians, and Mohammed for the Arabs. Claiming that these religious leaders were Africans does not make the religions they carefully tailored for other cultures and traditions relevant to Africans.

One uniform body of spirituality must be introduced throughout the African world and installed at the national level of every Black and African State to replace secularism and foreign religions. We as a people desperately need a common spirituality, a code of ethics and discipline now. Unfortunately, our ancestors belief systems were usurped, doctored, and cannibalized by other racial groups to suppress and enslave us en-mass. We must re-claim and re-Africanize our long lost, or hidden from us spiritual body of ideas, to suit our purpose and empower and fruitfully propel our collective dreams.

To arrive at a common spiritual platform, we have welded together a microcosm of African spiritual systems, with the Mystery System, which is totally African and the mother of all the religions of the world, as the base. We called what we arrived at, Mhuri ye Kutanga (Myk), or (The Cradle family), meaning the first, the original, because we were the only race on earth at the dawn of human history. The Myk is an open, friendly, cosmology, founded on respect for observable truth and logic. The deity of the supreme cosmology is honesty and truth. Anyone who can achieve this state of being, deserves to be, and is, in fact, a god in partnership with other gods in the affairs of humanity.

The ultimate human saint is the virtuous soul without the compelling fear of hell. The perfect master and examples abound, Buddha, Confucius, Fuhi, and the Dalai Lama to name a few.

Ifa tells us that:

Honest people in the world

are less than 20

fraudulent ones are more than 1200

but the day of reckoning

is not for ever,

that makes the pain bearable.

What this verse means is that no more than a few people have achieved the supreme state of honesty and truth in the world but we are determined to push the frontiers to accommodate the entire African race. Honesty and truth are the other names for science, and Teilhard de Chardin, in Mans place in Nature ? Collins 1966, tells us that the religion of tomorrow would be a beautiful thing and would put its trust in science. The Myk is that cosmology of tomorrow, today, from yesterday.

This Ifa verse captures our pre-occupation with honesty and truth:

I do good always

I am honest and do no evil

neither do I harbour evil thoughts

lest I die wretched

because whatever habits

are inculcated early in life persists till old age.

The obstacles to maintaining the state of moral piety are recognized in the following Ifa verse:

Let us view it from the front

let us view it from the rear

a straight road has no curve

these are the aliases of the

Ifa priests that divined

for the Big lie.

The Big lie was descending

from heaven to earth

(how to survive and flourish on earth

was what the Big lie requested at divination)

The Big lie was asked to perform sacrifices

it did

the Big lie came to earth

all attempts to eliminate the Big lie failed.

The Big lie also became a Historian.

In other words, the Big lie has also made the ultimate sacrifices to exist and survive on earth compounding the free will of humans. Unfortunately, the veracity of lie is that:

When you tell a lie
you need seven other lies
to sustain that lie.

The African people of the world must gradually lead the world back to its original glorious path of virtuous civilization terminated abruptly some two thousand five hundred years ago by Yahweh, and two thousand years ago by the West taking their cue from Yahweh. We must return to Anu. We must bring back the Ausarian (coined from Ausar) spirituality and principle of world development, which is the original and ultimate form of civilization. This is democracy based on the tripod principles of African communalism, with the Myk as the binding force, under the protective authority of the Almighty Tu-SoS, the One Source, the Uncreated Creator, the Boundless.

One of the oldest Ifa verses says:

A heavy rainfall is imminent
the river will soon be at high tide
everybody is heading home
elders of a foreign religion contemplate the new development
they discover it is not favourable to them they shave their heads and let their mustache and beard grow in mourning
These are the aliases of the Ifa priests that divined for the Cradle
which is the Godhead of all the Gods?
the father is the Cradle
the mother is the Cradle

the personal intellect is the Cradle

the sacred worship is the Cradle

the Cradle is the first before deified humans.

All African dominated governments of the world are to adopt the Ausarian concept of government. Political parties based on the Ausarian concept are to be formed to take over their national governments from their current Setian (coined from Set or Seth or Satan), control. All Africans, must stop serving the usurping extraterrestrial deity that has declared war on them and return to Anu, and through Anu to Tu-SoS, the One and only Source of Spirituality, for their salvation.

Within a sea of evil, an oasis of good can be created that can steadily grow in concentric circles to eventually and totally overwhelm the evil. The speed at which the concentric circles grow would depend on the dedication of members and the strength of their spirituality. It might make slow progress initially because of possible opposition from the oppressive status quo. It will eventually develop its own momentum and speed that cannot be reversed by anyone from within or without.

We are Africans and we are Pagans as they call us and we are back. Whether in Africa or the Diaspora, we are a special breed of people. Our Pagan ancestors created all the religious myths that rule the world today. They pioneered civilization and we are proud of them all. The blood of Ausar, Auset, Imhotep, Chaka, Nzingha, Nehenda, Prempeh, Toure, Hannibal, Lortie, Truth, Douglas, Shadd, Tubman, Kuzwayo, Marcus Garvey, DuBois, Azikiwe, Nkrumah, Kenyatta, C.L.R. James, Padmore, Albertina, Martin Luther King, Malcolm X and Mandela runs in our veins.

The generic name for what the world calls Paganism, or African traditional religions, or faiths, from now on is: Mhuri ye Kutanga: a Cosmology or System. Mhuri ye Kutanga, abbreviated as Myk, are Shona, Zimbabwe, words for the Cradle family. Myk or Paganism, spelt with the capital letter P, means the ground, the source, the origin, the first, the foundation, of all cosmologies, all religions and all spiritualities. Mhuri ye Kutanga in Yoruba dialect is Egbe Iwase. Every Yoruba person is, therefore, Omo elebi Iwase. All African dialects with words for Mhuri ye Kutanga could use their words to describe their spirituality.

The Myk is one of the largest spiritual groups in the world and, of course, the most vibrant and potent. It began to spread around the world with the shipment of the first slaves from Africa in 1510 CE. The areas that provided the greatest number of slaves were the Senegal River basin, the Guinea Coast including Gold Coast and Dahomey, and the Niger Delta or the Bight of Benin. Towards the end of the trade, several cargoes of slaves were shipped from the mouth and central regions of the Congo. Diaspora Africans are the proudest adherents of the ancient African religions in the world. They are in their millions in Antigua, Barbados, Brazil, Cuba, Dominica, Dutch Guiana, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, St. Kitts, St. Lucia, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, North America, Britain, France, Portugal, and so on.

The Maroons are particularly unique religious communities in the Diaspora, enjoying a relationship with host countries like Jamaica, that almost rivals that of the Vatican with Italy. The Maroons do not pay taxes to Jamaica and they hold their own courts. They are members of the Myk. Rastafarianism, which has been growing in leaps and bounds around the world, is a vibrant African spiritual veneer and a member of the Myk. Godianism and all the other lively modern variants of African spirituality belong to the Myk.

Diaspora Africans call their spiritual faiths names such as: Whydah, Fantee, Eboe, Voodoo, Ketu, Orishe, Oyo, Gege, Egba, Jesha, which generally signify the communities the slaves originated from in Africa. The Catholic Churches in many South American Black communities have blended with the African faiths by adopting and matching African Gods with theirs. For example, there are three Eshus as follows: St. Peter who is the elder, St. Anthony the younger and St George who is the third Eshu.

Ogun also has three variations as follows: (Olira, Meji, Medye). Oya or Iyansan is St. Barbara. Aganju or Shango the younger is St. Michael the Archangel, Ogodo or Shango the elder is St. Jerome and Shango Dada is St. John. Ode is St. Onofre, Oshun Panda is Nossa Senbora de Concelcao and Oshun Doko is Our lady of the Rosary. Beji is Sts. Comas and Damien, Orunmila is St. Joseph and Yemoja is the Holy Ghost (or Divino Espirito Santo). Olofin is the equivalent of Olodumare in Poro Alegre, for instance, and is described as the father of all. Olofin is a being who lives in the spheres and has no initiates. He is the true God and does not concern himself with man.

Divination to foretell the dictates of fate and reveal the wishes of the Gods, in the Diaspora, like in Africa, entails: (1) the throwing of the kpele or chain of shells. (2) The throwing of cowry shells and (3) water gazing. Diaspora Africans largely use their spiritual powers for self-survival and enhancement. The Yoruba segment of African faiths is widespread in the Diaspora with thousands of white adherents, including in the USA. There are several white priests of the African faiths too. A great deal of university research work on African spirituality has amassed world wide.

The hush-hush about African spirituality happens only on the African continent, (except in Benin Republic), and this is because of the hypocrisy of African leaders who worship alien Gods in daylight and African Gods at night. When Oba Onirun of Irun Akoko in Ondo State, Nigeria, claimed in an interview published in the Saturday Sun of 22 March, 2003, to have converted the Ooni of Ife to the Christian faith, the Onirun exposed his fakeness and ignorance. African traditional stools derive their reverence, relevance and authority, primarily from traditional African faiths.

What most Africans do not know is that the Ooni of Ife is the equivalent of the Catholic Pope, in the world's Orisha Movement. Millions of Orisha followers from Brazil to Cuba, Trinidad, Guyana, Aruba, Jamaica, etc., regard the Ooni as a God. A few years ago, during the Ifa bi-yearly carnival in Brazil, (attended by thousands of people from around the world), which the Ooni attends religiously as the head, he was told of the drought in the area. The Ooni, who normally would not remove his cap in public, removed it briefly, and assured his subjects that there would be rain shortly. Before the entourage got to the venue of the ceremony, heavy rain descended on the community.

Yoruba Gods include Shango for thunder, Olokun for water and fertility, Eshu for devil, Obatala the creator and framer of the human body in the womb, Yemoja queen of the water, Egungun masquerade and messenger, Oshun for water, Ogun for iron, Shonono for smallpox curse. Obaluaye and Oro are messengers. Orunmila is wisdom, messenger and the complimentary title for Ifa. Heaven knows who shall be saved and Ifa gets its message from Orunmila. Olodunare in Yoruba mythology is the Almighty Tu-SoS, whose sixteen ministers serve as intermediaries between Tu-SoS and mortals, because (Tu-SoS), Olodumare, is too great and remote. The ministers include Orunmila, Obatala, Ogun, and Shango (Jakuta), just like the attributes of the Sefiroth of the Jews.

All African Gods have been assigned a number of creative projects to supervise and nurture to success by the Myk. For example, Olokun is the Goddess of beauty, arts, culture, poetry, love, marriage, femininity and fertility. Orunmila is the God of wisdom, scholarship and education. Obatala is the God of creativity. Shango is the God of lightening, masculinity, fearlessness and hard work. Ogun is the God of Iron and technology.

A one-week long Festival of the Gods would take place annually in honour of the relevant African Gods at the Menephtheion, to bring together the leading artistes, scholars and entrepreneurs (Black and white), from around the world in the following disciplines:

? Fashion/Cosmetics/ Hairdressing and styles

? Painting/Sculpting/ Crafts

? Poetry/Writing

? Film/Theatre/ Video

? Music

? Dance/Comedy

? Spiritual (incorporating the annual pilgrimage)

The Menephtheion (meaning): the mind of the African world, co-ordinates the thinking, focus and actions of the entire Black race. The Menephtheion is the international headquarters of the Pan African Movement and the spiritual heartbeat of the African race. The Menephtheion, in fact, is to the Black world, what the Vatican is to the Roman Catholic Church. It is the seat of all the African Gods in homage to Tu-SoS.

All the leading thinkers of the African race, in or out of the citadels of learning are entitled to apply to come on board of Muses through self and or third party recommendations and nominations. Send your resume and previously (published or not) original piece of writing or research work in any field of knowledge, aimed at solving any of our problems uniquely, and moving us forward collectively as a race.

The board of Muses of the African race meets once a year to review the Black Agenda and scrupulously vet applications received and those admitted into the board are honoured at a special annual ceremony and become entitled to use the title: Muse of the Menephtheion or the Muse before or after name or mm. letters as qualification) and to participate at the Congress of Muses of the African race.

Myk welds all African spiritual movements, (Edo, Igbo, Zulu, Yoruba, Ashanti, Shona, Gelede etc) together for the first time as the Myk, using our ancient Mystery System of Egypt as the heart. The Myk is, in fact, the ultimate cosmology of the world, humans highest level of science, and the repository of comprehensive knowledge of the cosmos and, therefore, of humanity and creation. The Myk is preoccupied with truth, justice, scholarship and honesty. It is the microcosm of the best of the entire African spiritual firmament and its unifying deity is science and verifiable logic. In other words, members worship intellect and scholarship. Our one and final source of spiritual energy is TUSOS, written as Tu-SoS (meaning The Ultimate or Universal or Unlimited Source of Spirituality) , and known to Africans variously as Olodumare, Osanobua, Chukwu, and does not call for or require worship, and is not worshipped anywhere in the world.

Our focus is to raise members self-help efforts to an art through individual involvement, intellect and unity. Our ambition is individual membership involvement and material and spiritual success. Our message is that no individual is alone; we are who we are because we are members of a family, community, society and race. There is no conceited economic baron or leader among us. No competition between members, only love and sharing of our pains and fortunes collectively and honestly.

We love our ancestors because they gave us life. Our one name for our ancestors is Ausar. We love humanity because we are all from the same womb. Working patiently and assiduously, we hope to use our collective goodwill, abundant physical energy, enthusiasm for hard work, our widows mite and love of goodness and truth to build a fortress of virtue and success. This in time would be a magnet on its own to install the ultimate New World Order of virtuous civilization.

The Myk is not interested in the idle activities of waiting for the return of a Messiah or praying endlessly, which both imply attempts to avoid direct responsibility for one's actions and self. It is strong on self-empowerment, enlightenment, enrichment, invocation, and the organization of often latent energy to enable the individual excel. It is not fetish but rational, philosophical, pragmatic, and is uncluttered with senseless restrictions. It is lively and boisterous in celebration of the purest essence of life. It is the binding cosmology of our race, and it is not negotiable because before we became Christians or Muslims etc, we were Black and African, and the Myk represents this peculiar essence in all of us. It represents our souls as a unique people.

There is a physical and a spiritual nature to man. What tends to happen in real life is that we concentrate all our energies on fulfilling our physical to the detriment of our spiritual needs. In our quests for survival, we crave very hard for material things until such become insatiable and yet our lives remain dodged by all sorts of fear. The fear of losing our properties, loved ones and of dying so soon our selves. We have material comfort and still we remain unfulfilled. Most religions (including Christianity and Islam), insist that we give up material quest for spiritual peace to reign. Even then, pains have refused to abate in the world.

African spirituality believes that we can keep our wealth and be free from fear at the same time. That our spiritual and physical nature can be synchronized. That the synchronization requires conscious individual rather than group efforts that demand unforced, clean, virtuous and wholesome spirit, fasting and healthy eating regime, abstinence from injurious, life-threatening habits, and strong devotion to individual meditation. There is nothing mysterious about this. You must be a good person at heart and in spirit. You must eat well and fast now and again.

You must meditate at a given time daily by yourself and you must work very hard at your career or profession. And if you follow our rather simple spiritual regime under close supervision of one of our seers, you would in no time lose all your fears and as you grow in the Myk spirituality you would begin to acquire the power of the Gods and a significant measure of control over your material and spiritual destiny. When one is called a member of the Myk, it means the person is holistically focused and is a strong pillar of strength in society. A Myk member is mentally stable and reliable, morally disciplined and upright, and is invariably a great family person. The Myk member is a lover of knowledge and an avid reader. Nothing is taboo to read to expand the members mind and spiritual horizon. Like kabbalism, the Myk is a tightly knit family group, influential and directly or indirectly controlling a good chunk of local resources by virtue of hard work. Myk members, therefore, love hard work and hate being idle. They believe nothing comes easy so they put in everything they have, energy, brains and resources to excel.

Members meeting place is called the Nwanzo or Myk or Cradle (or any other appropriate name in native dialect for the Cradle), just as the Church is to Christians. Members gather at the Nwanzo on a Sunday (the ancient African feast day), in a boisterous, lively, social gathering and co-operative society-like atmosphere. Nwanzo branches can add peculiar local flair and embellishments to their merry-making to capture strong community ethos. The gathering is called AFEFE (meaning the wind that soothes and caresses), and is laced with happy revelry, suffused with drumming, singing and dancing.

A major event of the day is a lecture by a special guest of honour who may or may not be a member of the Myk but who is knowledgeable, or an expert in his field of lecture. The opportunity is used to invite scholars, important people in the community, government, or commerce, to educate the Myk members on the latest issues and debates as they affect their well-being. Every lecture must leave the audience better informed and grateful for attending. A short question and answer session is encouraged after the speakers presentation.

After the lecture session, the congregation transforms into Mjane Msaada community empowerment parliament to set up projects, make levies, assign jobs and receive reports, on what have been accomplished. Mjane Msaada requires every member of the Myk branch to contribute an agreed levy weekly, (could be fifty, or a hundred or more units of the local currency), into a pool called Mjane Msaada, which the Myk branch builds up to finance projects. Members contributions are compulsory. So, why pay tithes, thanksgiving, etc., to enrich Priests and Alfas, when you could invest all that money in yourself in the Myk?

A well run Myk is expected to become a successful, efficient and highly respected hub of social, spiritual, cultural, political, intellectual and economic activities in its community within a short time. Three to five years at the most, buying up manufacturing companies, large farms, housing estates for members, office complexes to let, schools, investing in the stock exchange etc., and turning members into millionaires and business tycoons. Members are entitled to receive priority employment advantage in their Myk businesses as long as the applicants are qualified for the jobs.

Every race has her spiritual base. The Caucasians, Rome and Jerusalem; Arabs, Mecca, and are making millions of dollars from thousands of Africans spiritual tourists and pilgrims yearly.

African Spiritual Summit and Pilgrimage, ASSAP, is an annual event, and takes off on Ausers birthday of 25th December of every year. The first ASSAP is planned for 2010 in Nigeria. ASSAP brings together all the spiritual tendencies and movements of the African race in celebration of the mother spirituality of the world, our oneness and triumph as a people, and to pay homage to our illustrious ancestors. ASSAP celebrates the family unity of all the children of Africa, from Cuba, Jamaica, Antigua, Barbados, Brazil, Guyana, Zimbabwe, Europe, USA, Australia, Ghana, South Africa, Nigeria etc. ASSAP is to the African race, what the annual pilgrimage to Mecca is to the Arabs, or to Jerusalem is to the Christians.

With the coming on stream of the African Union (AU), the political sting of the irregular Pan African Congresses of the Pan African Movement has now become largely cosmetic. ASSAP replaces the Pan African Congresses from the 8th Congress, to provide the spiritual anchor and propelling force for Black unity and ascendance. All future Pan-African Congresses would be known as ASSAP, or the Pagans pilgrimage. The African Union (AU), despite its constitutional and operational weaknesses, has considerably diluted the political importance of the Pan-African Congresses and almost rendered them irrelevant. ASSAP would concentrate on the areas of comparative advantage, which is spiritual, and through moral persuasion, discipline and scholarship, maintain a vibrant lobby on the AU, to ensure comprehensive, fused, and focused, self-fulfilment, advancement, and ascendance, of the entire African race. The African Union (AU) is to be lobbied, to be strengthened, to take care of the political aspirations of the entire Black race, while the Pan-African Movement, known now too as the African Peoples Union (APU), concentrates on the spiritual through the Myk.

Every Black person in the world, every Myk member must perform ASSAP the Pagans pilgrimage, at least, once in a lifetime. The seven-day long pilgrimage, involves meetings of leaders on 25 and 26 December. The Pagans revelry is from December 27-31 incorporating ceremonies, cultural events, exhibitions, seminars, spiritual home coming rituals, offers of reverences, and a mammoth carnival procession of African Gods as never before witnessed in the world. Each pilgrim ritually slaughters a goat to the spirits of our ancestors during the pilgrimage week. Every male who has performed the pilgrimage is entitled to use the title Azah (or Azahaaze in full) before name. Female counterparts use the title: Azinii (or Aziniida in full) before name. Both titles mean spiritually cleansed. ASSAP is expected to grow into one of the biggest, liveliest, spiritually fulfilling, most attractive cultural, intellectual, commercial and tourists events and destinations in the world.

Calabar or Badagry in Nigeria would serve as the dream venue and permanent site for the annual African Pilgrimage experience. Calabar has a vibrant spiritual culture and strong physical memory. It was a major seaport for slavery, providing access to slaves from the interior of Africa. In fact, 27% of all African slaves went through the Calabar port, whereas Ghana, Senegal and the Gambia combined, had only 10%.

Several cities and a combination of venues are being developed as additional pilgrimage points inside or outside the Calabar experience in Nigeria and include: the Ogun shrine, the Yemoja festival in Oshogbo and the Oro festival in Ogun state. The Igwe festival in Benin City and the Sukur kingdom mountain in Maiduguri. The Kerengwa water falls in Nasarawa with its therapeutic health benefits. Nasarawa also provides the opportunity to visit the God of the Sun at home.

If you are Black, regardless of where you may be living in the world right now, you are an African and a Pagan because Paganism means the cradle, the origin, the first, and the first is the best in any language. Reformed Paganism is the leading spirituality of the world. It makes things happen. It commands and controls the elements. It is pre-occupied with the collective triumph of the human race. Join us and let us spoil you with love, caring and brotherhood as only the African knows how. We invite you, we invite all Black people of the world, all Africans of goodwill, all artistes, scholars, entrepreneurs and custodians of African spiritual faiths, cultures and traditions, to come and celebrate excellence in spirituality with us.

If you are African and Black join the potentially one billion members strong Pagans revolt. We are taking back our leadership of the world from where our ancestors were pushed off inelegantly some 2000 years ago.

Lets colonize the world with our Pagan walk, Pagan songs, Pagan dance, Pagan fashion, Pagan science, Pagan technology, Pagan creativity, Pagan business acumen, Pagan scholarship, Pagan spirituality, Pagan everything. Join us to start the most thorough, most ennobling, most comprehensive, most profound revolution in human history, the Pagans revolt.

We were privileged to host Mr. Steven Oundo, Chairman Architectural Association of Kenya and Mr, Juma Assiago, Human Settlements Officer at UN Habitat at KCDN today 26th September 2009. They were accompanied by Mr. Reginald Okumu, former Chairman Institution of the Surveyors of Kenya, Mr. Dismas Mokua, of Tribe Kenya Initiative, Violet and Mr. Boniface Juma from Lumumba.

The team then went to the Komarock Canal and Mr Oundo, Mr Assiago, Violet and Mr. Juma planted trees in support of the ongoing Environmental Campaign.

With the technical support from Mr. Oundo and Mr. Assiago, our dream of creating an Arboretum in partnership with Total Kenya Ltd [Eco Challenge] and the City Council of Nairobi will come to fruition. It is our belief that such partnerships between the people, corporates and Government is the way to go to enable us achieve Vision 2030.

Peace

I'm trying to understand the context of this excerpt. What is the whole article in of itself about? Is the author trying to assert that the name rina, jina or lina is a result, during the alleged proto-Bantu stage, from the Chadic speakers? Or is the beef with the fact that the author mentioned the cognation with the Nilo-Saharan and Chadic but didn't explore why the Nilo-Saharan, Chadic, Egyptian and Bantu would share the same name for "name?"

All I can say at this point is what Welmers has hypothesized about the origins of Niger-Congo and that would in turn explain its shared usage.

Wm. E. Welmers. 1971 "Niger-Congo, Mande" in T.A. Sebeok, et al. eds. Linguistics in sub-Saharan Africa (Current Trends in Linguistics, 7), pp. 113-140 The Hague: Mouton

P 119-120. By way of conclusion to this general overview of the Mande languages, a bit of judicious speculation about Mande origins and migrations may not be out of order. It has already been stated that the Mande languages clearly represent the earliest offshoot from the parent Niger-Congo stocknot counting Kordofanian, which Greenberg considers parallel to all of the Niger-Congo, forming a Niger-Kordofanian macrofamily. An original Niger-Congo homeland in the general vicinity of the upper Nile valley is probably as good a hypothesis as any. From such a homeland, a westward Mande migration may have begun well over 5000 years ago. Perhaps the earliest division within this group resulted in the isolation of what is now represented only by Bobo-fing. Somewhat later perhaps 3500 to 4500 years ago, and possibly from a new homeland around northern Dahomey [now Benin] the ancestors of the present Northern-western Mande peoples began pushing farther west, ultimately reaching their present homeland in the grasslands and forests of West Africa. This was followed by a gradual spread of the Southern-Eastern division, culminating perhaps 2000 years ago in the separation of its to branches and the ultimate movement of Southern Mande peoples southeast and westward until Mano and Kpelle, long separated, became once more contiguous.

Subject: [Ta_Seti] How to play down Bantu

Asar.

Here is an article I acquired from the Mero discussion group. Notice how the playing down of Bantu-Niger Congo language is portrayed in favour of other languages even when the root do not match the consonants. Incidentally the Arabic word Jin, an evil spirit must be derived from the word for name. As you know Obenga showed that Bantu used Rina, Lina, Jina for name. Perhaps you could add from your end Niger-Congo's connections with the name of a person.

rn, name (Wb 425,1-428,19) , one of the soul elements of the Egyptian personality, coptic :

ran (SB), ren (ALM), len (F), rin (P), absolutely distinct of Berber : ism, pl. ismawen,

Arab : ism (W.Vychichl, 1983, 176) and Western Chadic :

angas-sura : *__m, name, angas: sm, name, fame, sura, goemy: sum, mupun : s_m, name, honor (G.Takacs, 2004, 338), proto-Ron : *sum.

Proto-Nilotic : ka-Rin, Western Nilotic (luo, nweer, shilluk) : *rin, the name, dinka : rin, name, reputation.

West Chadic, angas-sura : *rin, shadow, spirit, as an element of the personality, distinct of *__m, name, honor, fame, mupun: riin, shadow of person, spirit, karekare : rini, shadow, ones

senses thinking clearly (G.Takacs, Comparative Dictionary of the Angas-Sura languages, 2004, 310). Bokkos: rin, spirit.

The angas-sura and the bokkos (Ron family) share the root *s-m, name with

Berber and Semitic, and move in a Benoue-

Congo linguistic environment. So, its noteworthy that angas-sura and bokkos use the Nilotic root with the meaning of spirits. It may

<sup>5</sup> Notice the lack of semantic and phonetic correspondences of the Bantu root for name (PB Guthrie *g□, variante *jina) with the Chadic one. However, because of the dynamics of languages contacts, the Western Chadic sha : ayin, name, as its meaning suggests, comes from the Benoue-Congo vocabulary (Tapshin (Nigerian Plateau) : kyin, Pe : ti-yin, PJ *gyin, name (cf. R.Blench), while the name of the tongue, di-les, comes in Fyem from the Chadic Ron languages (Chadic : *les, angas-sura : *lis, Egyptian : ns, represented by the pastoral hieroglyph of a bovine tongue, Coptic : las, Berber : *les. These few examples are not surprising. The Chadic connection is detectable in the Egyptian language. The grammatical and lexicographic affinities of the spongy Egyptian vehicular with Chadic is well-known (Diakonoff,1998; Takacs,1999). Its earlier ancestor could be located in the south of Upper Egypt (Diakonoff, 1998) or, earlier, in the Sahara (Wendorf, 2004), where Takacs suggests to place a long co-existence of the ancestors of Egyptians, Chadics, and Nilo-Saharans (Takacs, 1999,47). This short vocabulary of the mind shared by the ancestors of Chadic-speakers (therefore also Cushitic-speakers) , Nilotic-speakers and Egyptian-speakers suggests further northern borderlines of their homeland than the Wadi Howar proposed by Blench as a matter of fact, its southern borderline (map 2). Pushed out of the eastern Sahara by desertification, some of these ancestors of Chadic-speakers people spread southwards to Ennedi by the Wadi Howar, and the west, or to the east, to Sudanese and Ethiopian regions. Some stayed in actual Oasis, or joined their inhabitants. Others moved towards the Nile from a large range of saharo-nubian areas, reaching Nekhen or Abydos.

These linguistic data, as the archaeological facts, are concordant with the first sets of genetic findings :

On the one hand, in Upper Egypt, the Gurna population has conserved the trace of an ancestral genetic structure from an ancestral East African population, characterized by a high M1 haplogroup frequency. The current structure of the Egyptian population may be the result of further influence of neighbouring populations on this ancestral population

(Stevanovitch A, Gilles A, Bouzaid E, Kefi R, Paris F, Gayraud RP, Spadoni JL, El-Chenawi F, Bernald-Colomb E. Mitochondrial DNA sequence diversity in a sedentary population from Egypt. Ann Hum Genet. 2004 68: 23-39)<sup>6</sup>.

On the other hand, the Chadic branch is linguistically close to the East African Cushitic branch (of Afro-Asiatic) although they are separated by 2000 km of territory with different Semitic and Nilo-Saharan peoples live today.

HE MyK IN A NUTSHELL. Posted by uwagboe ogieva at 11:00 AM on September 16,

By Naiwu Osahon

Now Diaspora Africans have uniform culture, traditions and spirituality with continental Africans.

Religion is perhaps the most potent binding force there is. In fact, there is no other binding force as potent and total. It encompasses a peoples outlook, traditions, culture and philosophy of life. The food we eat and how we prepare it, our manner of dressing, the names we bear, the way we speak or rear our children and our attitude to life generally are controlled by our religions. But because of public persecution and the mental and psychological damage we have suffered as a result of slavery and colonialism, we are ashamed to flaunt what is ours. We hide our native essence behind the popular alien ones.

Every conquering religion claims superiority over those before it and that life began with its advent. Without destroying what is on the ground there is no space for the new religion to begin to breathe and expand. After 2,000 years of Christianity and 1,500 years of Islam, they remain the minority religions of the world compared with their older spiritual movements in Asia and China. Christianity and Islam draw a significant chunk of their membership from conquered people, especially from Blacks. So, they are religions of coercion rather than of freewill, and that makes them even more irrelevant and less spiritual.

We as a group, are the most bastardized of people on earth by foreign religions and ideas. Our masters baby religions take away our human essence, values, and worth, by insisting that our native attributes are evil, primitive, and irrelevant. If we marry in our traditional way, it is barbaric and uncivilized. Our burial rites are savage and ungodly.

Our history began with our enslavement and colonization, and our IQ is lower than that of the Chimpanzee. So we openly throw away our African traditions to aspire to the benefits of our masters superior ways of life. We bleach, hot-comb our hair, answer our oppressors names, and aspire to speak, think, and dress like them.

Now we are neither White nor Black. If anything, we are half Arab or White and half Black, and we are confused because we cannot progress as a people until we decide who we want to be. And if we choose to become fully Arab or Caucasian, are we acceptable to them?

We cannot pull ourselves out of our pains through foreign religions that disrespect our humanity, contributions, and largely treat us as lower than wild animals. To move up, we must demolish what is holding us down. That is why the truth about spirituality is being exposed now and through Africa, the cradle from where life began.

For every race or group of people, there must be a messenger or diviner. Every race or group of people must have a guide, a spiritual rallying point, a center of gravity that holds its children together before it can begin to impact on the world's civilization. Buddha was there for the Indians, Moses for the Jews, Confucius for the Chinese, Christ in myth for the Caucasians, and Mohammed for the Arabs. Claiming that these religious leaders were Africans does not make the religions they carefully tailored for other cultures and traditions relevant to Africans.

One uniform body of spirituality must be introduced throughout the African world and installed at the national level of every Black and African State to replace secularism and foreign religions. We as a people desperately need a common spirituality, a code of ethics and discipline now. Unfortunately, our ancestors' belief systems were usurped, doctored, and cannibalized by other racial groups to suppress and enslave us en-mass. We must re-claim and re-Africanize our long lost, or hidden from us spiritual body of ideas, to suit our purpose and empower and fruitfully propel our collective dreams.

To arrive at a common spiritual platform, we have welded together a microcosm of African spiritual systems, with the Mystery System, which is totally African and the mother of all the religions of the world, as the base. We called what we arrived at, Mhuri ye Kutanga (Myk), or (The Cradle family), meaning the first, the original, because we were the only race on earth at the dawn of human history. The Myk is an open, friendly, cosmology, founded on respect for observable truth and logic. The deity of the supreme cosmology is honesty and truth. Anyone who can achieve this state of being, deserves to be, and is, in fact, a god in partnership with other gods in the affairs of humanity.

The ultimate human saint is the virtuous soul without the compelling fear of hell. The perfect master and examples abound, Buddha, Confucius, Fuhi, and the Dalai Lama to name a few.

Ifa tells us that:

Honest people in the world

are less than 20

fraudulent ones are more than 1200

but the day of reckoning

is not for ever,

that makes the pain bearable.

What this verse means is that no more than a few people have achieved the supreme state of honesty and truth in the world but we are determined to push the frontiers to accommodate the entire African race. Honesty and truth are the other names for science, and Teilhard de Chardin, in Mans place in Nature ? Collins 1966, tells us that the religion of tomorrow would be a beautiful thing and would put its trust in science. The Myth is that cosmology of tomorrow, today, from yesterday.

This Ifa verse captures our pre-occupation with honesty and truth:

I do good always

I am honest and do no evil

neither do I harbour evil thoughts

lest I die wretched

because whatever habits

are inculcated early in life

persists till old age.

The obstacles to maintaining the state of moral piety are recognized in the following Ifa verse:

Let us view it from the front

let us view it from the rear

a straight road has no curve

these are the aliases of the

Ifa priests that divined

for the Big lie.

The Big lie was descending

from heaven to earth

(how to survive and flourish on earth

was what the Big lie requested at divination)

The Big lie was asked to perform sacrifices

it did

the Big lie came to earth

all attempts to eliminate the Big lie failed.

The Big lie also became a Historian.

In other words, the Big lie has also made the ultimate sacrifices to exist and survive on earth compounding the free will of humans. Unfortunately, the veracity of lie is that:

When you tell a lie

you need seven other lies

to sustain that lie.

The African people of the world must gradually lead the world back to its original glorious path of virtuous civilization terminated abruptly some two thousand five hundred years ago by Yahweh, and two thousand years ago by the West taking their cue from Yahweh. We must return to Anu. We must bring back the Ausarian (coined from Ausar) spirituality and principle of world development, which is the original and ultimate form of civilization. This is democracy based on the tripod principles of African communalism, with the Myk as the binding force, under the protective authority of the Almighty Tu-SoS, the One Source, the Uncreated Creator, the Boundless.

One of the oldest Ifa verses says:

A heavy rainfall is imminent

the river will soon be at high tide

everybody is heading home

elders of a foreign religion

contemplate the new development

they discover it is not favourable to them

they shave their heads and let their mustache and beard grow in mourning
These are the aliases of the Ifa priests
that divined for the Cradle
which is the Godhead of all the Gods?
the father is the Cradle
the mother is the Cradle
the personal intellect is the Cradle
the sacred worship is the Cradle
the Cradle is the first before deified humans.

All African dominated governments of the world are to adopt the Ausarian concept of government. Political parties based on the Ausarian concept are to be formed to take over their national governments from their current Setian (coined from Set or Seth or Satan), control. All Africans, must stop serving the usurping extraterrestrial deity that has declared war on them and return to Anu, and through Anu to Tu-SoS, the One and only Source of Spirituality, for their salvation.

Within a sea of evil, an oasis of good can be created that can steadily grow in concentric circles to eventually and totally overwhelm the evil. The speed at which the concentric circles grow would depend on the dedication of members and the strength of their spirituality. It might make slow progress initially because of possible opposition from the oppressive status quo. It will eventually develop its own momentum and speed that cannot be reversed by anyone from within or without.

We are Africans and we are Pagans as they call us and we are back. Whether in Africa or the Diaspora, we are a special breed of people. Our Pagan ancestors created all the religious myths that rule the world today. They pioneered civilization and we are proud of them all. The blood of Ausar, Auset, Imhotep, Chaka, Nzingha, Nehenda, Prempeh, Toure, Hannibal, Lovers, Truth, Douglas, Shadd, Tubman, Kuzwayo, Marcus Garvey, DuBois, Azikiwe, Nkrumah, Kenyatta, C.L.R. James, Padmore, Albertina, Martin Luther King, Malcolm X and Mandela runs in our veins.

The generic name for what the world calls Paganism, or African traditional religions, or faiths, from now on is: Mhuri ye Kutanga: a Cosmology or System. Mhuri ye Kutanga, abbreviated as Myk, are Shona, Zimbabwe, words for the Cradle family. Myk or Paganism, spelt with the capital letter P, means the ground, the source, the origin, the first, the foundation, of all cosmologies, all religions and all spiritualities. Mhuri ye Kutanga in Yoruba dialect is Egbe Iwase. Every Yoruba person is, therefore, Omo elebi Iwase. All African dialects with words for Mhuri ye Kutanga could use their words to describe their spirituality.

The Myk is one of the largest spiritual groups in the world and, of course, the most vibrant and potent. It began to spread around the world with the shipment of the first slaves from Africa in 1510 CE. The areas that provided the greatest number of slaves were the Senegal River basin, the Guinea Coast including Gold Coast and Dahomey, and the Niger Delta or the Bight of Benin. Towards the end of the trade, several cargoes of slaves were shipped from the mouth and central regions of the Congo. Diaspora Africans are the proudest adherents of the ancient African religions in the world. They are in their millions in Antigua, Barbados, Brazil, Cuba, Dominica, Dutch Guiana, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, St. Kitts, St. Lucia, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, North America, Britain, France, Portugal, and so on.

The Maroons are particularly unique religious communities in the Diaspora, enjoying a relationship with host countries like Jamaica, that almost rivals that of the Vatican with Italy. The Maroons do not pay taxes to Jamaica and they hold their own courts. They are members of the Myk. Rastafarianism, which has been growing in leaps and bounds around the world, is a vibrant African spiritual veneer and a member of the Myk. Godianism and all the other lively modern variants of African spirituality belong to the Myk.

Diaspora Africans call their spiritual faiths names such as: Whydah, Fantee, Eboe, Voodoo, Ketu, Orishe, Oyo, Gege, Egba, Jesha, which generally signify the communities the slaves originated from in Africa. The Catholic Churches in many South American Black communities have blended with the African faiths by adopting and matching African Gods with theirs. For example, there are three Eshus as follows: St. Peter who is the elder, St. Anthony the younger and St George who is the third Eshu.

Ogun also has three variations as follows: (Olira, Meji, Medye). Oya or Iyansan is St. Barbara. Aganju or Shango the younger is St. Michael the Archangel, Ogodo or Shango the elder is St. Jerome and Shango Dada is St. John. Ode is St. Onofre, Oshun Panda is Nossa Senbora de Concelcao and Oshun Doko is Our lady of the Rosary. Beji is Sts. Comas and Damien, Orunmila is St. Joseph and Yemoja is the Holy Ghost (or Divino Espirito Santo). Olofin is the equivalent of Olodumare in Poro Alegre, for instance, and is described as the father of all. Olofin is a being who lives in the spheres and has no initiates. He is the true God and does not concern himself with man.

Divination to foretell the dictates of fate and reveal the wishes of the Gods, in the Diaspora, like in Africa, entails: (1) the throwing of the kpele or chain of shells. (2) The throwing of cowry shells and (3) water gazing. Diaspora Africans largely use their spiritual powers for self-survival and enhancement. The Yoruba segment of African faiths is widespread in the Diaspora with thousands of white adherents, including in the USA. There are several white priests of the African faiths too. A great deal of university research work on African spirituality has amassed world wide.

The hush-hush about African spirituality happens only on the African continent, (except in Benin Republic), and this is because of the hypocrisy of African leaders who worship alien Gods in daylight and African Gods at night. When Oba Onirun of Irun Akoko in Ondo State, Nigeria, claimed in an interview published in the Saturday Sun of 22 March, 2003, to have converted the Ooni of Ife to the Christian faith, the Onirun exposed his fakeness and ignorance. African traditional stools derive their reverence, relevance and authority, primarily from traditional African faiths.

What most Africans do not know is that the Ooni of Ife is the equivalent of the Catholic Pope, in the worlds Orisha Movement. Millions of Orisha followers from Brazil to Cuba, Trinidad, Guyana, Aruba, Jamaica, etc., regard the Ooni as a God. A few years ago, during the Ifa by-yearly carnival in Brazil, (attended by thousands of people from around the world), which the Ooni attends religiously as the head, he was told of the drought in the area. The Ooni, who normally would not remove his cap in public, removed it briefly, and assured his subjects that there would be rain shortly. Before the entourage got to the venue of the ceremony, heavy rain descended on the community.

Yoruba Gods include Shango for thunder, Olokun for water and fertility, Eshu for devil, Obatala the creator and framer of the human body in the womb, Yemoja queen of the water, Egungun masquerade and messenger, Oshun for water, Ogun for iron, Shopono for smallpox curse. Obaluaye and Oro are messengers. Orunmila is wisdom, messenger and the complimentary title for Ifa. Heaven knows who shall be saved and Ifa gets its message from Orunmila. Olodunare in Yoruba mythology is the Almighty Tu-SoS, whose sixteen ministers serve as intermediaries between Tu-SoS and mortals, because (Tu-SoS), Olodumare, is too great and remote. The ministers include Orunmila, Obatala, Ogun, and Shango (Jakuta), just like the attributes of the Sefiroth of the Jews.

All African Gods have been assigned a number of creative projects to supervise and nurture to success by the Myk. For example, Olokun is the Goddess of beauty, arts, culture, poetry, love, marriage, femininity and fertility. Orunmila is the God of wisdom, scholarship and education. Obatala is the God of creativity. Shango is the God of lightening, masculinity, fearlessness and hard work. Ogun is the God of Iron and technology.

A one-week long Festival of the Gods would take place annually in honour of the relevant African Gods at the Menephtheion, to bring together the leading artistes, scholars and entrepreneurs (Black and white), from around the world in the following disciplines:

? Fashion/Cosmetics/ Hairdressing and styles

? Painting/Sculpting/ Crafts

? Poetry/Writing

? Film/Theatre/ Video

? Music

? Dance/Comedy

? Spiritual (incorporating the annual pilgrimage)

The Menephtheion (meaning): the mind of the African world, co-ordinates the thinking, focus and actions of the entire Black race. The Menephtheion is the international headquarters of the Pan African Movement and the spiritual heartbeat of the African race. The Menephtheion, in fact, is to the Black world, what the Vatican is to the Roman Catholic Church. It is the seat of all the African Gods in homage to Tu-SoS.

All the leading thinkers of the African race, in or out of the citadels of learning are entitled to apply to come on board of Muses through self and or third party recommendations and nominations. Send your resume and previously (published or not) original piece of writing or research work in any field of knowledge, aimed at solving any of our problems uniquely, and moving us forward collectively as a race.

The board of Muses of the African race meets once a year to review the Black Agenda and scrupulously vet applications received and those admitted into the board are honoured at a special annual ceremony and become entitled to use the title: Muse of the Menephtheion or the Muse before or after name or mm. letters as qualification) and to participate at the Congress of Muses of the African race.

Myk welds all African spiritual movements, (Edo, Igbo, Zulu, Yoruba, Ashanti, Shona, Gelede etc) together for the first time as the Myk, using our ancient Mystery System of Egypt as the heart. The Myk is, in fact, the ultimate cosmology of the world, humans highest level of science, and the repository of comprehensive knowledge of the cosmos and, therefore, of humanity and creation. The Myk is preoccupied with truth, justice, scholarship and honesty. It is the microcosm of the best of the entire African spiritual firmament and its unifying deity is science and verifiable logic. In other words, members worship intellect and scholarship. Our one and final source of spiritual energy is TUSOS, written as Tu-SoS (meaning The Ultimate or Universal or Unlimited Source of Spirituality) , and known to Africans variously as Olodumare, Osanobua, Chukwu, and does not call for or require worship, and is not worshipped anywhere in the world.

Our focus is to raise members self-help efforts to an art through individual involvement, intellect and unity. Our ambition is individual membership involvement and material and spiritual success. Our message is that no individual is alone; we are who we are because we are members of a family, community, society and race. There is no conceited economic baron or leader among us. No competition between members, only love and sharing of our pains and fortunes collectively and honestly.

We love our ancestors because they gave us life. Our one name for our ancestors is Ausar. We love humanity because we are all from the same womb. Working patiently and assiduously, we hope to use our collective goodwill, abundant physical energy, enthusiasm for hard work, our widows mite and love of goodness and truth to build a fortress of virtue and success. This in time would be a magnet on its own to install the ultimate New World Order of virtuous civilization.

The Myk is not interested in the idle activities of waiting for the return of a Messiah or praying endlessly, which both imply attempts to avoid direct responsibility for one's actions and self. It is strong on self-empowerment, enlightenment, enrichment, invocation, and the organization of often latent energy to enable the individual excel. It is not fetish but rational, philosophical, pragmatic, and is uncluttered with senseless restrictions. It is lively and boisterous in celebration of the purest essence of life. It is the binding cosmology of our race, and it is not negotiable because before we became Christians or Muslims etc, we were Black and African, and the Myk represents this peculiar essence in all of us. It represents our souls as a unique people.

There is a physical and a spiritual nature to man. What tends to happen in real life is that we concentrate all our energies on fulfilling our physical to the detriment of our spiritual needs. In our quests for survival, we crave very hard for material things until such become insatiable and yet our lives remain dodged by all sorts of fear. The fear of losing our properties, loved ones and of dying so soon our selves. We have material comfort and still we remain unfulfilled. Most religions (including Christianity and Islam), insist that we give up material quest for spiritual peace to reign. Even then, pains have refused to abate in the world.

African spirituality believes that we can keep our wealth and be free from fear at the same time. That our spiritual and physical nature can be synchronized. That the synchronization requires conscious individual rather than group efforts that demand unforced, clean, virtuous and wholesome spirit, fasting and healthy eating regime, abstinence from injurious, life-threatening habits, and strong devotion to individual meditation. There is nothing mysterious about this. You must be a good person at heart and in spirit. You must eat well and fast now and again.

You must meditate at a given time daily by yourself and you must work very hard at your career or profession. And if you follow our rather simple spiritual regime under close supervision of one of our seers, you would in no time lose all your fears and as you grow in the Myk spirituality you would begin to acquire the power of the Gods and a significant measure of control over your material and spiritual destiny. When one is called a member of the Myk, it means the person is holistically focused and is a strong pillar of strength in society. A Myk member is mentally stable and reliable, morally disciplined and upright, and is invariably a great family person. The Myk member is a lover of knowledge and an avid reader. Nothing is taboo to read to expand the members mind and spiritual horizon. Like kabbalism, the Myk is a tightly knit family group, influential and directly or indirectly controlling a good chunk of local resources by virtue of hard work. Myk members, therefore, love hard work and hate being idle. They believe nothing comes easy so they put in everything they have, energy, brains and resources to excel.

Members meeting place is called the Nwanzo or Myk or Cradle (or any other appropriate name in native dialect for the Cradle), just as the Church is to Christians. Members gather at the Nwanzo on a Sunday (the ancient African feast day), in a boisterous, lively, social gathering and co-operative society-like atmosphere. Nwanzo branches can add peculiar local flair and embellishments to their merry-making to capture strong community ethos. The gathering is called AFEFE (meaning the wind that soothes and caresses), and is laced with happy revelry, suffused with drumming, singing and dancing.

A major event of the day is a lecture by a special guest of honour who may or may not be a member of the Myk but who is knowledgeable, or an expert in his field of lecture. The opportunity is used to invite scholars, important people in the community, government, or commerce, to educate the Myk members on the latest issues and debates as they affect their well-being. Every lecture must leave the audience better informed and grateful for attending. A short question and answer session is encouraged after the speakers presentation.

After the lecture session, the congregation transforms into Mjane Msaada community empowerment parliament to set up projects, make levies, assign jobs and receive reports, on what have been accomplished. Mjane Msaada requires every member of the Myk branch to contribute an agreed levy weekly, (could be fifty, or a hundred or more units of the local currency), into a pool called Mjane Msaada, which the Myk branch builds up to finance projects. Members contributions are compulsory. So, why pay tithes, thanksgiving, etc., to enrich Priests and Alfas, when you could invest all that money in yourself in the Myk?

A well run Myk is expected to become a successful, efficient and highly respected hub of social, spiritual, cultural, political, intellectual and economic activities in its community within a short time. Three to five years at the most, buying up manufacturing companies, large farms, housing estates for members, office complexes to let, schools, investing in the stock exchange etc., and turning members into millionaires and business tycoons. Members are entitled to receive priority employment advantage in their Myk businesses as long as the applicants are qualified for the jobs.

Every race has her spiritual base. The Caucasians, Rome and Jerusalem; Arabs, Mecca, and are making millions of dollars from thousands of Africans spiritual tourists and pilgrims yearly.

African Spiritual Summit and Pilgrimage, ASSAP, is an annual event, and takes off on Ausers birthday of 25th December of every year. The first ASSAP is planned for 2010 in Nigeria. ASSAP brings together all the spiritual tendencies and movements of the African race in celebration of the mother spirituality of the world, our oneness and triumph as a people, and to pay homage to our illustrious ancestors. ASSAP celebrates the family unity of all the children of Africa, from Cuba, Jamaica, Antigua, Barbados, Brazil, Guyana, Zimbabwe, Europe, USA, Australia, Ghana, South Africa, Nigeria etc. ASSAP is to the African race, what the annual pilgrimage to Mecca is to the Arabs, or to Jerusalem is to the Christians.

With the coming on stream of the African Union (AU), the political sting of the irregular Pan African Congresses of the Pan African Movement has now become largely cosmetic. ASSAP replaces the Pan African Congresses from the 8th Congress, to provide the spiritual anchor and propelling force for Black unity and ascendance. All future Pan-African Congresses would be known as ASSAP, or the Pagans pilgrimage. The African Union (AU), despite its constitutional and operational weaknesses, has considerably diluted the political importance of the Pan-African Congresses and almost rendered them irrelevant. ASSAP would concentrate on the areas of comparative advantage, which is spiritual, and through moral persuasion, discipline and scholarship, maintain a vibrant lobby on the AU, to ensure comprehensive, fused, and focused, self-fulfilment, advancement, and ascendance, of the entire African race. The African Union (AU) is to be lobbied, to be strengthened, to take care of the political aspirations of the entire Black race, while the Pan-African Movement, known now too as the African Peoples Union (APU), concentrates on the spiritual through the Myk.

Every Black person in the world, every Myk member must perform ASSAP the Pagans pilgrimage, at least, once in a lifetime. The seven-day long pilgrimage, involves meetings of leaders on 25 and 26 December. The Pagans revelry is from December 27-31 incorporating ceremonies, cultural events, exhibitions, seminars, spiritual home coming rituals, offers of reverences, and a mammoth carnival procession of African Gods as never before witnessed in the world. Each pilgrim ritually slaughters a goat to the spirits of our ancestors during the pilgrimage week. Every male who has performed the pilgrimage is entitled to use the title Azah (or Azahaaze in full) before name. Female counterparts use the title: Azinii (or Aziniida in full) before name. Both titles mean spiritually cleansed. ASSAP is expected to grow into one of the biggest, liveliest, spiritually fulfilling, most attractive cultural, intellectual, commercial and tourists events and destinations in the world.

Calabar or Badagry in Nigeria would serve as the dream venue and permanent site for the annual African Pilgrimage experience. Calabar has a vibrant spiritual culture and strong physical memory. It was a major seaport for slavery, providing access to slaves from the interior of Africa. In fact, 27% of all African slaves went through the Calabar port, whereas Ghana, Senegal and the Gambia combined, had only 10%.

Several cities and a combination of venues are being developed as additional pilgrimage points inside or outside the Calabar experience in Nigeria and include: the Ogun shrine, the Yemoja festival in Oshogbo and the Oro festival in Ogun state. The Igwe festival in Benin City and the Sukur kingdom mountain in Maiduguri. The Kerengwa water falls in Nasarawa with its therapeutic health benefits. Nasarawa also provides the opportunity to visit the God of the Sun at home.

If you are Black, regardless of where you may be living in the world right now, you are an African and a Pagan because Paganism means the cradle, the origin, the first, and the first is the best in any language. Reformed Paganism is the leading spirituality of the world. It makes things happen. It commands and controls the elements. It is pre-occupied with the collective triumph of the human race. Join us and let us spoil you with love, caring and brotherhood as only the African knows how. We invite you, we invite all Black people of the world, all Africans of goodwill, all artistes, scholars, entrepreneurs and custodians of African spiritual faiths, cultures and traditions, to come and celebrate excellence in spirituality with us.

If you are African and Black join the potentially one billion members strong Pagans revolt. We are taking back our leadership of the world from where our ancestors were pushed off inelegantly some 2000 years ago.

We were privileged to host Mr. Steven Oundo, Chairman Architectural Association of Kenya and Mr, Juma Assiagio, Human Settlements Officer :

Habitat at KCDN today 26th September 2009. They were accompanied by Mr. Reginald Okumu, former Chairman Institution of the Surveyors of Kenya, Mr. Dismas Mokua, of Tribe Kenya Initiative, Violet and Mr. Boniface Juma from Lumumba.

The team then went to the Komarock Canal and Mr Oundo, Mr Assiago, Violet and Mr. Juma planted trees in support of the ongoing Environmental Campaign.

With the technical support from Mr. Oundo and Mr. Assiago, our dream of creating an Arboretum in partnership with Total Kenya Ltd [Eco Challenge] and the City Council of Nairobi will come to fruition. It is our belief that such partnerships between the people, corporates and Government is the way to go to enable us achieve Vision 2030.

During the ceremony, Mr. Assiago gave our team on site Kshs 1,000.00 to quench their thirst. As we thank Mr. Assiago, we invite more people of goodwill to step forward and help support this team. We need water, equipment and financial motivation to keep this initiative be on track.

We are also happy to report that Mr. Eric Jangolo, a Friend of KCDN offered us one spade today in the morning. Many thanks to him.

Lastly, we are again meeting at the Canal on 3rd October to clean the second section in memory of Emmanuel Aguer Ater, the Sudanese boy whose body was dumped there. Let us all join in the move; From Talking to Tasking.

Peace and blessings,

Interesting read - I'm sure they have not stopped to think - perhaps the only reason she is so talented IS because she is half African American??? China? NO THANKS... They love some BLACK athletes though...

Can a mixed-race contestant become Chinese Idol?

Print

By SIMON ELEGANT AND CHENGCHENG JIANG Simon Elegant And Chengcheng Jiang 2hrs44minsago

In many ways, Lou Jing is a typical young Shanghainese woman. Pretty and confident, she speaks Mandarin heavily accented with the lilting tones of the Shanghai dialect and browses the malls of this huge city for the latest fashions.

But there is one thing that distinguishes this 20-year-old from her peers, something that has made her the unwitting focus of an intense public debate about what exactly it means to be Chinese: the color of her skin. Born to a Chinese mother and an African-American father whom she has never met, the theater student rocketed into the public consciousness last month when she took part in an American Idol-esque TV show, "Go! Oriental Angel." \(See pictures of modern Shanghai.\)

The marketing gurus for the series could hardly have dreamed of a better promotional gimmick when they started to investigate the backgrounds of the dozens of pop star wannabes to root out the competitors' mushy stories of triumph over adversity that are a well-worn staple of the genre. Here was a tale guaranteed to attract eyeballs - a girl of mixed race brought up by a single Chinese mother struggling to gain acceptance in a deeply conservative, some would say racist, society.

The strategy worked - perhaps too well. In August, Lou's appearance on the show not only boosted viewer numbers, but sparked an intense nationwide debate about the essential meaning of being "Chinese." Over the last month on Internet chat rooms, where modern China's sensitive issues are thrashed out by netizens long before they reach the heavily censored mainstream media, Lou's ethnicity has been the subject of a relentless barrage of criticism, some of it crudely racist. They think she should not have been allowed to compete on a Chinese show, or at least not to be selected to represent Shanghai in the national competition. She doesn't have fair skin, which is one of the most important factors for Chinese beauty. What's more, her mother and her biological father were never married. Morally, this kind of behavior shouldn't be publicized, so she shouldn't have been put on TV as a young "idol."

These kinds of posts on the most popular chat rooms have attracted thousands of comments. A few have been supportive of Lou, but the rest range from expressions of fear and ignorance to outright racism. One of the most popular posts about Lou Jing on the KDS Life forum asks in mock-seriousness: "Is it possible that she is Obama's daughter?" Another poster said: "I can't believe she's so shameless that she would go on TV." Most of the critics are agreed on one point - that this black woman cannot be regarded as a "real" Chinese.

As recently as the 1970s, foreigners were largely barred from living in China, let alone marrying a local. China does not easily accept mixed race children as "true-blooded" Chinese: As soon as a child is born, Chinese parents are required to register with the authorities as to which of the 56 government-approved ethnic groups their child belongs; there are no mixed-race categories. For her part, Lou feels she is very much Chinese. "When I meet somebody for the first time, they'd often ask me how I can speak Chinese so well, and I tell them 'Because I'm a Chinese, of course I can speak my mother-tongue well.'" Lou says defiantly. "I don't like to be treated differently. "

As China undergoes an astonishing demographic shift and more foreigners make their homes in the Middle Kingdom, Lou is by no means the only one being treated differently. Recent decades have seen a surge in the number of mixed-race couples. According to the data offered by Shanghai Civil Affairs Bureau, from 1994 to 2008, each year, there are about 3,000 more mixed race marriages in Shanghai. But as the children of that first generation of mixed-race marriages now come of age, their moves to gain acceptance in society - like Lou's participation in the TV show - have exposed a deep-running vein of xenophobia in Chinese society. Last year, Ding Hui, a young man of African-Chinese ethnicity, caused a stir when he was called up to the national volleyball team, prompting much soul-searching about whether this athlete should be allowed to represent China alongside other 'pure-blooded' Chinese competitors. Eventually, Ding Hui did go on to play in the national team.

"As China continues to open up, this kind of phenomenon will become ever more prevalent," says David Zweig, a professor of Humanities & Social Sciences at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. "This is part of the process of internationalization, but we can only hope that Chinese people, including netizens and the people whose views tend towards extremism, can come to accept that there are many mixed-race people both in China and worldwide."

As for Lou, she found the whole experience more than a little disturbing. She did well in the show, ranking in the top 30 contestants before she was eliminated. Now she's back to her normal life as a college junior - with a little new insight into her home. "Through this competition, it's really scary to find out how the color of my skin can cause such a big controversy. "
